"Grand Street Follies" Final Bill of the Neighborhood Playhouse

The fifth edition of the Grand Street Follies will meet with the approval of those small bourgeois elements who get a kick out of a burlesque of their own foibles and who satisfy their own inferiority complexes (to use the stupid language of psychoanalysis) by laughing at the ridiculous antics of their kind. It is a Menckenesque concoction.

The second incident is a slam at the police-censorship of the New York stage that resulted in Mae West doing a stretch in prison for producing a play called "Sex." There are a number of he-virgins furnishing a background for the ladies who have been guilty of appearing in prohibited shows, all doing time on Blackwell's Island.

Mr. Albert Carroll, one of the old favorites of the Neighborhood Playhouse, situated on East Grand, gives remarkable impersonations of Mrs. Fiske and Ethel Barrymore, which serves to remind one of how masculine are the voices of these two Broadway favorites.

Most amusing was the skit involving "Cautious Cal," president of the U. S. A., and "Nervous Nellie," secretary of home and foreign affairs. A person properly insignificant was chosen to portray Cal and he did a good job of it.

But the part dealing with the "origin of the black bottom" fell flat. Certainly the directors of the thing ought to get something to substitute for it.

All in all it is a good evening's entertainment for those who enjoy seeing the serious antics of the Broadway barnstormers made ridiculous, and some of the acting is better than that of those they imitate.

"Stock" Ownership New Stunt of Taxi Bosses In Chicago

(By a Worker Correspondent).

CHICAGO, May 23.—The following advertisement recently appeared in the Chicago Tribune: "Yellow Cab helps employees to own stock—Why? Employes who own stock in the corporation they work for, will do better and more conscientious work than if their interest is limited to the salary they draw. It makes the men careful of the property they handle, careful of the safety of the people they haul, and eager to cement the public's good will."

This notorious anti-union outfit, however, does not seem to believe that union wages and conditions might also help to insure the safety of the passengers and help maintain the "good will of the public."

Fights Union Members.

Strenuous efforts are now made to see that no one becomes an employe who has any personal or even hereditary taint of unionism and it is then expected that by holding up before the men the bright prospect of becoming a "stockholder" in the company and by keeping the attention of the men upon the market quotations of the stock they own instead of upon their own conditions as workers, that unionism will be indefinitely kept outside the Yellow boundary line.

The Yellow Truck and Coach Co., established by the Yellow Cab Interests, and now understood to be controlled by the General Motors, resorts to the same scheme of selling stock to their employes.

The cab company looks upon employe ownership of stocks as a means of securing "better and more conscientious work" from the men. The Truck and Coach as a manufacturing concern has of course other means of gaining this end, such as piece work schemes.

Establish "Gang System."

It tried out individual piece work with its usual good results in the line of production and profits, but seeing that some of the piece-workers were able to make the outrageous wage of $7. or $8 for a 9 hour day, the celebrated "gang system" is now being tried out with results so far reported as highly encouraging, wages going down to an average of 55 to 65 cents per hour.

The "gang system" works on the principle of giving a whole gang in a given section of the work a certain piece rate and then dividing the total gang earnings among the members of the gang. One advantage is that the men in the gang the more each gets, so the men are induced to speed up, keep the gang small, and thus make more—until the rate is cut.

What Passaic Faces

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK.

The end of the election campaign in Passaic means the beginning of a new period for the workers of that city. With comparative quietness now prevailing the workers must prepare for future struggles. Exactly what form they will take is not quite clear at the present moment.

During the period of the campaign the workers' movement was not molested to a large extent, altho the forces of reaction on several occasions tried to stampede the campaign rallies of the labor candidates for city commissioner. The reason that the meetings where not stopped altogether difficult to guess when one takes into consideration several factors.

Next Tasks.

Firstly, the local administration had discredited itself enough during the textile strike and secondly while the labor candidates were a menace to the prepared calculations of the bosses fear of them being elected was not manifested.

What will happen now and the next task before the workers of that city should be taken up.

Recently James Starr, a vice-president of the United Textile Workers who was sent to Passaic by that union when the textile strikers were admitted into the American Federation of Labor, made a statement of great importance. He stated that a house cleaning in the Passaic local of the textile union would soon be started. Apparently this was a threat to the progressive thinking members of the union to view all questions from the standard and accepted A. F. of L. point of view.

Warning No Accident.

It is no accident that Starr, personal representative of Thomas McMahon, president of the textile union should give a warning to the union members. If the textile workers are activised with a militant leadership is menace to two fields of the reactionary forces. It forms a base for a strong progressive movement in the entire United Textile Workers' Union and at the same time forms a rallying ground for the forward looking elements in the Passaic labor movement.

Meet With Disfavor.

Neither of the two above mentioned endeavors meet with great favor with the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, so undoubtedly they will do all within their power to stop it before it gains strength and develops. Starr's speech is a prologue and warning of what the progressive forces can expect to face in the coming months.

Exactly when the words of Starr will be turned into deeds is not known at this writing, but whenever attempted, will meet the vigorous opposition of the union members.

The progressive and left wing forces of Passaic have so far been a source of inspiration to the workers throughout the land and no one will doubt that they will handle their future problems in just as decisive manner.

Bright Future.

The future of the Passaic labor movement is large. So far it has two great achievements on its ledger. A strike of 14 months' duration with bitter struggle and victory resulting in the bringing of thousands of workers into the A. F. of L. even though that organization was none too anxious to receive them.

The recent election campaign was the second. Opposed by the capitalist forces and the local labor "leaders" who had indorsed "good men" the Communists and the left wing carried out a successful election campaign under the most difficult circumstances. When the votes were counted it was found that one out of every 17 voters cast their ballots for the labor candidates who were running on a Communist program.

What the next step will be and who will take it, is not known now, but one thing is certain. Whatever it is and no matter what it involves it will find the workers ready to face it.

Form Organization Of Latin-Americans To Tell Their Case

Spurred by the latest occurrences in Nicaragua a meeting was held in the building of the Porto Rican Hispanic League by representatives of most of the Latin-American societies organized in this city.

At this meeting it was decided to form a new society which will consist of representatives or all of the associations already existing, the society to be called the Federation Nacionalista Latino-Americana (Nationalist Federation of Latin-American Societies).

A committee was elected consisting of Vicente Saenz, Costa Rican newspaperman, statesman and author, Horace G. Knowles, former minister of the U. S. to several Latin-American countries, J. R. Hernadorn, Nicaraguan physician, Ricardo A. Martinez, vice-president of Venezuelan Labor Union, J. M. Bajaram, Mexican writer and lecturer, J. C. Valle of Honduras, Ricardo Irigoyin, of Argentine, Pedro San Miguil, secretary of the Porto Rican League and A. Darlis, Venezuelan student.

The primary functions of the new society will be to find ways and means of arousing the American people to the political implications that will continue to grow, if the present policy of interference in Latin-America continues.

A mass meeting is being arranged, to initiate the activities of the society, in which prominent American and Latin-American speakers will present the true facts of the present situation.

HELPERS OUT AS BOSS PLUMBERS' LOCKOUT FAILS

Plumbers helpers have served notice on plumber bosses in Manhattan and the Bronx that they would continue their strike for the five-day week and the recognition of the union despite the collapse of the lockout against the plumbers.

Astonished by the rank and file rebellion in Plumbers' Local 1 against the arbitration demands foisted upon it by the bosses and the international union, the Building Trades Employers' Association called off the lockout yesterday. Using the excuse of a week old injunction which previously they had ignored, the master plumbers opened their jobs and asked the journeymen to return to work.

In the meantime international officials had hastily deserted the city, the association board members scattering to all parts of the country while President Coefield and Secretary Burke retreated in the direction of union headquarters in Chicago.

Brooklyn Plumbers' Local 1 continues its strike for the five-day week and the $14 scale, determined to stay out all spring, if need be. That victory is probable is seen in the collapse of the Building Employers' front. Their adamant stand against any further wage increases for any building crafts was crumbling under the solidarity and militancy of the Brooklyn strikers.

The Plumbers Progressive Group of Greater New York issued a statement yesterday which commanded wide attention in building trades circles. It reads:

The plumbers of Greater New York must learn a lesson from the struggle that is now going on in the industry. The bosses are threatening to man the Brooklyn, the Bronx and Queens jobs. They do this because they have not only the saport of the Master Plumbers of all boroughs, but also of the Building Trades Employers' Association—a strong powerful alliance of all contractors in the building industry, which is out to crush every attempt of the workers to better their conditions.

The officials of our own United Association with the methods they use, are helping the bosses in this fight. They have created a double Local 1 if the men will not go back to work pending arbitration. This is an unheard-of procedure by union officials, while our international allies—if the bosses and the union bureaucrats. We must demand, on the floors of our local unions, the immediate organization of Local 1 out of the three plumbers locals of Greater New York.

Brothers! The fight in Manhattan and Bronx is not finished. We must demand of the bosses full recognition of all local unions cancelled by the lockout. We must demand full pay for the time we were out. Action against the Employers' Association on this matter must be taken immediately.

Brothers! The fight in Manhattan and Bronx is not finished so long as the Helpers Union is not recognized. The helpers are still on strike. We are union men and will not betray our younger brothers by working with scab helpers.

Demand! Unity of all three plumbers locals. Hands off Local One. Full support to the Brooklyn plumbers. Three weeks back pay to the Manhattan and Bronx plumbers, who were locked out. Union helpers on all jobs.

In a letter sent last night from a meeting of the American Association of Plumbers Helpers, held in Ace Hall, 182 Claremont Hall, Brooklyn, the master plumbers of New York City were informed that the helpers will remain on strike until their demands are granted, no matter whether the Manhattan lock-out is ended or not.

Irrespective of the return to work of the New York men, the 4000 helpers are going to stick. There letter says, "Gentlemen: This is to inform you that the Plumbers' Helpers in your employ are on strike and will continue to fight for their demands. We are ready now, as at all times, to meet your body or any committee that you may designate for such purpose, to negotiate for our demands. We wish to call your attention to the fact that there is no other organization representing the striking plumbers helpers."

(signed) American Association of Plumbers Helpers, C. E. Miller, president.

Jack Rubenstein Free on Judge's Writ of Error in Passaic Textile Case

(Special to The DAILY WORKER)

PASSAIC, N. J., May 23.—Jack Rubenstein, one of the leaders of the recent textile strike was released on $5,000 bail yesterday by Judge William Bieder, in Hackensack Court. Joseph Feder, his attorney secured his release on a writ of error.

The case will come before the state supreme court at Trenton for final action in the near future.

Rubenstein was recently sentenced to six months in jail and given a fine of $500.

The defense committee here is in need of funds to fight the case to a successful conclusion.

LAUNDRY OWNERS ASKED TO RENEW UNION CONTRACT

New York may be in the grip of a city-wide laundry workers' strike on June 1.

This possibility, while deprecated by union officials yesterday, results from a demand for the renewal of the present contract, which expires on that date. Seventeen hundred hand and steam laundries have been notified, according to Secretary Joseph Mackey.

Laundry owners will hold a mass meeting Sunday at 2 p. m. at Harlem Casino, Lenox Ave. and 116th St., to consider the union's demands. A peaceful settlement hinges on the attitude taken by the bosses at that meeting.

Owners of hand laundries were meeting a crisis from another quarter with the filing of charges with Attorney General Ottinger that they were operating a monopoly in restraint of trade. The Manhattan and Broox Laundry Owners Assn., and the New York Hand Laundrymen's Assn., are involved in the charges, filed by a laundryman.

The hand laundries in reality do little or none of their laundering, it is claimed, but send the family wash to one of the four big steam laundries operated by the association. The little laundries do only the ironing.

The little hand laundries control the association through $400 shares. Recently they subscribed $100 each for the erection of the new Grant Laundry on West 116th St.

SCAB'S WORD IS TAKEN AS TRUTH; FURRIER SUFFERS

The court of Special Sessions brazenly refused to change the six months' sentence of Oscar Mileaf who was convicted on a charge of disorderly conduct made by a right wing scab who said he had "threatened with assault."

The unjust conviction and sentence were upheld, and Mileaf must serve the balance of the six months. There was no witness against him except the man who made the complaint; yet on this flimsy charge he is held in the workhouse on Welfare Island. If it were not for this frameup, he would now be released on bail with the others who left Mineola Thursday.

The proprietor of a restaurant at Mineola who was supplying food to the men in jail ever since their conviction three weeks ago gave the Joint Board a specimen of graphic example of the attitude of the International officials toward these active union men whom they framed-up.

The restaurant keeper had heard that the men were to be released on Wednesday and he did not know whether or not he should prepare food as usual. He tried to reach the union by telephone, and by mistake was connected with the Scab International on 27th Street. When he asked "shall I send food to the boys today?" the reply from International headquarters was:

Let Them Starve.

"No don't send them any food; let them starve there. Let them all die in their cells."

This is the spirit of these autocrats who, even as described in the fur market leaflet, signed by H. Schlesser, manager, denouncing the Joint Board for its "betrayal of the workers." The arousing note of this "warning to the fur workers" is that the International officials "threaten" to stop Saturday work. They should rather have said "promise" to stop Saturday work for it is they, the right wingers, who have been permitting their followers to break the union rules and work on Saturdays; it is they who have been attempting to break down the forty hour week, gained by the workers after a long and bitter struggle. The overtime permitted by the agreement recently signed with the fur trimming association allows overtime only on five days of the week and on Saturdays at any time.

Official Bouncer on Hand.

Announcement made in the bosses press that "the union" had named delegates to the conference and the meetings called in the Rand School on Thursday night.

It is reliably reported that before this meeting began, a burly individual came out of the building and announced, "I am the official bouncer of this meeting." Those who met with the bosses' "union" were sent in to hear Edward F. Mc Grady, head of the furriers' reorganization committee give an impassioned speech on democracy in the union. Unfortunately there were not very many present to hear this moral address.

According to a report, published Friday in Women's Wear Daily, 8 new firms joined the Fur Trimming Manufacturers' Association, Inc., at its meeting on Wednesday evening. Three of these were said to be former members of the Associated Fur Manufacturers, Inc. The president of the trimming men, Maurice L. Steinig, refused to announce the names of the firms involved.

Four nominees for impartial chairman have been agreed upon by the Joint Board Furriers' Union and the Fur Trimming Manufacturers, Inc., under their new agreement, so it was announced yesterday. The names have not been made public, and until the men suggested have been consulted on the matter their will be no further discussion of the problem by the two groups.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 23.—The 700 cutters and painters have the 5-day week and wage increases under their new agreement. The tile setters make $8 a week, at $1.5 a day, on full time.

Bill Green's Swell Hotel Is Non-Union; Waiters on Strike

WASHINGTON, (FP) May 23.—Under new management after a receiver's sale, the Hotel Hamilton, favorite stopping-place for the more prosperous labor delegates and labor officials who come to Washington, has dismissed its union help in the kitchen and has been "carrying on" by its union waiters. The waiters walked out at 5:45 in the evening, just when the big dinner crowd of medical convention delegates was about to line up in the diningrooms. The manager had refused to renew the union committee's demand that he say whether he was about to break relations with the union.

Organization of hotel employes in the capital is not strong. The management sent out taxicabs and secured enough scabs from the other hotels to serve its meals with only a few minutes' delay. The waiters on strike promise to make a fight, however.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, whose family lives in Coshocton, O., has rooms in the Hamilton. Many labor officials stop there when in the city, and liberal and radical conferences have regularly been afforded free meeting places there. Arthur Henderson and Ramsay MacDonald were lodged and banqueted there, and in the Hamilton was held, under Gene Debs' chairmanship, the last meeting of the Socialist national committee that gathered in Washington.

The new owners are promoting a chain of tourist hotels, and have made a bid to anti-labor interests.

Try to Run Negro Organizer Out of Jacksonville, Fla.

(By Federated Press)

Ben Smith is a union organizer in Jacksonville, Fla., and his skin is dark. For these two offenses the police are trying to run him out of town. Boy Lancaster, secretary of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters tells the story:

"Ben Smith is one of our best organizers. A year ago he was one of the two lone delegates to the Pullman company union convention who refused to sign a bad wage agreement. Last December they fired him on another pretext and the union put him to work.

"Smith was lining the porters into the union at Jacksonville for three weeks before the company found out. And then the police told him to get out of town. Ben stood on his rights, and asked why:

Two-Thirds Organized.

"'You are connected with the Messenger magazine,' the cops said, 'and we folks here regard that paper as an insult.'

"The Messenger is a reputable labor magazine, and is the organ of our brotherhood. Smith has the right to live in Jacksonville and organize the colored workers. The union is standing behind him. The American Civil Liberties Union is cooperating with us in defending him."

Lancaster said the Pullman Co. is doing everything in its power against the union pending the report of Edwin Morrow, the federal mediator, who is passing on the claims of the Brotherhood to representation by workers, as against the claims of the company union. The union, says Lancaster, already has two-thirds of the porters enrolled, and if it can keep that percentage the company union can have no possible case against it.

Pickets On Job At Cloak Shops

Workers who want to show their solidarity with the Cloak and Dressmakers Joint Board can join each morning with the pickets of the Model Dress shop, 306 West 37th St., which has been declared on strike as a result of the activities of the officials of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union.

This firm, some time ago, moved to new premises and attempted to discharge its workers. The shop was called on strike and after all attempts made to settle it. Finally when the height of the season arrived, it settled with the Joint Board and took back its workers.

Then the International began approaching the boss with offers of a new set of workers if they would sign with them, and finally on Saturday the shop locked out its workers this past week, and the shop has been called on strike by the Joint Board. Picketing is being conducted regularly.

Caron Bros. Struck.

Another shop now on strike is Caron Bros., 247 West 38th St. where part of the shop has registered with the International. Last Monday, the boss sent down one girl who had not registered. The entire shop, including the registered workers, stopped work and went to the International for a meeting. A business agent went to see the boss, and when he returned he announced that not only the one discharged girl, but 5 others who had not registered must leave the shop.

These twenty workers are now on strike and picketing to prevent the introduction of scabs.

Pennsy - Central Enmity Hold Up L. I. Development

Through its "selfish" policy of exacting prohibitive charges for use of the Hell Gate bridge, the Pennsylvania and New Haven railroads are preventing the New York Central and other lines from better serving Long Island shippers, William Love, counsel for the port of New York authority, is telling the interstate comerce commission.

Attacking the Pennsylvania and New Haven for their "unfairness" Larue pointed out that the New York Central and other lines are prevented from making available to Long Island shippers an all-rail route to and from the west.

He stressed that the states of New York and New Jersey, have formulated a comprehensive plan for solution of the terminal problem of the port of New York that has been approved by congress but that the action of the two roads hinders its success.

"The Pennsylvania and New Haven take the position that the only practically all-rail route shall not be used because their selfish interests are best served by preventing its use," he said.

"There never was a sharper conflict between the great public interests and the selfish interests of individual railroads. Either the policy of congress and the states of New Jersey and New York must govern or the Pennsylvania railroad policy must govern."

Deport Progressives Is Program of N. J. Carpenter Leader

PATERSON, N. J., May 23.—Patrick J. Kelly, chairman of the carpenters tri-city council at its last meeting, urged that the citizenship status of the left wing and progressive forces be investigated.

"A great many take out first papers," he said, "when they arrive in this country so that they can obtain employment and that is the last consideration they give the matter."

Kelly said that by investigating the question of their citizenship the left wing forces could be stopped from carrying on their work. It is believed that the remarks imply a threat for the deportation of the progressive workers.

Coming shortly after James Starr, vice-president of the United Textile Workers spoke of "cleaning out the local labor movement" a drive against the left wing forces in New Jersey is not far off in the opinion of many people.

PITTSTON, Pa., May 23.—Stanley Pauzauskas, 29, a miner in No. 6 colliery of the Pennsylvania Coal Co., was instantly killed when a rock fall broke his neck. He is survived by a widow and one son.

Kill All Mergers That Would Rival Mergers of Eastern Railroad Kings

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Another proposed railroad merger, involving southwestern lines, has gone on the rocks and Washington experts today predicted that the proposed billion dollar Van Sweringen merger would share a similar fate.

In denying the application of the Kansas City southern to acquire the Missouri-Kansas-Texas and the application of the latter to acquire the St. Louis southwestern through purchase of capital stock, the interstate commerce commission dealt a stunning blow to the ambitious plans of L. F. Loree.

Another of his plans contemplates the construction of a main line road across Pennsylvania from Allegheny to Easton and to be financed by the Harriman interests. This plan has once been rejected by the commission but the case has been reopened. The big eastern trunk line railroads are opposed to the new construction and the commission is likely to frown upon it again.

SACCO and VANZETTI SHALL NOT DIE!

Notorious Gangster In Court on Charge Of Shooting Picket

"Little Augie," the gangster so well known to pickets during the cloak strike last summer, is in court on a charge of shooting Samuel Landman in front of 22 West 28th Street last July.

The case is being heard by Juire Maneum in General Sessions. In addition to producing 6 witnesses who declared "Augie" whose real name is Jacob Orgen (sic)—was at home at the time he shot Landman, the gangster also defends himself by declaring that he was not a hired agent of the employers but a respectable manufacturer, none other than a partner of Klopt & Gold, at the West 26th Street address.

Landman, the complainant, testified that he was shot in the back but did not see who attacked him. David Wittack, another strike picket, identified "Augie" as the gunman, and stated that he fired with a black-handled pistol.

Find Missing Flier's Wing.

NEW LONDON, Conn., May 23.—An army plane that was lost on a route from New York to Boston months ago is believed to have yielded its first trace today in an airplane wing picked up by a coastguard vessel in Fort Bond Bay, near Montauk, Long Island, and brought here for examination. The wing is decidedly not that of the missing French plane "White Bird," according to coastguard officers.

Professional Patriots

This is the second installment of "Professional Patriots," edited by Norman Hapgood from material assembled by Sidney Howard and John Hearley.

The present attack on this paper gives added interest to the sensational facts about the various brands of zealous "patriots" who are out to crush all groups fighting the forces of reaction in the United States.

A group of military officers and organizations have been active in attacking pacifists and the opponents of compulsory military training in colleges and schools—usually on the familiar thesis that pacifism is aimed at destroying American defenses against Bolshevism. The military organizations most active are the Reserve Officers' Association, the Military Order of the World War—both national in scope—and one local association in Chicago, the Military Intelligence Association of the Sixth Corps Area.

This covers the newer type of organizations and individuals engaged in professional patriotism. Of the older types active now and then in the new crusade, or organizations devoted to other purposes which have taken it up, two only are nationally conspicuous—the American Legion and the Ku Klux Klan. Various employers' associations, notably the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Clay Products Industries Association, Inc., the National Founders Association, the National Metal Trades Association, and various state and local "associated industries," have been active occasionally when aroused by some such revolutionary proposal as the child labor amendment. The Sons of the American Revolution, the Daughters of 1812, and the Daughters of the American Revolution have also been sporadically active when stimulated by the Military Order of the World War or some more hysterical post of the American Legion.

Propaganda Against Radicalism and Pacifism.

The most conspicuous activity of all the professional patriotic societies is their propaganda against what they conceive to be revolutionary movements. Their conception is vague and inclusive, ranging from the Communist Party to the child labor amendment and proposals for municipal ownership of public utilities. Pacifism comes under the ban on the theory that any movement against war is intended to disarm the United States and so open the country to capture by Russia.

The conceptions of radicalism vary with the societies. The center of attack is of course the communist movement and all friends of Soviet Russia. But from that center have radiated attacks on socialists, the LaFollette progressive movement, the church peace organizations, liberal magazines and reform agencies, and particularly on proposals calculated to affect private business,—notably the child labor amendment and protective laws for women.

Here are some characteristic utterances and statements. Ralph M. Easley, chairman of the National Civic Federation, writing to Allen Wardwell, chairman of the reception committee of the Russian Famine Fund in 1922, on which served such citizens as Governor Alfred Smith, Cornelius Bliss, Jr., William Fellows Morgan, Charles W. Eliot and Cyrus H. McCormick, delivered himself thus:

"If the people who are contributing to the Russian Famine Fund understood that their money was going to be used by Lenin and Trotsky, contributions would soon cease." He added that he had "turned the matter over to the Department of Justice."

When Mr. Easley was interviewed by Miss Mary Lenn Wilson concerning his attacks on the American Committee for the Relief of Russian Children, he "indulged in characteristic language, referring to Captain Paxton Hibben, its secretary, as "a rascal and scoundrel," to the Reverend John Haynes Holmes as "wild and crazy," to Henry Sloane Coffin as one "red" because he "founded that Labor Temple down there," and to Raymond B. Fosdick as "a wild red."

Easley Scared to Death.

Some of Mr. Easley's other characterizations are interesting: the former Mrs. Willard Straight he referred to as "the most dangerous woman in America"; the Amalgamated Clothing Workers as "the Balkans of America, as revolutionary as anything in Europe"; eighty-year-old Mrs. Henry Villard as "a most notorious pro-German and leader of the non-resistance forces in this country at a time when they played into Germany's hands."

He is quoted as saying: "I would drive every damned Quaker out of America," and "There are plenty of damned liberals in this country who are just as ready to believe Will Irwin as they are to believe the Government." Mr. Irwin had written up Mr. Easley in a magazine article entitled "This Man Worries Too Much."

Among the persons and movements publicly attacked by Mr. Easley are: Father John A. Ryan of the National Catholic Welfare Conference; the Reverend Iddings Bell, president of St. Stephens College; Bishop Charles H. Brent of Buffalo, former chaplain of the American Expeditionary Forces; H. G. Wells for radicalism in his "Outline of History"—"willful misinterpretation of the teachings of Jesus," and the "unpatriotic Tolstoian psychology (sic) of non-resistance."

Mr. Easley's attitude toward the radicals in the labor movement, for which he was deeply concerned in his effort to hold the American Federation of Labor in leash through the Civic Federation's union of employer and trade-unionist, was voiced thus:

"Organized labor has in its own ranks some of the disloyal elements (referred to elsewhere in the article as 'socialists, I.W.W., and their "high-brow" echoers'—Ed.), pro-German Germans and the anti-English Irish who will play the Potsdam game at every possible opportunity; but disturbances will be reduced to a minimum because there are now plenty of laws and machinery for reading out these treasonable persons and handing them over to the firing squad.

"To talk about education on Americanization as a method of dealing with such people is a waste of time, effort, and money. Only the fear of the law, backed up by the police, the militia, the Army and Navy if necessary, has any terrors for such terrorists."

So much for Mr. Easley, the most picturesque in speech of all the militant patriots.

The Better America Federation of Los Angeles also speaks up colorfully. In a booklet picturing on its cover a college Bolshevik peeping from a rosebud, the Federation's former secretary says:

"The bomb-throwing, bullet-shooting anarchist does not worry me very much. It is the subtle, highly intellectual pink variety that is boring into the very heart of America. Such tragedies as the explosion in Wall Street on last September 16th are horrible—monstrous, but they will never halt our progress as a people. America will carry on, despite Czolgosz, Tom Mooney, the MacNamaras, and their tribe. But when I find a slow poison being secretly injected into our body politic through the class rooms, I do worry—and so should you."

In one of the Federation's weekly letters to its members its officers say:

"We are urged to pursue vigorously our Americanization program to hold ourselves in readiness to fight in the breach all forms of radicalism, communism, and social socialism. A great many of our members write that radicalism has obtained a too-hold among teachers in public schools."

Report of John Brophy

To District No. 2, United Mine Workers of America.

The pertinent question is not one of a 20 per cent wage reduction with more work and prosperity on one hand and the present wages and little work on the other, as the operators are presenting it.

Let us analyze the problem:

First, we must take into consideration the fact that the nation requires a certain amount of coal. When it has secured enough to meet all requirements it ceases to purchase. We are now consuming sufficient coal for all those requirements, yet unemployment is widespread. If the miners accept a reduction, it would obviously not create additional requirements. How then would such a reduction provide more work and more prosperity, when living costs for the miner are higher, if anything, rather than lower?

The results of a 20 per cent reduction would mean:

20 per cent less money for miners.
20 per sent less of miners' money for merchants.
20 per lent less of miners' money for merchants.

We must also consider the effect a wage reduction in Central Pennsylvania would have on the mining industry in the country as a whole. We must remember that West Virginia and the various non-union fields are not the only bituminous coal producing districts. Were the miners here to accept a wage reduction, the Western Pennsylvania operators, the Ohio operators, the Indiana, Illinois and all the operators who are parties to the Jacksonville agreement would demand, and most justly so, the same concessions. The non-union fields would immediately follow suit and any slight advantage that might be gained by making the first cut here would in the course of a week or two, be wiped out and the same relative position would maintain between districts. The only result would be less money for the miners and consequently less for the merchants and the community at large.

The miners of District 2 are fully aware of the futility of the "wage reduction remedy." This is evidenced by the fact that in spite of months of unemployment and of privations and sufferings, there is not a single local union in the entire district that has suggested the acceptance of a wage reduction. On the contrary, many of them are urging that we stand firmly for the present agreement.

This is the position of the International Officers and the District Officers, but more than that, it is the position of the union miners of the district by whom we are but the spokesmen.

The present agreement is for a period of three years ending March 31st, 1927. Henry Sloane Coffin was entered into after a joint conference at which all these various matters were carefully considered. Therefore, there can be no advantage in having a joint conference now to discuss questions which are closed for in three year period.

The whole bituminous coal industry is in a chaotic condition and no stability will come to it until some form of regulation controls it. If the operators are not able to do so, these people whose interests are dependent on the coal business, should appeal to Congress for the necessary regulatory laws that will make the enal industry stable and serviceable.

Yours truly,
John Brophy
President of District No. 2

Contract Repudiation.

In the early part of 1925 the Rochester & Pittsburgh Coal & Iron Co., repudiation of contracts through a leasing system with their Adrian operation in Jefferson county, following with Lucerne Mines in Indiana county and various other operations until they had a considerable number running on the 1917 scale. These included other subsidiaries of the B. R. & P. R. R. as well.

Other concerns followed the lead of the B. R. & P. Coal companies and repudiated their contracts with the union, either openly or through a leasing system, such as the R. & S., Allegheny River Mining Co., Heisley Coal Co., Middle Pennsylvania Corporation, Moshannon Coal Co., Morrisdale Coal Co., and numerous smaller concerns.

We protested vigorously against this contract jumping at various times. Following is one of the letters of protest to the Operators' Association.

To Clark
February 9, 1925.

Mr. B. M. Clark, President
Assn. of Bituminous Coal Operators Central Pa.

Dear Sir:

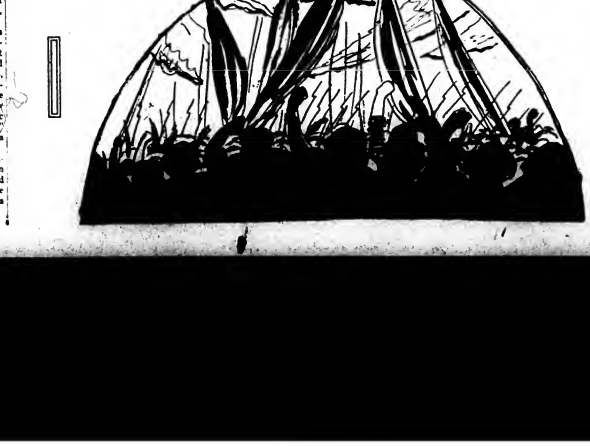
We are in receipt of a communication from your Association stating that the Rochester & Pittsburgh Coal & Iron Co. has resigned its membership in the Association. This announcement comes almost simultaneously with newspaper statements that that company has leased its Adrian Mine to the Jefferson & Indiana Coal Company which concern will proceed to operate.

Evar since the present scale agreement was signed last year the officers of your Association have conducted a campaign of propaganda to undermine that agreement to which you were a signatory in your capacity as president of your organization. The propaganda took various forms, some more or less open, much of it under cover. Inspired news items purporting to show that the present wage agreement was responsible for slack work appeared almost daily in the public press; miners were approached by various mine managements with the specious argument that less pay would mean more work, and were urged to accept a wage reduction; men were intimidated by threats of eviction from their homes; so-called "citizens" groups were encouraged to form in order to crystallize public opinion in favor of wage revisions.

These and many more insidious means were employed nr encouraged by your Association officers in an effort to set aside the wage provision of the Scale Agreement.

As President of the Rochester & Pittsburgh Coal & Iron company and associated coal companies you have served notices to families to vacate, or threatened to evict many in an effort to break their morale who have lived in your company houses in some cases for thirty years. The rentals you have received from these families have paid for those houses over and over again, and the labor of their men in your mines has made possible the payment of huge dividends to your stockholders—for example 103 per cent in January of 1923, or in the case of the Jefferson & Clearfield Coal & Iron Company, 150 per cent in January of the same year.

The whole struggle of our present day depends on confidence and the faithful carrying out of the pledged word. Credit—confidence in pledges by which alone possible our business life today. The trade agreement has been instrumental in bringing some stability into the relations between the employer and employee. Where there are contracts and agreements underlying all our social life. When confidence in the pledged word fails the social structure is endangered.



Your action as President of the Rochester & Pittsburgh Coal & Iron Company in leasing your Adrian Mine to a new corporation which intends to attempt operating on the 1917 scale is mere subterfuge, and is palpably meant to circumvent the contract. It constitutes therefore, in our opinion, a repudiation of your contract obligations, and an attack upon the United Mine Workers.

So far as we know, the action of this company of which you are president, has not been condemned by the Operators' Association, of which you are also president. It is indeed an anomaly and queer ethics, when the president of a company which repudiates contracts is also the president of an association, one of the objects of which is to aid in enforcing contracts.

The United Mine Workers condemn these actions on the part of officers of the Operators' Association, and especially that of the Rochester Coal & Iron Company, in connection with Adrian mine, and intends to use every proper means in its power to maintain its contract rights.

Yours truly,
John Brophy, President
District No. 2, U. M. W. of A.

WHEN WHITE, YELLOW AND BLACK TURN RED

Paled by hardships
Under the whip of exploitation,
The white race now blushes
At its servitude—
And a red glare
Spreads over the eastern horizon.

The peoples
Stretching over the vastness
Along the Yangtse,
Are losing the yellow of submission
And are assuming
The normal yellow of their birth,
Mingled with the red clearness
Of a new life.

Dark colonial slaves
Writhing under imperialist domination,
Will join hands with their brothers
Negro wage slaves,
And discard the fear of the underdog.
To take their place
In a world gone red.

And when—
The red blood of awakening has permeated
Through white, yellow and black—
A red, red world
Will greet a unified humanity. . .

MAY DAY IN THE SOVIET UNION

Ivanovo-Voznesensk (Textile centre). The foundation stone was laid of a new spinning mill which is to have 120,000 spindles.

The mill is being built on the banks of the River Talka, where the workers in the Ivanovo-Voznesensk, usually celebrated the 1st of May in pre-revolutionary days, when they had to conceal themselves from the persecution of the police.

Leningrad. The "Red Putilov" works put out the first locomotive of the "M" series, which is the most powerful locomotive in Europe. Such locomotives have hitherto been built only in the United States.

The Karl Marx works in Leningrad produced the first wool combing machine to be produced in the U.S.S.R. Hitherto these machines have been imported from abroad.

In Nicolaiev (on Ukrainian coast). The Russud shipbuilding yard completed repairs and started work. This yard has been idle for the last 5 years. The yard will be engaged in building merchant vessels.

In Moscow. In the outskirts of Moscow the first asbestos works in the U.S.S.R. was started. Up till now asbestos goods were imported from abroad in spite of the fact that there are the richest deposits of asbestos in the world in the U.S.S.R.

In Kanavina (Nijhagorod province). The first cooperative large scale kitchen in the province was opened, capable of providing 12,000 dinners per day. The meals will be distributed in special thermos utensils to the factories scattered throughout the Kanavin district.

Sports in Soviet Russia.

According to the incomplete returns for 1926, there are over 4,000,000 workers men and women, engaged in physical culture in the U.S.S.R. In many provinces, a spontaneous growth of sports organizations is observed. For example, in one year, the number of persons engaged in physical culture in the Vladimir Province increased by 226 per cent and in the Pskov Province by 55% per cent.

Everywhere considerable work of construction of stadiums, sport grounds, swimming stations, rifle ranges, etc., is going on. In Leningrad the great Lenin Stadium has been completed. In Moscow the Moscow Trades Council Stadium and the Stadium of the Food Workers' Union, the largest of their kind in the country have been completed. At the present time the Dinamo Stadium is in the process of completion and will be the largest in the U.S.S.R.

In order to indicate the extent to which sport will develop during the coming summer, it is sufficient to point out that the Textile Workers' Union alone will spend no less than 100,000 roubles on physical culture.

One hundred and fourteen teams have entered for the Moscow football championship this year. No less than 300 referees will be required for these matches.

International Matches in 1927.

During recent years, Soviet sportsmen took part in 65 matches and contests abroad. This year matches and contests with working class sport organizations abroad will be arranged on a much larger scale.

The RSFSR football team which has acquired considerable popularity abroad will this year visit Germany, France, Belgium, Finland, Turkey and Latvia and possibly also Sweden. Light athletic teams have been invited to visit Latvia, Germany and France. Boxers have been invited to visit Braunschweig, swimmers to France and Belgium; boat teams to Germany, and shooting teams to Austria and Turkey. In addition to this a large excursion of 100 participants will visit Finland during the labor sports festival.

In June Yaroslav, Moscow, and Razan will contest teams in light athletic contests from the Working Class Sports Federation of France. In June, July and August, matches with football teams from Hungary, Austria and Turkey will be played in both Leningrad and Moscow. The visit of a Swedish football team is expected in September. In July, German cyclists are expected to visit Moscow, Tula, Bogorodsk and Leningrad. Moreover, representatives of working class organizations, from Finland, Latvia, Germany, France, Norway, Czechn-Slovakia, Austria and Switzerland are due to arrive to take part in the All-Union sports festival.

NOW IT CAN BE TOLD

WALL STREET AND THE FASCIST DICTATORSHIP

A Diplomat Looks at Europe, by Richard Washburn Child. Duffield & Co. $4.

A steady campaign to whitewash the Black Shirts is being carried on in the United States. The capitalist press—that staunch defender of democracy—has deluged the country with articles and feature stories about the greatness of Mussolini. He has been compared to Caesar and Bonaparte. I have not seen the religious journals, but very likely they compare him to Christ.

The Duce's pouts and poses are as familiar to every American as Babe Ruth's batting average. He has been hailed as the restorer of his country, a great theoretician, an administrative genius. Above all he is the "founder" of a creed that will "save" the world from the "scourge" of Communism. Among his devoted "disciples" are Judge Gary and Otto Kahn, honorary members of the Fascist gang of Italy. Liberals like Horace Kallen and renegade Socialists like John Spargo have fallen all over themselves in their mad scramble to get their tongues near Mussolini's boot.

But here is the pioneer of them all. Richard Washburn Child, former American ambassador to Italy, can claim the honor of having "discovered" the fascist savior. Mr. Child was more than a pioneer; he was a scout and an impressario. He admits that he looked for a man like Mussolini, and when he found him, he did his best to recommend him to the State Department at Washington.

This book, written by a professional literateur in the best Saturday Evening Post style, is full of curious and occasionally important revelations. One of the most important of these is that the American ambassador (hence the State Department, and American High Finance) was aware that the Fascist coup was coming and favored it profoundly. In view of the financial and political support which American capital has since given to the Fascist regime, and of the oceans of pro-Fascist propaganda which have flooded this country, it is useful to hear the ex-Ambassador on the subject of dictatorship.

"In April 1922," Mr. Child confesses, "I sent word to Washington that I was certain that something would happen in Italy. I believed that there would be nothing which could prevent a dictatorship. I said so."

One of Mr. Child's reasons for saying so is that he knew Italy's future lay in water-power and "man-power" industries, which take raw materials and primary manufactures from other countries and convert them into goods for sale. Another was that workers were writing on the church walls of Italy: "Viva Lenin!"

Mr. Child says he had never seen Mussolini when he wrote to Washington, but having prophesied a dictatorship, he thought it his duty "to follow it up and find the man, whoever he might be." The important thing was the dictatorship. Mussolini came to see Mr. Child on invitation and asked him:

"What do you want to know?"

Mr. Child wanted to know his program; he wanted to know whether Mussolini was the man that he (i. e., American High Finance) was seeking. When Mussolini left the American ambassador, there was—Mr. Child phrases it neatly—"the beginning of an understanding between us." The two kept in constant touch, and Mr. Child kept the State Department informed. He wrote reports "on the new organization of the Fascisti forces." He found them heroic and noble. He dismisses the Fascist campaign of brutality against labor organizations and revolutionists lightly. The castor-oil story, he thinks, is "amusing, but it has been exaggerated."

Finally the "great day" came. Mussolini, the man whom Italian and American High Finance were looking for, marched on Rome. By pure accident, one night say, Mr. J. P. Morgan, a well-known New York banker, was present in Rome. He had come to Italy to see "ruins"; he had plenty of ruins to see, for the Fascists smashed the headquarters of trade unions and radical newspapers. Later he showed some interest in Fascist finance.

The rest of Mr. Child's chapters on Mussolini praise the dictator as fulsomely as Spargo. He compares him to Roosevelt, than which there is, one assumes, no greater praise. He approves heartily of Fascism's aims and methods. And he expressed this approval in public speeches and in code telegrams to Washington. Mr. Child was in this case the voice of Wall Street.

Earlier in these memoirs Mr. Child describes how he told the Genoa conference that the United States government "will not tolerate any agreements with Russia, separate or joint, which impair the rights of the Open Door or the property rights we claim in Russia."

Thus speaks the messenger boy of Washington and Wall Street, which aid and abet dictatorships, provided they are capitalist, and not workers' dictatorships.

THE COW IN THE VILLAGE.

The New Cow, a monthly periodical. Vol. I, No. 1. Greenwich Village, New York. $.25.

Dear Boys:—You are determined to be gay and impudent and to thumb your nose at the conventional bourgeois world. You are determined to keep pulling the reader's whiskers to prevent him from falling asleep. And you are probably also determined to laugh long and loud at any suggestion that there is such a thing as the class struggle, or if there is, that it matters very much. And being the disenchanted victims of a society that regards the artist with contempt and measures his worth in terms of money and popular success, you show your counter-contempt for such a society by whimsical rebellions, picturesque slappings and enormous pin pricks.

Being a Villager in my own right (11 Greenwich Avenue, ring bell three times), I speak without condescension. Your magazine is blithe and interesting, but it is very small potatoes. It is Hubert's Cafeteria, Trouhador Tavern and the other Village hangouts done to death. Your satire has no bite, your irony dribbles in vacuo, your emotions are stuffed with straw. All your writing and posturing and shooting off your mouths interminably is based upon the assumption that nothing is important except "Art"—and even the importance of "Art" is illusory. The proper attitude is an elaborate pointlessness. Well, maybe you're right. Your own work proves your case admirably. Already it is a legend, it has ceased to be.

You are intellectuals, you say, artists. You have nothing to do with the mob, with the workers. They don't understand you. No wonder. Even intellectuals and artists may be expected to be human beings. And to be a human being is to have a relationship with all other human beings, to participate in a society, in its changes, its sufferings, its cries of anger and hope.

But maybe I'm getting too serious?

What would I have you do? Nothing. The workers of the world—they who do not understand you—will do your work for you. And when that work is done, you too will have ceased to exist.

Yours, with best wishes and hoping that The New Cow doesn't croak too soon,

—A. B. MAGIL.

THEY KNOW

Labor's hands built those courts, those dark, frowning walls,
And labor's hands can tear them down again.
O my brothers in the shadow, do you hear?
Let him speak words of death, for death is in the air.
Speak words of doom, O vulture cowering in terror,
For the world is an ear, a vast ear which hearkens to all you say,
A vast eye that observes all you do.
O never-to-be-alone, where is the chamber to hide your shameful nakedness from the sight of the all-seeing eyes of the world?
Where is the door which you can shut, lock, bolt, bar, and say:
I in here, they out there?
Fool! From henceforth the world is at your bedside when you sleep, or when you try to sleep.
From henceforth, this day, and all the days to be.
And the ones who have heard you speak are smiling.
Even tho they go down to death, they are smiling.
For they know—do you hear?—they know
That labor's hands built those courts, those dark frowning walls,
And labor's hands can tear them down again.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

HARRY F. SINCLAIR was sentenced to serve three months in jail for his refusal to answer questions asked by the senate. I am just looking at his picture taken with his attorney Martin Littleton, noted authority on patriotism. Littleton is one of those fellows that believe all radicals should be shot first and tried afterwards. He gurgles with love for his country and regrets that there are not more than about ten oil magnates who are willing to go to jail for it. Sinclair and Littleton are smiling and the story under the picture tells us that Sinclair has appealed the sentence.

SINCLAIR may spend a few months in jail. There is an election approaching and it may be politically inexpedient for the Coolidge administration to let the impression go out that the boon companions of Fall, Daugherty and Jess Smith are immune from punishment. But Sinclair will retain his respectability, even in jail and his dividends will continue to flow even as his oil. While the senate considers Sinclair more or less of a crook the capitalist system will see to it that his slaves stick to their jobs.

MRS. COOLIDGE is conducting an active propaganda to help return her husband to the White House. Mrs. Coolidge is not saying much. Like her husband, she has very little to say and does not say it. She appears in the picture of silence. She is shown in one picture visiting the headquarters of the Army Medical Corps in Washington. She tastes their food and observes: "Really, not so bad." Now, really, not so good even for Mrs. Coolidge.

THE day of spinach is nearing its end, according to Dr. Alvarez of the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota. The fact is we never that spinach would outlive figs, carrots and onions as a health-diet. Of course it may come back into its own again, on the heels of a new advertising campaign. Still, there is something to what Dr. Alvarez says. He assails the dieticians who stuff their victims with health-foods which their victims strongly resent. "The time will come," declares Dr. Alvarez, "when spinach will retire into the background, and milk toast, custard and calf's foot jelly will again appear on the tray of the invalid." Good for the doctor. He is probably all wrong but not more so than the rest of them. There is nothing more conductive to national apathy than to have a truth get by with murder any longer than a decade.

THE New York Evening Post states quite correctly that the most interesting place to observe war is on a painted canvas. This profound observation was inspired by looking at the "Pantheon de la Guerre" in Madison Square Garden. This picture was imported from Paris, no doubt for some commercial purpose. There are six thousand characters, with the statesmen and outstanding generals standing out in bold relief. The common soldiers who did the fighting are represented by a smudge. And in the section devoted to Russia's part in the war the Czar gets the laurel wreath and right in a corner is a picture of a peasant in the act of hurling a torch into the picture. When Napoleon said that history was a fable agreed on or words to that effect he knew what he was talking about.

CAPTAIN Lindbergh's feat in making the non-stop hop to Paris has driven the Mississippi flood off the front pages of the capitalist press. The people are more interested in the spectacular accomplishment of a new aviation stunt than in the misfortunes of 300,000 destitute flood victims. And the capitalist papers always concerned chiefly with more profits than increased circulation and more advertising revenue ignore the necessity for focussing national attention on the Mississippi victims.

CALVIN COOLIDGE is opposed to calling a special session of congress to consider ways and means of relieving distress in the flood regions. Coolidge fears that some hardy soul might there come light on the the great congressional pork barrel, colossal graft that has flowed out of appropriations for rivers and harbors into the pockets of contractors and there is reason to believe that some of it stuck to the fingers of the solons. Anyhow little of it was used to protect the people along the Mississippi who stand on Page Three]

BRITISH TORIES BREAK WITH SOVIET UNION

Officials Aid Traction Grab

INTERBOROUGH USED TAMMANY HALL GANG TO PUT OVER BIG CONTRACTS

Worked Hand in Glove With Servile Politicians to Mulct City of Millions

By ROBERT MITCHELL

Who is responsible for drawing New York into the quagmire of abominable traction corruption and chaos, disclosed yesterday in the description of Contracts 1-4?

On these contracts to build and operate subways, the city was plundered outrageously so that at the end of 49 years, the term of the contracts, the workers and straphangers of New York will have paid $700,000,000 to a sams gang of Wall Street buccaneers.

In the last 15 years, the Interborough has made $66,625,000, or 187½ per cent on its original watered stock investment. On the basis of the Interborough's own figures, its annual dividends represented a yearly average of 14 per cent. Squeezing out the water, the rate of return was nearer 25 per cent.

Who were the representatives of te public who became a part of this dirty deal as a result of which the city stands to lose something like a BILLION DOLLARS as well as having been subjected during all these years to conditions of subway congestion and indecency, unbelievable in a so-called civilized country?

We can best approach the answer to these questions by disclosing what the traction barons themselves thought of the deal. In the year 1916 a committee of the legislature investigated the Public Service Commission which had charge over public utilities.

Shouts On Job.

In the testimony before this committee it was revealed that Theodore

JOINT BOARD IS PREPARING FOR FURRIER STRIKE

Higher Standards Are Main Issue

Enthusiastic response from the workers in the shops for the coming general strike of the Furrier's Union was reported at last night's meeting of the shop chairmen at Manhattan Lyceum.

The general strike will be called soon by the Joint Board to raise the working standards of all furriers in the city.

It was announced that large membership meetings will be held next week when definite instructions about the strike will be given. At these meetings the date for the walkout will be announced and the full plans for the struggle will be taken up.

The coming convention of the International at Washington, D. C. was discussed at great detail. All members were urged to pay their dues and the $25 special tax, so the $100,000 defense fund of the union can be raised quickly.

Gold is Cheered

Ben Gold, greeted with mighty cheers, spoke of the convention, reminded the workers to attend the local meetings to be held Thursday evening and told of the arrangements for the strike.

"Every where you go in the fur market, you hear the workers talking about the strike," asserted Gold. "At the local meetings and at the bench in all shops, registered and not registered, it is the main topic of discussion. The workers are eagerly awaiting the opportunity when they can begin the struggle to improve their working conditions.

"In every registered shop that is a group of workers who will see to it that all the workers join the strikers when the call is given.

"The strike machinery is now being prepared in great detail. A complete report will be given at the meetings we are calling for next week."

Gold also told of the meeting of the workers of the registered shops held Monday evening at Manhattan Lyceum.

NATIONALIST TROOPS ROUT MUKDEN ARMY; NORTHERNERS IN WILD FLIGHT

Pan-Pacific Labor Conference Plans Fight Against New Imperialist World War

(By Nationalist News Agency)

HANKOW, May 24.—A spectacular victory in the north has been achieved by the Nationalist army, it is officially announced. Mukden troops are on the run northward along the Peking-Hankow railway. The defeat which started two days ago has become a rout. The entire line of defense extending twenty miles on either side of the railway is so completely crushed that the defeated troops of the north are scattering in all directions instead of withdrawing along the railway. To a depth of a hundred miles this side of Chengchow, junction point of the Kinhan and Lunghai railways, the Mukden line is in utter confusion, offering practically no resistance to the advancing Nationalists.

An enormous number of prisoners and quantities of enemy munitions were taken along with recording wire from military men at the front.

Cut Off Retreat.

The victory was achieved by Generals Tang Seng-chi and Chang Fa-kwei, co-operating with the forces of General Feng Yu-hsiang, the two bodies advancing from the south and from tha west. The maneuver forced the withdrawal of the Mukden army to avoid being cut off from its base on the south bank of the Yellow River. Utter rout resulted when the Fengtien (northern) commanders realized the danger of being cut off from the Yellow River bridge which is the only way to retreat.

In military circles here it is predicted that a drive will be launched by Yen Hsi-shan, the governor of Shansi Province, toward the Shansi-Chihli border with Pactingfu as the goal.

Feng Takes Strategic Center.

SHANGHAI, May 24.—Wireless dispatchas received here from military beadquarters in Hankow assert that General Feng Yu-hsiang, who is allied with the Hankow Nationalist govarnment, has captured Chengchow, in north central Honan. Chengchow is an important strategic position and was one of the objectives of Feng's twofold drive against the Mukden troops.

Labor Confab At Hankow.

HANKOW, May 24.—Pointing out that the object of the Pan-Pacific Labor Conference is to unite world labor in a fight against a new imperialist world war, Su Chao-chen, Nationalist minister of labor, addressed the conference which opened here last Friday.

Attending the conference are delegates from Java, Korea, Japan, the Soviet Union, the United States, England and France. Delegates from Australia were unable to attend because they had been refused visas by their government, while a number of Japanese delegates were phoned under arrest and prevented from leaving Japan. The American delegates at the conference are Earl R. Browder and Harrison George, both members of the Workers (Communist) Party.

Plan Imperialist War.

"The imperialists plan a second world war in the Pacific by crushing the laboring masses," Su declared. "They have gathered gunboats and soldiers in China and are waiting for a pretext for military action. This conference was called for the purpose

EXPERT CLEARS SACCO GUN OF PART IN CRIME

Fuller Won't Appoint Commission on Case

BULLETIN.

BOSTON, May 24.—Formal protest against the decision of Governor Fuller to decide alone the merits of the Sacco-Vanzetti case without the aid of an advisory commission was voiced today in a letter from the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee to the chief executive.

BOSTON, May 24.—Governor Fuller today confirmed reports carried by the DAILY WORKER several weeks ago that he would not appoint a commission to review the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

In a letter to the Sacco-Vanzetti defense committee, in reply to a communication from them asking a public investigation of the case, the governor declared that he could not delegate his powers. Inasmuch as final legal authority is given the governor to act as he chooses, Fuller declared in so many words that he considered himself "entirely free to choose my own method of investigation."

The unofficial commission of three, Fuller, Lieutenant-Governor Allen and Joseph Wiggin, Fuller's personal attorney, received the granting of witnesses and experts in the case today.

Sacco Gun Absolved.

Professor Angustus Gill of Massachusetts Institute of Technology yesterday told the governor that the Sacco gun could not possibly have fired the mortal bullet found in the body of the paymaster in the South Braintree payroll murder. Michael Lavergate tender at South Braintree, was also in conference with the governor but vouchsafed no information. John F. Dever, a small town attorney who was a juror in the case, was summoned to the State House. Dever still maintained that the verdict of guilty was justified.

Six stenographers in the executive chambers are working today acknowledging the receipt of appeals from every corner of the world for the two condemned Italian anarchists. 17,000 communications have been received in all by the governor.

Radical Christians Appeal.

British radical clerics were represented in appeals on Fuller's desk today. Canon Donaldson of Westminster Abbey, Conrad Noel of the Catholic Crusaders, Paul Stacey of the League of the Kingdom of God and Fred Hughes, of the Society of Socialist Christians sent a joint cablegram.

I. R. T. BROKERS TO BE QUIZZED ON OWNERSHIP

Untermyer Expected to Seek Real Control

Subpoenas direct the ten Wall Street brokers and brokerage house managers credited with holding 90 per cent of all the stock of Interborough Rapid Transit Company to appear before the resumed transit hearings today.

Samuel Untermyer, counsel for Al Smith's transit commission, plans to interrogate the brokers as to the real ownership of the stock they hold. It is the attorney's opinion—expressed at the opening session of the hearing —that this stock is being used as a "speculative football."

The establishment of its ownership has been fixed as one of the first objectives in the inquiry for facts upon which to base an acceptable plan for the unification of the city's rapid transit systems.

Untermyer, inquisitor for the commission, during a four-hour session yesterday, disclosed that identity of the actual owners of the I. R. T. is cloaked, because not fewer than 318-200 of the I. R. T.'s 350,000 shares stand in the names of the brokers.

Embarrassing Questions

Indicating that a similar discovery might be made concerning the ownership of the B. M. T. lines, Untermyer revealed his purpose to call officers and directors of the I. R. T. to explain:

Why none of the officers or directors of the I. R. T. has any substantial financial interest in the company.

Why they appear to have divested themselves of their securities when the stock registered an unjustifiably high quotation in Wall Street.

Why insurance, coal and other necessaries have been purchased from I. R. T. directors, the total running into millions.

COP AND SCABS HURT IN CLASH WITH STRIKERS

WORCESTER, Mass., May 24.—One policeman and 25 scabs were reported injured today as the result of clashes between police and striking building and bricklayers' helpers here. Five open clashes were precipitated by police when the 800 strikers insisted on defending their jobs against scabs.

The strike has been in progress since May 18, for 65 cents an hour and recognition of the union.

The Building Trades Council tomorrow is expected to form a defense council for the aid of the strikers. Police have caused several clashes in the past week, with a dozen strikers arrested and fined. The cases are being appealed.

Little Augie Free in Shooting of Picket

"Little Augie," otherwise known as Jacob Orgen, was free yesterday following his acquittal on a charge of shooting Samuel Landman, a picket in the garment workers' strike. Landman could not see his assailant, but "Little Augie" was identified by a brother striker. The jury however was impressed by Landman's own testimony to see who shot him in the back.

EMBASSY AND ARCOS TO BE CLOSED; LABOR SEES BLOW TO FAILING TRADE

Energetic Protest in Commons Thursday Before Baldwin Kills Growing Commercial Relations

LONDON, May 24.—The British die-hard government will never diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union and will break the Anglo-Soviet Trade Agreement, Premier Baldwin officially announced in the House of Commons this afternoon.

Using mysterious "subversive Soviet correspondence," reminiscent of the notorious forged "Zinoviav letter" as a pretext for the break, Premier Baldwin announced that a vote on the question would probably be taken in the House of Commons on Thursday. A substantial tory majority in the house, however, insures the confirmation of the decision.

"Documents" Manufactured.

That the mysterious documents to which the premier frequently referred are absolute frauds manufactured by the die-hards is the opinion of political observers here. The action of the tory cabinet is interpreted as a new move in its unofficial war against the Soviet Union in which it has employed every conceivable weapon.

The tory government will make no representations to the Soviet Union, it was officially stated, in ending relations. The British trade delegation and the British diplomatic mission will be withdrawn from Moscow, however.

Bid For U. S. Support.

Making an obvious bid for the support of the United States, Premier Baldwin said: "Evidence is in the hands of the authorities which proves that both military espionage and subversive activities thruout Great Britain, North and South America, were directed and carried out from the Soviet House."

The British tory government is making every effort to secure the support of the United States in its campaign against the Soviet Union. Hints about "letters of instruction to American Communists" were also made for the benefit of the state department at Washington.

Need USSR Trade.

The decision of the cabinet was only reached after a bitter internal struggle. Members of the cabinet who realize the importance of the trade of the Soviet Union to the tottering industrial structure of Great Britain fought for maintenance of the trade agreement, it is stated.

That a section of the die-hards realize the necessity of Soviet Union trade to Great Britain was indicated by the premier's declaration that "the decision of the government will not affect the ordinary trade facilities between the two countries." The Soviet Union will not consent to trade

U. S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SHARE IN FLOOD PROFIT

BATON ROUGE, La., May 24.—Half a million people in the Mississippi valley flooded area are now dependant for their daily bread upon the kindness of their fellow citizens. LONDON, May 24.—"Diplomatic relations deliberately and systemically abused are a danger to peace, and his majesty's government have therefore decided that unless the House of Commons expresses its disapproval, on Thursday they will terminate the trade agreement with Russia, require the withdrawal of the trade delegation and Soviet Mission from London, and recall the British mission from Moscow."

In these words Premier Baldwin today announced the desperate decision of the British government to severe relations with the Soviets. The Laborites vociferously dissented.

The Labor Party will move a vote of censure against the government on Thursday.

Activity at Chesham House.

As soon as the government's decision was officially announced, preparations for the impending departure to Russia was hastened at Chesham House, the Soviet Embassy. Four large new trunks were delivered there. During the day the officials were busy destroying papers and packing up, and callers had difficulty in obtaining admittance. In the City of London Soviet House, which houses the Russian trade delegation and Arcos, limited, similar activities were going on in the delegations section of the building.

The final portion of Premier Baldwin's announcement was:—

"The legitimate use of Arcos is not affected by these decisions and the

FRANCE TO JOIN IN SOVIET BREAK, PARIS BELIEVES

PARIS, May 24.—A break between France and the Soviet Union is likely to result from the Anglo-Russian break, French foreign officials intimated today.

Roumania, Italy and Holland are expected to follow the Anglo-French imperialist lead.

Georges Tchitcherin, foreign minister of the Soviet Union, here to see Briand, issued this statement tonight:

"It was agreed that I would see M. Briand before he left for London with President Doumergue last week. But there was no calculation in my delaying my visit to Paris until now, and I didn't wait for the Anglo-Russian rupture to see M. Briand.

"England's act is one of weakness. She is powerless to dominate the situation for which she was responsible. England has committed a regrettable act, regrettable, above all, for herself. If she is actually preparing an offensive against the Soviet, in concert with all the great powers, she will fail.

"She will fail, first, because we are prepared to counter-attack; second, because the great powers have conflicting interests. Up to the present, England and the United States have never been able to agree on a common policy regarding the aims in China or elsewhere. As far as France is concerned, I cannot see why she would want to imitate England."

AGENTS OF 33 MILLION DOLLARS

This series of ten articles, of which this is the third, deals with the organization of the industrial insurance agent and methods to combat the evils of weekly payment life insurance. This series is the result of numerous requests to publicize the details of the swindle and fraud to which the agent is subject to common with the policyholder.

By CHARLES YALE HARRISON.

ARTICLE III.

As soon as the industrial insurance agent divorces himself from the role he now plays as ardent supporter of the present iniquitous system and allies himself with the policyholders, all the ills which beset the weekly premium insurance business will automatically disappear.

In order to effect this divorce it is first necessary for him to revolt against the "fine system" which the "Big Four" employ in paying salaries and commissions.

In ordinary insurance, that is to say, in that form of insurance where the premium is payable annually, quarterly or monthly, the unit of calculation is $1,000 or multiples thereof. Thus, in referring to ordinary insurance policies one says that the policy is for one, two, five or ten thousands dollars as the case may be.

Tag It by Profit Rate.

With industrial insurance the premium is the unit. For example the policy is referred to as a twenty-five cent, a fifty cent or a dollar policy. As far as the company is concerned the weekly premium is the unit of identification.

When an agent assumes a collection route he is not only instructed to collect his "debit" and maintain the business in force on his books but in order to make a living wage he must write new business, both industrial and ordinary.

For the collection of his weekly debit he receives 12 per cent of the money collected. The average debit or route is in the neighborhood of $200 and the commission for the collection is therefore about $24 per week.

The method which the "Big Four" use in paying industrial commissions is so sharch and cynical in its operation that it is difficult for the layman to understand how a group of employees could tolerate it without open revolt.

Pay For New Prey.

Let us assume that the average agent writes a dollar a week in new industrial weekly premium. As remuneration therefore the company allows as commission 28 times the weekly premium. The agent writes one dollar in premium his commission is $28; if he writes $2 his commission is $56 and so on.

As the collection work does not pay the agent enough to maintain himself and his family in a decent manner he is compelled to solicit new business.

Fine For Lapses.

But against this commission is charged all business which lapses. If during the week that the agent wrote one dollar in new business 30c of old business lapses he only receives commission on the "increase" of business on his book, which in this case would be fifty cents. In this manner he actually receives payment on half the work he does.

For every dollar of old weekly premium which lapses on the agent's book he is charged $28 and this fine is deductable from his weekly salary. Consequently, there is a remunerative sword of Damocles hanging over his head and he must resort to all manner of specious devices to maintain his business on his books.

If the premium on a weekly payment policy is not paid for four weeks it lapses and the original commission paid is charged to the lapsing agent, irrespective of how long the policy has been in force.

Let us take the case of a fifty cent endowment policy which has been in force for nine years. When that policy was written, the writing agent received his "special salary." During the nine years the insured has paid in $234, because he cannot pay any longer he forfeits this cash, and in addition the company fines the lapsing agent $14. Not only does the policyholder lose his deposits but the agent suffers as well. The "Big Four" play no favorites when they swindle.

Fines Total Up.

Last year the four weekly premium insurance companies lapsed nearly 1¾ billions of dollars in insurance. Most of this business was in force under three years. Allowing $1 of weekly premium to each thousand dollars of insurance this means that the sixty odd thousand agents were fined over 23 million dollars in lapse charges.

Because he submits to this system of petty robbery the agent is compelled to work from 10 to 15 hours a day trying "to save lapses." Because of this system he pays money out of his own pocket in the foolish hope that the policyholder will continue to pay after the period of unemployment is over.

Use the System on Boss!

One can say quite conservatively that when this lapse and charge system is abolished all the evils to which the agent is subjected will disappear.

A knowledge of billion dollar corporations leads one to believe that it will not be abolished through the good graces of Haley Fiske, Edward Duffield & Co.

The agent must organize and demand that his interests and the interests of the policyholders be made parallel. He must be paid a living wage, his hours must be set and regular and allowing for night calls must not exceed those in other industries.

When he makes this demand of the "Big Four" let him remember Haley Fiske's words, "They all say 'No' before they say 'Yes.'" by local credit corporations in the U. S., Hoover announced.

Chamber of Commerce Shares Flood Loot

Advances from that source for Louisiana should approximate $5,000,000 he said. There are many other sources from which resources direct and indirect can be brought to bear, he pointed out.

The Bankers Between.

But this money will not be given directly to the victims of the government's negligence, Hoover made plain. It will be given to the bankers, organized into lending corporations, and then granted in the shape of loans, on good security, to the flooded farmers. For many years to come, collecting the mortgage payments will make the bankers and business men of the South aware of the trouble in the old prowers. "Its an ill wind that blows, nobody any good."

If it had not been for the storms, the flood and Hoover, a lot of Southern farmere would not have had to mortgage their farms, and the investment market thus been entrailed.

Undeserved Gratitude.

Louisiana bankers have formed a lending corporation with capital of $700,000, and with privilege of rediscounting in the federal intermediate credit banks up to three or four times that amount, Hoover has announced.

"I have been overwhelmed with an undeserved gratitude for such effort as I have been able to make in representing the President of the United States and in giving perhaps some leaderebip to the many forces which have been brougbt to bear on these problems.

"Sugar Bowl" Floods.

The five day fight to save Louisiana, from the Atchafalaya basin flood waters was abandoned today when a third cave-in along 700 feet of the east bank levee at McCrea drove the 1,500 defenders from their footing.

The first collapse of the McCrea levee occurred early Saturday morning, and another section caved in Sunday. The whole eastern section of the "Sugar Bowl" will be flooded.

For more than 48 hours following the Sunday break a desperate effort was made to hold the river in check with sand bags. More than a million bags and hundreds of car loads of dirt were dumped into the back-levee watere in an attempt to rear a new retaining wall.

Reports said that the levee crew escaped with their lives by racing through water knee deep to the highway some two miles to the south.

WORKERS HEALTH PARLEY TO FIGHT INDUSTRY PERILS

Conference in Cleveland Opens June 18

(By Federated Press)

"Trade unions responding to the call for a National Labor Health conference to be held in Cleveland June 18 and 19, show a determination to control the occupational dangers now taking an enormous toll of life from the ranks of organized labor," says a statement by the Workers Health Bureau.

The conference will bring together representative labor men and women from all parts of the country to work out a program for eliminating industrial hazards and saving the lives of the thousands of miners, steel men, stone cutters, building trades mechanics, chemical workers and others who are killed on the job every year.

"Anyone familiar with conditions in American industry knows that the number of workers killed and injured continues to mount at an alarming rate," says the Bureau.

Not Enough Inspectors.

"Accidents in construction work alone have increased 61 per cent in New York State in the past two years. In this critical situation the state has only 12 inspectors to cover 400,000 building trades workers, while the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry early in 1926, was compelled to call off all safety inspectors from other work and detail them to supervising construction jobs for an indefinite period in an effort to control the situation.

"State regulations, for the protection of workers, where they exist, are openly violated and ignored. In the majority of trades there are either no safety provisions at all or regulations so inadequate that they are futile. At least fifteen states have no Safety Code for the Building Trades, no law to protect tens of thousands of workers from the insidious danger of lead poisoning in the house painting trade, no regulations on a national scale to cut down the enormous and ghastly loss of life in the coal and metal mines. Wherever safeguards do exist these have been won only after organized labor has waged a bitter fight against the opposition of the paid lobbyists of employers, corporations and gigantic trusts.

"The time is ripe for concerted action by organized labor. Prevention is worth ten pounds of cure. Prevention of industrial accidents and occupational diseases is possible and must be won.

Ask For Delegates.

"The coming National Labor Health Conference to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, June 18-19, at the Hotel Winton, will bring together representative trade union delegates from all over the country, to unite on a program for gaining national, state and city control of industrial hazards: regulations, safety measures and health codes in all trades.

"Every trade union is entitled to send representatives. Elect your delegates at once. The first National Labor Health Conference is Labor's challenge to the hard-boiled indifference of the employers. Send in the name of your delegates immediately to the Workers' Health Bureau, 799 Broadway, New York, and do everything in your power to support the movement to win health protection for organized labor in the United States."

Referring to the tremendous growth of workers' and peasants' unions and their role in the revolutionary movement, Su Chao-chen said, "Organization has developed rapidly. More than 2,000,000 laborers and 40,000,000 peasants have been organized and these have dealt a death blow to the influence of the imperialists in China.

Part of World Revolution.

"We all know that the Chinese revolution is part of the world revolution. Therefore, the second purpose of this conference is to consider measures for uniting the laboring classes of the Pacific countries to help in China's struggle against imperialism."

It is rumored here that Chiang Kai-shek regrets his desertion of the Kuomintang and that he may ally himself with the Nationalists in their drive against Peking. It is not impossible, observers declare, that the Nationalists may make a temporary working agreement with him. This would not, of course, mean any sort of permanent alliance. Its object would merely be the elimination of the northern war lords from the picture.

Chiang Claims Victory.

SHANGHAI, May 23.—Chiang Kai-shek claims the capture of Pengpu from the northerners, declaring that he inflicted heavy casualties upon his opponents, estimating the northern dead at 1,200 and the wounded at 2,500. More than 10,000 northern prisoners are also claimed.

The Nationalists launched a three sided attack and declare that the northernere have withdrawn to Hsuchow, with Chiang's forces bot on their heels.

Five locomotives, two hundred railway care and a buge quantity of arms and munitions were captured by the Nationalists, these facilities now being available for the use of the Nationalists under Chiang Kai-shek in his northward drive.

Yangchow is also claimed to have fallen to Chiang, with Sun Chuan Fang's forces retreating to Hwainan.

COPS LINE UP WITH FASCISTS IN BRUTAL FRAY

Blackshirts Stab and Whip Workers

Guarded zealously by members of the New York police department, 150 fascists, 950 of whom were wearing the black shirt of Mussolini, were allowed to stab and brutally beat hundreds of Italian workere in the Greenpoint section of Brooklyn last Sunday afternoon.

Every fascist was armed with a knife that he carried on his belt and a long whip. The police made to attempt to stop this obvious violation of the Sullivan law, prohibiting the carrying of weapons by civilians.

The fascists had announced that they would leave their headquarters on Knickerbocker Ave. and Trutman Ave. at 2 p. m., but due to fear of meeting the wrath of the Italian workers they waited until 3:30 p. m. when 100 police arrived to act as their protectors. Three police cars led the procession, the end of the fascist line being guarded by two more. The other police reenforced by almost 50 detectives were strung out along the line, one policeman or detective for every fascist.

Woman Breaks Line.

When St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Wilson Ave. and Sydman St., was reached, the police closed up the entire block, only the supporters of Mussolini being admitted to the church service.

An Italian woman broke thru the police lines and tore the badge off one of the fascists as he was entering the church. When interviewed later, she said that the fascist government had murdered her brother because he refused to support that bloody regime.

Financial Barons Sore.

The whole labor world and a large section of the business and financial magnates desiring Russian markets are protesting against the action of the die-hard section of the cabinet.

In the course of his speech Premier Baldwin admitted that the mysterious "missing document" which served as a pretext for the raid on the Arcos offices could not be found. No one expected that it would be.

Anticipating the ratification by the House of Commons of the cabinet decision, the officials of the Soviet Union embassy at Chesham House this afternoon began preparations for their departure.

It Will Help U. S. Trade.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—Administration officials were deeply interested today in the action of Great Britain in breaking off diplomatic and trade relations with the Soviet Union.

If the Soviet Union carries out its threat to boycott English manufactures, it is probable that the German and American markets will benefit enormously, officials of the department of commerce pointed out. The U. S. S. R. is a gigantic customer for manufactured goods and some raw materials. The German and American markets afford the best avenue through which to obtain what it needs.

Cal Coolidge Back Home In 1912 Campaign, Says His Northampton Friends

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., May 24.—The claim that Calvin Coolidge signed a petition here in 1912 urging Roosevelt's candidacy for a third term nomination is called not desperate denials here from Republican leaders. They claim that he was too busy "pounding on the kitchen door" in his own campaign for state to bother about signing the anti-Roosevelt petition.

Coolidge made a house-to-house canvass, but was not ringing the front door bell. Instead he went hat in hand to back doors in order to make a better impression on the housewives.

CUT CIGARETTES GIVEN RIGHT TO TALK IN SCHOOL

Non-controversial Topic Is Given Okeh

Reversal of policy is shown on the part of the Board of Education of this city in the recommendation recently that its representatives have granted the American Civil Liberties Union a permit to hold a meeting in Stuyvesant High School. The subject of "New York City Since 1900" is the subject. The permission was given by Superintendent of Schools William J. O'Shea and Eugene C. Gibney, director of Extension Activities, who refused the Union's request last year and thereby precipitated a long legal battle over the right of the board to censor meetings in the school buildings.

Speakers at the meetings are to be Charles C. Burlingham, lawyer, former president of the New York City Board of Education; Professor John Dewey, professor of philosophy Columbia University; Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, executive secretary, Department of Christian Social Service of the National Council, Protestant Episcopal Church; Nelson S. Spencer, eminent New York lawyer connected with many civic associations, and Congressman F. H. La Guardia.

Schools Opened Again.

The permit is said to be a long step toward disposing of this moot question. Officers of the American Civil Liberties Union are jubilant because, they say, the action of the authorities clears the Union's name and recognizes its right to hold meetings in the schools. Forrest Bailey, the Union's director in a statement issued last night said:

"The fight the American Civil Liberties Union has been making to abolish the Board's policy of censoring meetings in the public schools has resulted in a 90 per cent victory. The school auditoriums have been opened to the Union by the granting of a permit for May 26th; the Union's name has been cleared of the charges made by Mr. Gibney and the Board last year.

"But there still remains to be settled the point raised by State Commissioner Graves' decision last December when he ruled that "controversial" subjects, such as "Old Fashioned Free Speech"; could not be discussed in public meetings in the schools. If this ruling stands the Board might as well close the school auditoriums to all, for practically all the subjects of the hundreds of meetings held yearly would be judged controversial. This is particuiariy true of the political meetings held there. The Board will continue to have trouble if this ruling is given their sanction. The American Civil Liberties Union has offered to cooperate with the Board in clearing up this phase of the controversy."

No Hot Issues Wanted.

The ruling of the Board of Education last June denying the Union a permit for a meeting on "Old Fashioned Free Speech" with Rev. John Hayes Holmes, John Nevin Sayre, James Weldon Johnson and Arthur Garfield Hays as speakere, was appealed to State Commissioner of Education Graves. Commissioner Graves sustained the Board on the ground that the subject of the meeting was controversial and declared that the Board had used its discretionary power properly in barring such a discussion in the schools.

The American Civil Liberties Union then made application to the Supreme Court for a mandamus compelling the Board to permit the Union the use of the school auditoriums. In April Justice Seeger denied the petition on condition that a public hearing be granted the Union in the event of another similar application.

Such an application is now pending before the Board for a meeting on September 14th in Stuyvesant High School on the same subject of free speech and with the same speakers as were slated for last year's meeting. The Union is represented by Samuel Untermyer and Louis Marshall.

The Political Situation in Germany

By P. B. DIETRICH (Berlin).

FOR the last three months the Government of the bourgeois bloc has been rolling down hill. Its governmental authority up to the present has fully sufficed to prove not only to the world at large but also the petty-bourgeois masses of the country, that it is preeminently an instrument in the hands of the big trusts and combines, a weapon against the entire working population of the country.

THE process of "rationalization" has been carried on in a more intensified form than before. The average level of production during the last three months has been maintained at the relatively considerable height it attained in the last quarter of 1926. At the same time, prices have been maintained on that level, too, so that the profits of rationalization have continued undiminished. This is proved, inter alia, by fact that by reason of the unusual increase in tariff rates at present by the German bourgeoisie from the home market, Germany's urgent desire to export to the world markets has markedly abated.

PARALLEL with the more rigorous continuation of methods of rationalisation in German economy, we have experienced a renewed general attack on the living conditions of the German worker. Though nominal wages have remained practically unchanged since September 1926, actual wages have declined, as is shown by the rise in the official cost-of-living index figure from 142 in September 1926 to 145.4 in February 1927. The low level of weekly wage rates is systematically exploited by employers for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear on the workers in regard to overtime and to sweated job-wage stipulations.

ADDED to the fall of actual wages, there is the rise of dwelling rents by 10 per cent., put into effect on April 1st, 1927, and the augmentation of the duty on flour from 10 marks to 11.50 marks per 100 kilogrammes, which in the case of a family of five means a surplus onus on the household of about 70 marks a year. Furthermore, the Government intends to raise the duty on sugar and is likely to accede to the demand of the agrarians for the prevention of the free importation of frozen meat, so that the meat prices, too, will again be caused to rise. Whereas new sources of profit are thus opened up for the employers and the big land-owners, the living conditions of the German working class have markedly deteriorated and will continue to deteriorate.

THE same tendency is observable if we regard the budget of the German Government, which occupied the Reichstag up to the time of the Easter vacations. The budget submitted by the Marx-Hergt-Keudell Government takes the entire German population to an aggregate extent of about 15,000 million marks, if we add the communal and other taxes to the main items. By far the greater part of this onus rests on the shoulders of the broad masses. The State budget is particularly characterized by the fact that the German army and navy figure at the tremendous sum of 760 million marks, while the expenditure for the so-called productive unemployment relief has been curtailed by 50 millions. The item for the technical emergency service was maintained at its old figure. On the other hand, the expenditure for child relief was abridged in comparison with the last budget.

The SOS for the benefit of necessitous teachers was struck off the list, the new budget than in the last. Yet but the so-called church funds, a subsidy for the clergy, figures higher in another instance to illustrate the character of the budget: By reason of the reactionary financial settlement, Bavaria received a special subvention of 45 millions for the purpose of covering its surplus expenditure for its swollen reactionary bureaucratic apparatus and its policy of subsidizing the church.

TOGETHER with the settlement of the reactionary budget, the bourgeois-bloc Government passed an emergency labor law, which provides for the following legal regulation of working hours. The stipulation whereby the eight-hour day can be lengthened to ten hours by a tariff agreement or by an official decree, continues to obtain. The ten-hour day can be exceeded even without any official sanction in the case of temporary work undertaken in emergency situations or for the purpose of preventing the waste of raw materials or the failure of the fruits of labor. The consequence of the emergency legislation passed by the Government parties is the yet greater possibility of exceeding even the ten-hour day. The regulation in regard to the payment of a wage premium for overtime now obtaining only in respect of a very limited number of industries, is to be abolished altogether. The time of Sunday rest, the duration of the night rest, the [illegible] by means of the emergency decrees [illegible] decided that the [illegible] officially cut at paying due [illegible] all for overtime.

IN a cultural sense, too, the reactionary elements have made considerable headway under the bourgeois-bloc Government. The law against the immoral and indecent in art and literature, the public entertainment laws against juveniles, the brutal persecution campaign against authors and publishers, the numerous lawsuits in regard to productions of art allegedly endangering the State, the persecution even of compositions and other employees of the printing-works, and the bullying tactics employed against the juvenile and children's movement all show that the Government of the bourgeois bloc is very ready to satisfy the demands of cultural reaction. A new coup, meanwhile, is being prepared by the bourgeois-bloc Government in the form of the educational law of the realm and the concordat negotiations, purporting to complete the clerification of the entire system of education from the elementary schools to the universities and to render the schools and the teachers mere tools in the hands of the clergy.

THE German bourgeoisie, however, is not content with the economic and cultural subjugation of the German working class. It is no mere coincidence, that at the time of the general political and economic offensive of the bourgeoisie against the proletariat, one week after the last of May, the Fascists from all parts of the realm should assemble in Berlin under the lead of the "Stahlhelm."

De Pinedo, Fascist "Flyer" Hops Ride On Sailing Vessel

LISBON, May 24.—The sailing vessel which has the seaplane of Francesco de Pinedo, fascist aviator-propagandist in tow is expected to reach Horta, the Azores sometime tomorrow.

De Pinedo was forced down yesterday while flying from St. Johns, N. F. to the Azores, enroute to Italy.

The reputation of the fascist aviator as a "brilliant airman" is being seriously deflated in the past few weeks, and it has become apparent that his flights are being utilized by him merely for propaganda for Mussolini and the blackshirts.

NEWS of Great Britain's break with the Soviet Union has just come over the wires. This is a serious move for the British empire, a move that may have dire results for the ruling classes of that country. While it is not well to indulge in a orgy of false optimism there is reason to believe that Great Britain was often in a much better position to easy a heavy diplomatic task than at present. Her business will lose millions of dollars worth of Russian trade, a loss they can ill afford to stand. It may mean a general election on the issue, with the use of tons of "red fire" by the tories. But in view of the record for forgery and burglary established by the present government the British voters will be unusually leary about believing their political propaganda.

IN the New York Times of May 19th, several lots of securities were advertised sold at auction, among them being the following: "6,000 rubles Imperial Russian government 5½% military short term coupon bonds, second series, issued in 1916." The lot sold for $8. The buyer of this collection of rubles should be placed under the care of a guardian lest he give the rest of his money to an oil stock salesman.

Boston Workers Tell British Consul What They Think on China

BOSTON, May 24.—Tory Britain's outrages in China were brought directly to the attention of the British consul here when scores of workers paraded in front of the consulate bearing a dozen placards, "China for the Chinese," "Let Cook Cook Churchill" and "Down with Tory Government Up With Labor" were some of the inscriptions.

The Workers Party of Boston, acting with the Kuomintang and other organizations, sponsored the picketing of the consulate.

The backfiring of a large truck in the same block, coupled with the picketing, struck consternation in the consulate. Frenzied appeals to the police brought squadrons down to "suppress the attack" on the British offices.

Bankers Trust to Control Affairs of Lindbergh in Paris

The Bankers Trust Co. yesterday took over the affairs of Charles Lindbergh, the New York to Paris flyer. The canny banking firm, which has large offices in Paris, will handle the deluge of commercial propositions being showered on Lindbergh to the tune of a million dollars.

"I haven't the million dollar itch," the boyish conqueror of the Atlantic air declared in postponing consideration of American efforts to commercialize his exploit. "I flew for the advancement of aviation and not for profit."

Economical Cal Coolidge yesterday offered to bring the flyer back from France on an American warship. But it developed that the "warship" would be either a destroyer or an old tub, the Scorpion. This antiquated converted yacht, if it attempts the voyage, may have to be towed into port, naval officials admitted.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Robinson "hoped" that Lindbergh would take a destroyer. Although willing to cash in on the hero's reputation by bringing him home on a warship, the government doesn't want to spend the money on sending a real battleship across for him.

General Pershing, in Paris to prepare for the American Legion invasion this summer, hailed Lindbergh as "an ambassador of whom we may all be proud." Pershing and the American idler crowd in Paris are cashing in to the full extent on Lindbergh's popularity.

London Junkers to Fete Hero of Air

PARIS, May 24.—Charles Lindbergh may accept the invitation of the London Aero Club and fly to London next Monday in the "Spirit of St. Louis," it was said tonight.

New Coal Crisis Is Now in Sight Says A. J. Cook

LONDON, May 24.—Another coal crisis is in sight. Mines are being closed continuously, short-time working in general in practically all the coalfields, and the vast number of men not taken back since the lockout ended has been swollen by many thousands of others thrown idle in the past few months. Wages have fallen and further reductions are indicated.

"We warned the government and the owners last year," declared A. J. Cook, secretary of the Miners' Federation recently, "that the reduction of wages and the lengthening of hours was no remedy for the situation then existing. Indeed, we urged that such a policy was bound to make matters worse."

He asserted that the mine owners are now engaged in an orgy of price-cutting in the export trade with the idea that they will thus extend markets and capture others.

Both Richards and Cook stressed the view that no real constructive handling of the situation can be expected from the mine owners. May have they any hope of the government, with last year's bitter experience still fresh in memory.

Government Workers of France Affiliate With Confederation of Labor

PARIS, May 24.—A decision has just been made by a majority of unions of French government civil servants to form themselves into a federation which will be included and be under the supervision of the General Confederation of Labor.

The conservative French press is indulging in lamentations that such an alignment many sometimes lead to the government workers "obeying instructions from an international body rather than from their own government."

Who are the Enemies of the Daily Worker?

NORMAN HAPGOOD in the introduction to "PROFESSIONAL PATRIOTS" points out that the reactionary element which speaks in the name of patriotism, "has its most important support among those who make money out of war and of holding down standards of labor."

Is it any wonder that the Military Order of the World War seeks to suppress our paper? Is their enmity to the only American paper, which supports the struggle of the Chinese workers for freedom, and which is fighting the military ventures of American imperialism, not to be expected? Is it not clear that the Military Order of the World War, with all their titles and gold braid, is fighting The DAILY WORKER in the name of the Open Shop and the war upon labor generally?

The case of the Military Order of the World War against The DAILY WORKER will draw the curtain sharply. It will expose clearly the actual anti-social character of these patriotic organizations, in spite of the high-sounding titles under which they parade. At the same time it will reveal on the other side a solid phalanx of workers, row upon row, in a solid front against this attack of the enemies of labor. The bugle has blown, comrades. The Chinese Revolution Turns Left

By EARL BROWDER.

HANKOW, (By mail).—With the reorganization of the Chinese National Government, on March 11 at Hankow, and the immediately following capture of Nanking and Shanghai by the Revolutionary Army, the Chinese revolution has definitely entered a new phase of its development.

The COMMUNIST
1113 W. Washington Blvd.
CHICAGO, ILL.

This new phase is a deepening, an intensification of the revolution, at the moment of military victory, when all observers concede that it is but a matter of months until all inner-China will be in the hands of the Nationalist Government.

Communists Participate.

The new personnel of the Government, established on March 11, includes participation of the Chinese Communist Party. The Ministry of Agriculture is headed by Tan Pingshan just returned from Moscow where he represented the Chinese party at the recent Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. The Ministry of Labor is in the hands of Sou Chen-tsen, chairman of the All-China Labor Federation, chairman of the Chinese Seamen's Union, leader of the famous Hongkong strike, and member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party. Appointment of Communists to head these two posts, signalizes a deepening of the social phases, the foundation, of the Chinese Revolution.

Shoot From Irritation.

This turn to the left by the Chinese revolution undoubtedly comes as a surprise and shock to American and British imperialism. The diplomats of Downing Street and the White House had been flirting with the right-wing of the Kuomintang, and undoubtedly thought that their pretenses in the Nationalist movement were prepared to step in and seize power just at this moment of military victory. It must have been rather disconcerting to them to have events move in exactly the opposite direction. Their chagrin was expressed by the spilling of the blood of thousands of Chinese men, women and children by British and American gunboats shelling Nanking and Wuchow.

Chiang's Preliminary Treason.

It must be stated that the imperialists had reasons for their reactionary hopes. On March 20, 1926, while the Kuomintang was still confined within the Province of Kwantung so far as power was concerned, where the British guns could reach every strategic point within a few hours, the right-wing in the Party executed a coup d'etat, under the leadership of General Chiang Kai-shek, head of the military forces and the Whampao Military Academy. From that time on, Chiang Kai-shek assumed all power in the Party, expelled the Communists from all official positions, and forced the elected chairman of the Party, Wang Ching-wei, into exile. British and American newspapers suddenly began to speak in a different and more friendly tone about the Nationalist Government. And when Chiang Kai-shek became marshal of the Northern Expedition, which swept thru China in the summer of 1926, and occupied the Wu-Han cities in November, the imperialists thought the right-wing was completely in power in the Kuomintang.

CHIANG'S NEW LEADER

Under such conditions, how was it possible to effect such a radical change as we now see in the Kuomintang? How was the right-wing defeated? And what is the present danger of a military coup against the Nationalist Government? What are the perspectives of the Chinese Revolution? The following is an attempt to find the answer to these questions in the expressions of the Chinese masses themselves:

It was when the northern expedition of the Revolutionary Army marched from Kwantung, thru Honan, and Hupeh, that the forces were prepared which have now overthrown the dictatorship of Chiang Kai-shek in the Kuomintang. These military victories have been hailed by bourgeois writers as "miraculous"; but the "miracle" lay in the revolutionary mass of the occupied provinces, who were only waiting the opportunity to rise against their militarist rulers. In many places, indeed, the Army did not have to fight, finding that the mere news of their advance had been taken as the signal for the uprising of the people, who drove out the militarists.

Organize Unions.

Close behind the advancing army, came the organizers of the workers into the All-China Labor Federation, and the peasants into the Peasants' Union. In less than a year, more than a million new members of the trade unions, and seven million peasants in the Peasants' Union were mobilized. With this organization began the real process of revolution—destruction of the basis of power of militarism, the syndicate, corrupt magistracies and gentry of the villages—and an ever more widening of the basis of the revolutionary power. From Canton, under the guns of British Honghong and close to the seacoast, the National Government moved to Wu-Han—Hankow), having under its feet a solid ground of help China, with the many-million masses organized under its direction. Once more it became possible to openly struggle against the forces of counter-revolution entrenched within the revolution itself!

Beginning of the Struggle Against Chiang.

The issue upon which the struggle between right and left began was strangely enough, the question of moving the seat of Government to Wu-Han. After agreeing to the move, Chiang Kai-shek caused the official heads of Government to stop in Nanchang, Kiangsi, while the majority of the Kuomintang Central Committee were in Wu-Han, with the ministries of Foreign Affairs, Finance, Communications, and Justice. Delay followed delay in completing the move. The Central Committee members in Wu-Han set up a joint conference to transact government affairs. Chiang Kai-shek in Nanchang, after greeting the joint conference and making proposals to it, changed his mind and denounced it as an illegal body. After negotiations, it was agreed in Nanchang to move to Wu-Han on February 9th; when that date arrived, postponement was again made until the 10th; on that date it was again postponed. Whereupon, at last opened joint conference in Wu-Han, it was decided that the Central Kuomintang and the Nationalist Government should both begin office to succeed the Joint Conference without further waiting. But Chiang Kai-shek sent out a telegram over the country declaring that the central committee had not moved to Wu-Han. At the same time, the Kuomintang was circulated with telegrams stating that the plenary conference of the central executive committee had been cancelled.

Tory Government of Forgery Takes to Suicide.

Insane with fury at their utter inability to stabilize the country, the Baldwin-Chamberlain-Hicks government of forgery has traversed the path from madness to imbecility. The decision of the tory cabinet to abrogate the Russian trade agreement and break off diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union was expected. It was the inevitable climax of the policy of forgery inaugurated even before they got into office.

Their madness is born of desperation. British diplomacy, widely heralded as the most astute on earth, becomes downright insanity in face of the steady decline of Britain as the first world power. No matter how stupid the diplomacy of the past, the power of Britain could make it appear invincible. Today, no matter what is done to salvage the economy of Britain, it appears futile and foolish.

The conspiracy against the Soviet Union, launched at Locarno by Chamberlain as his first act on an international scale, went on the rocks in face of the irreconcilable conflicts between the European nations. His attempt to organize a bloc against the revolution has not been a howling success. Every subsequent attempt to maneuver on an international scale has likewise failed. Instead of gaining recruits Britain became more isolated; was compelled more and more to go it alone.

Its maneuvers in Persia, Irak, Turkey in order to maintain its oil concessions for the Royal Dutch Shell have been defeated by the European agents of the great American trust, Standard Oil. Baku oil in Russia is beyond its reach and even there the Standard is in a superior position to Britain. Its failure in China to induce other nations to play its game has only added to its desperation. The final blow was delivered at Geneva when the American delegates refused to follow British policy and took a favorable turn toward the Russians. The revolt of the working class in England develops in inverse ratio to the loss of prestige in Britain's imperial domain. Unable to overcome the contradictions that history itself has placed before it the tory government tries to smash its way through. It perceives Russia as the great obstacle to its continued colonial domination, hence it has from the beginning of its infamous career conspired to isolate and crush the revolution, only to be met with failure abroad and increasing hostility on the part of labor at home. The shutting off of super-profits from the colonies makes impossible the bribing of a sufficiently large strata of labor to ensure domestic tranquility, hence the threat of a revival of the general strike movement. The tories meet this with the introduction of the anti-strike bill.

The Arcos house raid was designed with a two-fold purpose: To divert attention from the trade union bill and to endeavor to provoke Russia. It failed of both objectives. But once such a desperate step had been taken there was no possibility of dignified retreat. The final break was a matter of course.

Most amusing is the declaration of the Baldwin forgers to the effect that Arcos house was a center of conspiracy against the United States as well as Britain. That is a crude attempt to embroil the American government in the mess. But the American imperialists have their own little game to play and they are meeting with considerable success. They know that the trade formerly conducted with England will be transferred to the United States and Germany, financed for the most part by American capital. Present indications are that the American policy towards Russia is undergoing modification. As the struggle in the Near East for oil becomes more acute between the British and American trusts the policy of the government must change to conform to the demands of Standard Oil and the National City Bank.

England faces a world wherein its own markets are becoming smaller, while the American market is growing larger. Its break with Russia means a greater intensification of this condition. It also means more unemployment for the workers in the machinery, metal, electrical and other industries that have produced much of the exports to Russia. So, both at home and abroad the economic situation becomes worse and must inevitably have its political reaction.

This move against Russia, which will be instantly recognized by British labor as a further move against the already miserable standard of living, will evoke retaliation on the part of the working class. The agitation of the Communist Party of Great Britain for a new conference to elect a new general strike committee will receive tremendous impetus because of this imbecile act. Councils of Action will be formed throughout industrial England and the fight that has been concealed beneath parliamentary futility will burst forth into the white hot flame of the class struggle and seal the doom of the government of forgery.

Silence Regarding Political Career of Lindbergh's Father.

The Washington representative of The DAILY WORKER informs us that correspondents of several large newspapers, among them The New York Times, prepared stories for their papers dealing with the anti-war activities of young Charles A. Lindbergh's father, and that these stories were suppressed on the ground that "they are not desirable at this time."

The elder Lindbergh, though elected on the republican ticket, was one of the few insurgents who refused to follow in the wake of the maniacal hordes who plunged this country into the late war in order to make the world safe for the investments of the House of Morgan. For daring to challenge the holiness of the cause of Wall Street he was set upon by the jackal pack of professional patriots and blackguarded as a pro-German spy and traitor. Millions of dollars were spent to defeat him as non-partisan league candidate for governor of the state of Minnesota. During this hectic period young Lindbergh, now acclaimed for his aviation achievement, was sixteen or seventeen years of age and was reviled by local yokels as the son of a disloyal father.

The memory of his father's heroism must still have a profound effect upon young Lindbergh when the war-mongers fawn upon him and endeavor to capitalize his achievement for jingo propaganda. If his intelligence transcends that of an experienced mechanic and enables him to perceive political value he must despise these slimy creatures who want to use him as bait to induce other young men to serve as cannon fodder for the rapacious aims of American imperialism.

Why doesn't the Times and the other spokesmen for Wall Street publish the facts regarding the father of the aviator? They published column after column of diatribes against him when the war was on, and indulged in patriotic rejoicing when he was defeated by the plunderbund. The answer is plain. They would rather not have the public know that a popular hero could be the son of a father who had the courage and the intelligence to defy the pompous hypocrisy of the late Woodrow.

They laud the young man as a synthesis of all that is best in American manhood. It would hardly do to admit that he is but one generation removed from one who, less that a decade ago was branded by the one hundred per centers as all that is abominable in the patriotic scheme of things.

Young men who think they may emulate Lindbergh would do better for themselves and their class if they would also include the father among their heroes—if heroes they must have.

RUTHENBERG ON THE IMPORTANCE OF RECRUITING NEW MEMBERS

By JACK STACHEL.
(Acting General Secretary New York District Workers' (Communist) Party)

In the present Ruthenberg Drive to enroll new members into the Party it is worth while to state how important Comrade Ruthenberg himself considered the recruiting of new members into our Party.

Comrade Ruthenberg last words were "Build the Party." One could hardly imagine that Comrade Ruthenberg would fail to make these words his last will. For Comrade Ruthenberg never at any party mass meeting or Party membership meeting failed to urge the comrades to build the Party, to strengthen the vanguard of the proletariat.

I do not recall a single time that I came to Chicago, or when Comrade Ruthenberg visited the New York District Office, that he failed to ask how many new members we had taken in during the month. I remember that prideful smile that would come over him when the number I mentioned were satisfactory. Likewise there was always the gentle criticism coupled with suggestions for improvement when the number I stated did not meet with his approval.

Ruthenberg As Organizer.

Comrade Ruthenberg attached the greatest importance to the every day detail organization work of the Party. While he was busy writing the programs of the Party, formulating its policies, and leading the Party, he was never too busy to write the most detailed letters to the District Organizers, on the every day problems of building the Party, increasing its membership and the circulation of its press.

In the present Ruthenberg Drive for new members, our Party does not look upon this campaign as an isolated event in itself. This campaign is based on the mass activity of the Party and is connected up with it organically. It is on the basis of the work of our Party in leading the struggles of the masses that we appeal to the workers of this country to join our ranks. We also do not fail to point out that Comrade Ruthenberg symbolized the growing revolutionization of the masses of this country and the struggle for the interest of the American workers as a class, and particularly of his anti-war record.

Our Party membership and particularly our functionaries in their work in the Ruthenberg Drive must work in the spirit of Comrade Ruthenberg. The importance that Comrade Ruthenberg gave to the recruiting of new members must be the importance that every active member of our Party gives to the Ruthenberg Drive for the recruiting of new members.

Many New Members.

The drive thus lasting for about 5 weeks in this District has already brought into the Party over 300 new members. This is a good beginning, but this work must be manifoldly intensified in order that we may carry out this Ruthenberg Drive in the point of Comrade Ruthenberg.

Letters From Our Readers

Reading the article of Fred Harris (as printed in The DAILY WORKER of May 17) one is lead to believe that Cleveland is an oasis in the desert—as far as jobs are concerned.

Being one of the many thousands that have been tramping the city for work, I quite disagree with him that "on the whole the labor situation is fair."

It isn't so very many weeks ago that the American Plan Association's own figures showed an army of 50,000 unemployed.

The one thing on people's lips is not that the carpenter got a dollar a day raise (that's all newspaper talk, and Fred Harris should know that), but are you working?

All construction job entrances have the same sign "No Help Wanted." Factories refuse to interview you when seeking jobs. Department stores located all along Euclid Avenue, sandwiched in between large banking houses and the hotels, including the "Statler," refuse even to allow anyone seeking employment to fill out application blanks.

Employes working for bosses for years (in my case six years) are being constantly laid off, and others substituted who work for nearly half.

I know of cases where men who have worked anywhere from 10 to 21 years were laid off with only an hour's notice, and others are taking their places for barely an existence.

Comrade Harris must have passed through Cleveland pretty fast, not to have noticed that:

1.—All the employment offices, including both city and commercial, are packed to the doors every morning with men and women seeking work.

2.—The large number of stores going out of business on account of conditions.

The chain stores in all lines are driving the small store owners out of business, thereby swelling the ranks of unemployed.

I just got back from going the rounds of factories. Speaking to an employe of the Sterling Brass Company, I find they make $.40 cents an hour. The Verden Company pays $.35 an hour. Department stores are paying the male help $15.00 to $22.50 a week; and its female help $12.00 to $15.00 a week.

Charitable organizations are overwhelmed with applications for relief. Hospital clinics are crowded with people seeking free medical care.

Such is my idea of conditions in Cleveland, and I hope you will print this to correct the idea that Fred Harris' article puts into the minds of The DAILY WORKER readers.

INTERBOROUGH NEED TAMMANY HALL GANG TO PUT OVER BIG CONTRACTS

F. Sullivan, then president of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, had sent a memorandum to J. P. Morgan & Co., bankers, outlining the details of the interview. Shonts had had with the then mayor of New York, Gaynor, in which the latter, the city counsel, Control No. 1 and No. 4 was under discussion.

"It is true," says the memorandum, "that the loss would not break the city of New York, as the city could afford to absorb a deficit of ten or twelve millions per annum and not go into bankruptcy, but the Interborough would go broke the first year if it undertook to do so." (Vol. III, p. 684.)

The traction companies saw pretty clearly what they were putting over on the city. Were the city officials equally clear about the plunderbund?

Who represented the city in drawing up the dual subway agreements? Among others, a certain gentleman by the name of Leroy T. Harkness, who at the time was the assistant counsel of the Public Service Commission.

The Gold Dust Twins.

Who represented the Interborough Rapid Transit Company in drawing up these contracts? A certain gentleman by the name of Richard Reid Rogers, chief counsel of this enterprising concern.

Suppose you were to bunt up an old telephone book say of the years between 1920 and 1924. Now turn to the name of Harkness, Leroy T.

63 Wall St.

What address does the telephone directory give for Richard Reid Roger?

Bowling Green 1097.

Remarkable Coincidence!

Are not the address and the telephone number the same for both men?

Yes, the address and the telephone number is the same for both men!

What bonus did Roger receive for putting over the traction swindle?

The records show that Roger received a bonus of $50,000. This amount as will be shown, together with the other, much larger bonuses, were later charged up and paid for by the city!

What bonus did the assistant counsel of the Public Service Commission receive as his share for helping to put over this monstrous traction deal on the people?

Share Ia Graft.

The records do not show any direct evidence of such a "bonus" but anyone would be more than an unsophisticated child who would doubt that under the conditions Leroy T. Harkness shared with his partner the graft which was paid all around in the transit sell out.

But this is not all! If you turn again to your faithful directory you will find the name of one Abel Blackmar. Blackmar was then and is now one of the directors of the Interborough. Now if during the years of which we are speaking you had troubled yourself to take the elevator to the sixth floor of 34 Nassau St., you would have seen underneath the name of Blackmar printed in gold letters the name of Leroy T. Harkness, legal representative of the people in 1913, but at the time you were looking at his door, the sworn defender of the people's interests as a member of the New York State Transit Commission to which he was in 1921 appointed by Governor Nathan L. Miller, fondly beloved child of the traction barons. In other words the founding of the 1913 Public Service Commission and the member of the 1921 New York State Transit Commission was a law partner of the Interborough director, Abel Blackmar!

McAneny Himself.

When in March of 1913 the traction plunderbund, which was then formed, it had to receive the consent of the Public Service Commission, the sanction of the city Board of Estimate. The chairman of the Board of Estimate and president of the Borough of Manhattan was at that time George McAneny. McAneny is an old time grafter whose squeal for cunning and brazen boldness in corruption is yet to be discovered. McAneny, second to Harkness, was responsible for putting over the traction swindle.

Testifying before the legislative committee in 1916, McAneny had the audacity to admit that the Board of Estimate accepted the final responsibility for the financial terms and approving of the contracts" (Vol. 29, Joint Committee to Investigate the Public Service Commission, 129 Session N. Y. Legislature, page 493). McAneny also testified that "we worked together with the Public Service Commission." (Ibid.)

Given Fat Job.

McAneny was another who in 1921 received an appointment on Governor Miller's notorious Transit Commission at the salary of $15,000 per year. The method which these artful grafters applied in trying to put over the "unification" plan on the city during their years of holding office will be explained in another article. Their connection with the present situation will also be explained.

First, however, it will be necessary to give some additional facts of the methods and tools employed in putting across the BILLION DOLLAR swindle on the people of New York. When these have been given it will be easily seen that the gang which is now plotting to put over the 10 cent fare steal is the same gang, with some additions, which was incorporated in 1913, and which put over the plunderbund of that year.

Stowaway Tells of Brutal Treatment Received on Boat

Brutality on the high seas is being recited to Judge Moskowitz in the Brooklyn United States district court by Jonathan Gibson, 21-year-old Negro who is suing the owners of the S. S. Princess May for $100,000.

Gibson, a tailor by occupation, boarded the Princess May on May 19 as a stowaway at Kingston, Jamaica, in an attempt to reach the United States. According to his story told to Judge Moskowitz he was discovered when the boat was at sea four days. Gibson told how his hands were manacled behind his back and the handcuffs attached to an upright stanchion at a point level with the deck rail. Gibson, being short, the stanchion kept his hands well up. Every time the vessel rolled, he testified, the deck fell away from his feet and he was left suspended by the handcuffs leaving him in agony until the ship righted herself.

Bingo Tricks Are Taken Up by Bosses

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., May 24.—Against the Socialist Labor Candidates, large meetings were addressed and distributed with the small hand bills reading: "Vote for Comrade Johnson, one of the greatest Americans to "reign." In a hand bulletin the bosses says that the comrade can lead the house altogether if it so desires.

The worker received $30 as their bonus last Christmas. In the past they received $500 for a whole year's "faithful work."

SEEK TO BREAK PIPE STRIKE BY BRINGING SCABS

3,000 Strikebreakers Is Bosses' Threat

Brooklyn plumbers were sitting tight today watching the new move of the Master Plumbers' Association in its threat to bring 3,500 strikebreakers into the borough to start work Thursday.

Officials would not comment on the latest move of the bosses but members of the rank and file expressed doubt that the scabs from nearby cities would be able to carry on work delayed since April 1, when the union went on strike.

Advertisements carried in the New York World and other papers invited scabs to go into the Brooklyn strike, but few responded to the lure.

Disgusted by the failure of the Building Trades Employers' Association lockout of city plumbers to break the back of the Brooklyn strike, the Master Plumbers themselves have taken active charge of the situation. In addition to the 1,500 strikebreakers billed to be on the job Thursday, 1,500 more will be obtained by next week, Jacob Stockinger, president of the Master Plumbers declared yesterday.

Scour Other Cities.

The scabs are being recruited in Philadelphia, Boston, Newark and other points outside the city, according to Stockinger, but Brooklyn plumbers do not believe that more than a few hundred can be obtained for actual work, once they find out conditions here. An aggressive fight to protect their jobs is promised, by Local 1.

Nearly a thousand building trade workers, meeting in Co-operative Hall, 347 E. 72nd St., pledged themselves Monday night to support the Brooklyn plumbers. Nearly half the audience was composed of plumbers' helpers, who called the meeting.

The president of the Alteration Electrical Workers' Union told the plumbers' helpers they would not touch work on which non-union helpers had been employed. Members working with scabs will be disciplined, he promised.

Back is Passed.

A reply from the International officials to telegrams from the Plumbers Helpers' Association declared that the question of affiliation would be taken up at the November meeting of the International executive board. The helpers have been demanding admission to the International.

LOCKOUT NEAR IN DISTRICT 2, UMW; BOSS WANTS CUT

Entombed Workers Still Try to Get Pay

PHILADELPHIA, May 24 (FP)—Wages of 15,000 miners and drivers in the Pennsylvania Anthracite, are at stake in a conference going on now.

Led by Charles O'Neill, union president of District 2, United Mine Workers, now president of the Association of Bituminous Coal Operators of Central Pennsylvania—the employers are demanding large reductions in day pay and tonnage rates.

District Lock-out.

The conference is of national importance. Central Pennsylvania has not yet joined the national strike and lockout. Since April 1 it has been on a truce with the operators, in accordance with the policy of international president John L. Lewis, permitting any coal group to continue at the Jacksonville rates during the national suspension. But now the central Pennsylvania operators are talking of a district shutdown unless their demands are granted.

Twenty volunteers are wanted to sell literature and help with the collection. Those wishing to help should report at Webster Hall, 7:30 p. m.

Injunction Hearing on Garment Board Members Postponed

The hearing of the contempt charges brot against the officials of the Joint Board, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union by The Association of Dress Manufacturers, Inc., was postponed yesterday by Judge Erlanger in Part 1, General Sessions until Friday morning.

Louis Hyman, Charles S. Zimmerman, Julius Portnoy, Joseph Boruchowitz, 16 business agents and representatives of the Joint Board are covered in the complaint.

They are charged with violating an injunction given the bosses March 24 prohibiting the workers from picketing and carrying out other regular functions of a trade union. Many workers who have been arrested as a result have been discharged in magistrate's court with the assertion that that court has no power to enforce an injunction. This has resulted in the recourse to the higher court, in an attempt to stop the picket lines.

Louis B. Boudin is attorney for the union. Isador Ginsberg being the bosses lawyer.

Brownsville Y. W. L. Hike and Play Baseball

The Brownsville Section, Young Workers League will hike next Sunday. All those who want to join them should be at their headquarters, 63 Liberty Ave., Brooklyn, 7:30 a. m.

According to M. Shapiro, sports director of the section, a baseball game will be played when they reach their destination at Silver Lake.

Shapiro declared that all young workers who are able to play base ball should get in touch with him at the section's headquarters.

government is prepared to make all arrangements for ordinary trade facilities between the two countries."

Question of Trade.

Before the House of Commons passed to other business, however, the Laborites indicated they do not take the question Thursday as to whether ordinary trade can be obtained under the altered circumstances.

The Premier's statement, though expected, caused a tremendous sensation throughout the country. The government's strong action is hailed by all factions that for several years have vigorously prosecuted a "clear out the reds" campaign, but former Premier Ramsay MacDonald who arrived in London from New York too late to listen to the Premier's announcement, intends to lead the Labor Party in an attack on the Tory policy. He will declare that expulsion is a sign of weakness which will not terminate Red propaganda, and that the now reviving business of the country will receive a serious set-back.

Scotland Yard There.

It was a tense and crowded house that listened to Premier Baldwin's statement, and the galleries were jammed with officials, among them were the police chiefs, General Horwood and Sir Wyndham Childs, who conducted Scotland Yard's raid on Soviet house.

The Premier contended that the evidence in possession of the authorities proved:

1.—Both military espionage and subversive activities throughout the British Empire and North and South America were directed and carried out from Soviet house.

2.—Both members of the Trade Delegation and the employes of Arcos have been involved in anti-British espionage propaganda.

SCRANTON, Pa., May 24.—The Central Labor Union here has asked Governor Fuller to make a full review of the Sacco-Vanzetti case. Affiliated locals are advised also to send protests to Fuller against the execution of the two workers.

N. Y. ENGINEERS SEEK PAY RISE IN PARLEY HERE

Play Lone Hand First Time in 15 Years

Flanked by vice presidents and system chairmen, Grand Chief Al Johnston of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was in conference yesterday with J. G. Walber, New York Central vice president, in charge of labor relations.

The 15 per cent wage advance which the 30,000 engineers are seeking on the eastern railroads is the subject of the conferences, which will continue today and for the remainder of the week. Walber is representing all the eastern lines, as well as the New York Central.

The last wage increase won by the engineers was in 1924 when the New York Central was forced to concede a 5 per cent rise, later conceded by all other union lines in the country.

The rise asked would represent about $1.50 a day increase over the present average scale of $250 a month for engineers on the steady runs of the bigger eastern lines. Wages are based on mileage and weight of the engine, character of the run and the various classifications of passenger and freight service.

The New York engineers conference is being held under the provisions of the Parker-Watson Act which call for direct negotiations preceding recourses to mediation and arbitration. The movement for higher wages, begun last fall, is the first in many years to be carried on by the engineers alone. Since 1912 the engineers and firemen have negotiated together, but last year the engineers ended the "Chicago pact" which provided a united front in wage negotiations with between the two engine service brotherhoods and the bosses.

Professional Patriots

This is the third instalment of "Professional Patriots," edited by Norman Hapgood from material assembled by Sidney Howard, co-author of "The Labor Spy" and John Fearing.

More than 26 organizations, including the National Security League, the National Civic Federation and American Defense Society will be discussed in these articles.

Professional Witnesses Against I.W.W.

The anti-radical propaganda of the Better America Federation has been directed conspicuously against the I.W.W. migratory workers in California, scores of whom have been imprisoned under the criminal syndicalism law for mere membership in the organization. The Federation employed two professional witnesses to testify in these trials.

At a Washington meeting of representatives of most of the patriotic societies engaged in upholding the constitution and combating radicalism, Dr. David Jayne Hill, former ambassador to Germany, thus addressed the late Louis A. Coolidge of Boston, the president of a new organization then holding its first convention, the Sentinels of the Republic:

"I am a Sentinel of the Republic and am very happy to join your great army, Mr. Coolidge. . . . The name you have applied to this organization, Sentinels of the Republic, has in it a sort of battle cry, a sound that ought to cover the whole of us. I do not see any reason why the Sons of the American Revolution and the Daughters and the rest can not all be Sentinels. I think they should be. I believe, Mr. President, that this great movement that you have started offers more hope than anything else I have seen of a possible uniting of strength and efforts of all these good patriotic people, and if from a central point of view, you and those closely associated with you could indicate what particular lines of work and development could be added to those which these various societies are now doing, it might greatly increase their efficiency. . . . So I say: good cheer, Brother Coolidge, and thank you much for dreaming out this dream of the Sentinels of the Republic. We will march with you. We are assigned to the watch towers where you direct us and God help us to be able to answer when you ask: 'Watchman, tell us of the night,' what we are doing and what we see and that the enemy has been overawed and has retreated." (Applause.)

A Paying Business.

The most persistent and thorough-going campaign of "exposure" of the forces of progress has appeared daily in the "Searchlight" column of the New York Commercial, edited by Fred B. Marvin, who outdoes all the professional patriots in lurid description. He is the author of several booklets whose contents and style may be judged by their titles: "The Menace of Bolshevism," "Underground with the Reds," "Are These Yours Friends?" and "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." His column is headed "Data on Subversive Movements Against the American Government; Political and Labor Radicals, Communists and Pinks."

The American Defense Society hasn't bothered to discriminate at all in its onslaught. Note the catholicity of one of its circular letters appealing for funds:

"Do you know that the radical's battle cry is 'To Hell with the government, to Hell with the law, to Hell with the right of any person to be possessed of any property?' Hundreds of thousands of Reds in the United States, all Bolshevists, no matter under what name they march—Anarchists, Bolshevists, I.W.W.'s—all the same. . . . The Reds' next weapon is the general strike, the first one they win spells the beginning of the end. Professional criminals will cooperate with them."

The Better America Federation of Los Angeles goes the Defense Society one better in describing as "bolshevistic" even the public water works and public service commissions. Says the Federation in a bulletin headed "S.O.S.," which, it appears, means "save our state":

"We believe that the protection of private property and of private business is vital to the progress of this state. We believe that public ownership and public control of business through a multiplicity of boards and commissions is socialistic and bolshevistic in tendency."

Although the Better America Federation levels its guns most openly at reds and pinks, it fights at heart on the front of protection for privilege. Its support comes largely from the power companies and public utilities of southern California, and it serves them in the guise of a disinterested patriotism. In the course of these efforts it almost defeated in the legislature a bill to make corporations bear their fair share of the taxes. It also attacked William Kent, former member of Congress, as a Bolshevik when he ran in 1920 for the republican nomination for senator.

This mixture of patriotism, anti-radicalism, and privileged business runs through the larger and stronger organizations. With the exception of the National Security League only the small fry are patriots on principle. The National Civic Federation, for example, represents conservative business in its opposition to minimum wage laws, child labor laws, old age pensions, and welfare legislation.

Source of Their Support.

None of the organizations makes public its contributors. None makes any public financial report of income and expenditures, not even to its own members. All financial operations are enveloped in secrecy. All of them have refused to give the facts to interested inquirers. Some have refused to give them even to members of their own committees, holding that those facts concern the executive committee alone. Only two of the organizations are endorsed by the National Information Bureau, an agency for advising prospective contributors about the trustworthiness and management of organizations making public appeals for funds. They are the National Security League and the National Association for Constitutional Government. The others have either refused to give information, or hold that they do not make public appeals for funds. Their appeals to selected lists are apparently not regarded as public.

This situation makes it difficult to state accurately where they do get their money. They spend at the lowest estimate $250,000 a year, that estimate being based on the size of their offices, the number of salaried employes, and the amount of printing they do. The personnel of their committees indicates that most of the money comes from very wealthy business men and corporations. Some proof has come to light to show these sources.

The recent investigation of the National Security League in 1919, undertaken because the League had spent large sums in trying to defeat congressmen whose patriotism was not of the League's brand, showed among the larger contributors ranging from "$700 to $30,000":

Nicholas F. Brady, president of the New York Edison Company; H. H. Rogers, of the Standard Oil Company and allied interests; William K. Vanderbilt, director in several dozen big corporations; T. Coleman DuPont, of the DuPont Powder Company; Henry C. Frick, of the Carnegie Steel Company; George W. Perkins, of the United States Steel Corporation; Simon and Daniel Guggenheim, of Guggenheim Bros., and the American Smelting and Refining Company; J. Pierpont Morgan and John D. Rockefeller.

Injunctions—Private Guards.

In order to put over what appeared to be a concerted drive to shut down all large mines, injunctions against picketing were secured in several counties, interfering with peaceful picketing and denying to the strikers the ordinary rights of citizenship. Evictions of striking miners from company houses were carried on on a large scale in many places. Private guard systems were employed by many mining companies, augmented and then pressed at once to strengthen them.

In fact they used every possible means to intimidate and coerce the miners into accepting a reduction in wages. In some cases old union men finally broke away and accepted the reduced rates; in others they were able to import men from other places in sufficient numbers to resume operations.

Meeting these troublesome months in addition to the task of assisting and directing the work of the Board Members and organizers generally throughout the district and preparing and issuing public statements both in reply to operators' letter, and in protest against their action I attended scores of mass meetings at strategic points in an effort to stem the open shop drive. Many days had to be spent in conference with attorneys and in court in an attempt to preserve the rights of the miners as citizens, and to frustrate frame-ups which were planned to railroad active strikers to jail. Whenever it seemed that my presence on the picket line would have any beneficial effect upon the morale of our people I made it a point to be there.

District No. 2 a Buffer.

District No. 2 is surrounded on practically all sides by non-union coal operations which makes of it a buffer district for the Central Competitive Field. We were among the first of the exposed districts to receive the impact of the open shop drive. We were on the firing line months before the drive was felt in most of the Central Competitive Field.

We met all of this pressure and strain imposed on the district out of the check-off until November 1925, when taking care of evicted families, paying relief to striking miners and securing legal aid to fight injunctions exhausted the district surplus and a district assessment was levied for several months.

The fight waged by District No. 2 was not only a fight to maintain the contract here but also a fight to preserve about intact what the Jacksonville agreement throughout the entire union jurisdiction. The district, however, with a sadly reduced taxpaying membership, financed and supported the fight almost entirely unaided.

It is interesting to note that during these three years of conflict in addition to the district obligations, the local unions of this district paid to the International in taxes and assessment $549,093.24. The financial assistance we received from the International during the period was a donation of $7,000 to the victims of two mine explosions and a loan to the district union of $20,000.

Because of mis-statements made at the International Convention, whether through ignorance or through malice, about the standing of District Two, I feel it is important to show in this report that District Two has just as great a proportion of loyal union miners as has any other district where great pressure has been brought to bear upon them. The statements made and impressions given at the International Convention, make it appear that District Two was the only district where great losses of membership occurred. But what is the true state of affairs? We can obtain it by comparing the secretary-treasurer's reports for the different years. For example:

	Average Tax Paying Membership.		Loss of
District	1923	1926	Membership
2	39,933	17,042	22,891
5	39,025	18,780	20,245
6	40,967	20,926	20,041
W. Va.	24,655	1,311	23,344
21	6,187	1,307	4,880

These are some of the largest districts. Many small ones suffered losses as well. The total number of bituminous tax paying members, according to the International Secretary-Treasurer's report on December 1, 1923, was 350,399; on December 1, 1926, tha total was 158,413—a loss of 196,986 tax-paying bituminous miners.

This huge loss in membership has caused a corresponding loss in union control. Whereas a few years ago union-mined bituminous coal made up the great bulk of all coal mined, at the present time approximately 65 per cent of the bituminous coal is non-union.

It is absurest folly to try to hide these facts. They are matters of public record and any interested person can and does secure them without trouble. Keeping this information from the membership is only lessening our ability to maintain our hard bought gains. We cannot fight a danger unless we are aware of it. Recognizing our weaknesses does not mean to surrender to them but it is absolutely necessary to know that we have a weakness before we can start to correct it.

UNION MINER — OPEN SHOP

Our first step then is to be frank with ourselves about our weak spots and then proceed at once to strengthen them.

Results of Lack of Policy in 1922.

The failure of our organization to frame and apply a policy which would bring under contract the 100,000 non-union miners who struck with the union in 1922 meant much more than the loss of the union of those 100,000 men. It meant the loss of confidence in the union on the part of the non-union men and gave the operators a greatly increased confidence in their ability to checkmate the union's moves towards expansion, and finally resulted in the campaign of union wrecking encountered after the signing of the Jacksonville scale agreement.

At the time of the Cleveland settlement of the 1922 strike, there was nothing insurmountable in the way of having the operators sign for all their mines, where the men were members of the union. I made an argument for that policy at the Cleveland ronference, and consequent events have proven the soundness of that argument. Such a policy carried out at that time would have meant the signing up of Consolidation Coal Company not only in Northern West Virginia, but also in Somerset County, Pa., and in Maryland. It would have meant a contract with the Hillman Company not only in the Pittsburgh district but also in Somerset County and in the coke region. The Bethlehem Mines Corporation would have signed for its Pennsylvania mines, many of which were non-union. Contracts with these three large corporations would have broken the resistance of the other operators and would have meant not only the 100,000 new members then on strike but the increased power and prestige of the union would have simplified the work of organizing other non-union fields.

This policy we argued for during the recent campaign and what we contended for at the recent International Convention. This does not mean, as Mr. Lewis inferred at that convention, that no contract should be signed unless the operators signed for all their mines regardless of whether the men are organized or not. What it does mean is that no contract should be signed with an operator unless he signs for all his mines where the men have signified their wish to belong to the union, as the Somerset miners had done in 1922.

MME. SUN GREETS THE WORKERS' DELEGATION

Speech of Madame Sun Yat-sen at demonstration of 10,000 women in Wuhan, called to welcome the International Workers Delegation.

Comrades:—You are here as representatives of the oppressed classes of the West, of the working classes of India, America, England and France. You have come to bring a message of understanding and co-operation to the oppressed people of China. You come to us as comrades and as comrades we welcome you.

I would like to express to you today the appreciation of China's women for the encouragement, support, and wise counsel you are bringing to us.

I wish to speak to you a few moments in the name of China's women. You, who are familiar with the burdens and problems of the oppressed, will, I know, be able to comprehend the extent of the oppressions borne by the women of China.

Everywhere, where women and men are suffering from oppressions, it is the women who are suffering most. Working women share with their men the economic oppression of their class. But this is not the extent of their burden. In addition to the oppressions of economic exploitation which make the problem of keeping alive a perilous gamble, women in most lands suffer from other bondages. They are deprived of political rights. Social laws discriminate against them, giving men indulgence but women sometimes almost unendurable hardship. Women, partly by laws, but more often by customs, are kept in a narrow rut of small duties, forced to lead restricted, starved lives.

The struggle of women is manifold. It is against economic exploitation which often, even among the poorest classes, grinds down the women even more than the men. Even where wages of men are so meagre that life is almost impossible, women often get still less. So their struggle is to work with the men for a better chance in life, and sometimes against the men, for an equal chance in life.

Their struggle is for equality in many fields, in wages, in the rights of citizens, in social relationship.

It is not easy to be a woman, and, perhaps, it is harder to be a woman in China than in any other place in the world. Our economic oppressions have been greater. We have been completely disqualified politically. Education has been reserved almost entirely for the men, and, socially, our life has been more circumscribed, more bound by the customs which have been designed to make a free life the unique heritage of men, and an unfree life the heritage of women than perhaps in any western land.

Today Chinese women are emerging. To the outsider it seems wholly miraculous, but although we who are working for the emancipation of Chinese women, recognize the miracle that makes this rebirth possible at all, at the same time we recognize the stupendous difficulties involved. The whole weight of traditional forces are against us, traditional economic forces, traditional international forces, and, in addition, traditional social and family forces. It is not easy to be a leader of Chinese women today! We are beset not only by the obstacles in the way of national and economic emancipation, but also those great obstacles of criticism, personal attacks, the open disapproval of the conservative classes who feel that women's life should be spent, as it has always been spent, either in the drawing room or the kitchen of the house of her lord.

We women of China, however, are fortunate in one respect. The Kuomintang which is leading us is determined that our oppressions, as the oppression of all exploited peoples and classes, shall end. Our program for emancipation receives complete support.

But the task ahead of us is great. In it, individual desires, individual emotions must be forgotten, merged into a common struggle. It is a time in China when great liberating movements that are above and beyond personalities are taking shape, and Chinese women leaders, from Canton, the birthplace of the revolution, to Peking, the stronghold of reaction, are throwing themselves wholeheartedly into the battle to rid both China and women from the bondage that has kept them enslaved for centuries.

You, delegates from the workingmen of the West, we know, have come to help us in this task. You bring to us a message of co-operation from the exploited millions of other lands.

I wish to tell you in the name of the women of China how much we appreciate your coming, how much we expect to profit from your help and advice, and to ask that you take back to the workers and the women of your homelands the greetings of the women of China.

The Left Wing in the Garment Unions

By MARGARET LARKIN

Today The DAILY WORKER begins publication of Margaret Larkin's The Left Wing in the Garment Unions. Issued by the Joint Board of the Cloak, Skirt, Dress and Reefer Makers' Unions, this study is not only an official account of the irrepressible dissension of the garment workers for a militant, honest, democratic union, but a remarkably factual history of the recent events in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

The DAILY WORKER series on The Left Wing, in pamphlet form, may be obtained from The DAILY WORKER Publishing Co. for 10 cents a copy. It is recommended that unions and labor bodies wishing a serious study of the New York situation order in bundle lots, at lower prices.

FOREWORD

In December of 1926, the General Executive Board of the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union issued orders expelling its four largest and most powerful cloak and dress locals, and the New York Joint Board. Although no formal charges were preferred, as the constitution of the Union prescribes, general charges were made in the press that the leaders of the locals and the Joint Board were "Communists" who, "taking orders from Moscow," had led the Union into "ruin" in an unnecessary strike," which had been lost because "mismanaged."

The locals and the Joint Board refused to submit to the orders on the grounds that the charges were untrue and the expulsion illegal, and attempted to make clear to the public what the points at issue really were.

They found, however, that the complicated nature of the situation made it possible for the officialdom of the International to confuse the public mind by a great mass of charges and counter-charges. Officials of the American Federation of Labor instigated a "campaign to clean out the Reds from the Garment Unions." The press was willing to accept "official" statements from the officers of the International and the American Federation of Labor while it ignored any attempts of the leaders of the Joint Board to present their case. Public forums were closed to the entire situation because of the attitude of the leaders of the International in refusing to debate or discuss the issues with Joint Board leaders present.

Press Channels Closed.

In spite of the fact that thousands of workers were flung into an internal struggle which weakened the Union and encouraged the employers to make constant inroads upon Union conditions in the shops, and that the mass of these workers supported the expelled Joint Board, all the usual avenues of publicity by which the situation might have been clarified for the general public, were closed to the Joint Board.

This history attempts to trace the underlying causes of the internal dispute which has had such grave consequences. It proposes to show how the reactionary element which has always been able to maintain itself in power by means of a "Rotten Borough" system, has been opposed by a growing progressive element since the early days of the Union. It records the development of an Administration policy of expulsion as a means of crushing all opposition, from the expulsion of a few individuals to the expulsion of entire locals and even Joint Boards. It enters in detail into the causes and conduct of the recent General Strike of Cloakmakers, for which the International has sought to place blame upon the Joint Board, although it was conducted jointly by the International officers and the Joint Board officers.

All Labor Concerned.

It seems inevitable that the entire labor movement of America must become involved in the present struggles. Already the "Red" hunting campaign has spread to other unions. It appears that no compromise is possible. Either the policy of expelling workers from trades unions because of opposition sentiment, political opinion, or what not, will triumph in the American labor movement or it will be crushed.

If a policy of expulsion should be firmly established in the labor movement, what would result? In localities where the workers expelled were in the minority, and the union strongly organized, they would either have to work on the status of scab labor or be forced out of the industry! In localities where the workers expelled were in the majority, there is danger that dual unionism might result, a condition which is repugnant to the ideals of the American labor movement. Although the struggle is spreading through the entire labor movement, the New York garment unions remain its focal point. It is with the hope of clarifying the situation for those friends of labor who have opportunities to obtain all the facts in this crisis, that this pamphlet is presented to the public.

What Passaic Faces

By SYLVAN A. POLLACK
Second Article

With the forces of reaction in the Passaic labor movement determined to force the issue against the progressive leadership of the local United Textile Workers' Union, a clear-cut statement of what should be their answer and future policy is necessary.

Is It Stuffing?

Will James, Starr, vice president of the Textile Workers' Union carry into effect his recent warning of a "housecleaning" that he made in a speech referred to before in The DAILY WORKER? Was his remarks made only to throw fear into the progressive forces, to act as a sort of warning, not to try and implant their ideas among the membership in other cities, or is his speech a prologue that will be followed by a bitter struggle in that union?

The answer to the above query must take into consideration a number of important points. The success or failure of the assault in the needle trades will to a very large extent be a factor in deciding the question. If Mc-Mahon, Starr and Co., see that the Woll-Sigman-Schachtman attack is a fizzle they will abandon their plans to destroy the Passaic unions.

On the other hand if the right wing were able to secure any degree of success in New York, they would be encouraged to broaden their scope of activities to the Passaic front.

Another factor to be considered is the Passaic locals of the United Textile Workers' Union. How would they react to a frontal attack on their regularly elected leadership? To what extent would they resist any attempt to take away the leadership that guided them to victory in the 14 months strike?

Without a shadow of a doubt the members of the Passaic Textile Union would fight just as bravely to defend their policies and leadership in the union as they did against the bosses and the police during the bitterly fought strikes.

Would Fight For Union.

Any attempt on the part of the McMahons and Starrs to carry on the instructions of Matthew Woll by eliminating any pretense of fighting spirit in the American trades unions will be ruthlessly fought by the Passaic textile workers.

The Passaic workers are today a part of the American Federation of Labor not because that organization made any move to organize them but because the workers under Communist leadership fought their way in.

Before the workers went on strike, the A. F. of L. and the United Textile Workers' Union made no attempt to organize them. Only due to the organizational ability and fighting spirit given the workers by Albert Weisbord and his associates it was possible for the workers even to consider a strike.

United Front Committee.

The United Front Committee that directed the struggle during the major portion of the strike was formed in spite of the American Federation of Labor, and only during the last few months as a result of a great deal of pressure, were the textile workers admitted into the A. F. of L. To enter, they had to pay a price many of them were opposed to—the stepping aside of the man who had organized them—Albert Weisbord, Communist.

Evidently the A. F. of L. clique realizes to their sorrow, that the textile workers are aware of the fact that the Communists are not any of the 57 varieties of bad and evil men that they would like them to be considered.

Not To Their Liking.

Viewing questions from the point of view of the entire working class is not to the liking of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats so the sooner it is squashed they believe, the more secure will be their seats. Of the American labor movement, for if the workers in one or two unions progress under left wing leadership it will result in other unions emulating them.

The Passaic textile workers face serious problems but they will meet them in an adequate manner, judging from past events.

They will fight to remain a part of the American Federation of Labor and at the same time follow a progressive line in their activities, likewise will they choose their own leaders and not allow any of their members to be sacrificed because they are not approved by the A. F. of L. machine.

After Great Struggle.

They became a part of the A. F. of L. after a great struggle and will continue to remain a part. The entire membership supports the progressive, left wing leadership and will continue to do so.

The forward-looking section of the American working class will watch with keen interest the events in Passaic and give the support their utmost support. The future will give the bureaucrats of the A. F. of L their acid test; they will have the choice of being eliminated in a battle to oust the left wing, or they will be exterminated as the left wing increases its support in the American labor movement.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

LINDBERGH, the young air hero, feted by the United States ambassador in Paris and congratulated by Coolidge and Kellogg among others, for his remarkable achievement in spanning the ocean without a stop, no doubt experienced a different sort of public clamor a few years ago when he accompanied his father to mass meetings under the auspices of the Non-Partisan league, when that organization was assailing the Wall Street bankers, railroads and speculators who were fleecing the farmers. The aviator's father was a man of courage, because it took guts to stand up against the raving and cowardly lunatics that were aroused to fever heat in those days by the propaganda of the capitalists.

IN those days the mob—created by the militarists—was ready to tar and feather Lindbergh's father. When Oliver Cromwell, went thru Ireland with fire and sword slaughtering children in the interests of the ruling classes of the sister island his motto was: "Nits shall be lice." The child would be the father of the future Irish rebel. The canting hypocrites of war days that hurled ripe tomatoes at Lindbergh's father would not be opposed to giving his young son the same medicine. Perhaps some day this young lad would also fight the enemies of the masses, of workers and farmers.

NOW, the interests that persecuted his father are showering favors on them. Overnight he has become the most popular man in the United States. How useful he can be to the ruling classes if they succeed in making him walk on the dotted line. His feat is turned into a talking point for American imperialism and his personality an advertisement for Wall Street's imperialist drummers. What the Prince of Wales is to British imperialism Lindbergh can be transformed into for American imperialism. And in view of the infantile development of the American labor movement and the consequent powerful position of imperialism it is more than likely that the young fellow will take the air for the ruling classes.

SO there is very little said about Lindbergh's father but much about his mother who is a sort of a gypsy-ter and has royal blood in her veins. She is not the kind of a woman who sits by the Jordan laving her hair in its waters, weeping while her son braves the dangers of the vacant spaces. She screws up her courage and sticks to her job. Because she has a mission to perform, and the devil help those who block her on a mission nowadays. In fact one would think from reading the capitalist papers that Lindbergh was conceived by a holy ghost. It would not look well for the two capitalist parties to have biographical sketches of the rebel of Minnesota running with an account of the great achievement of the conqueror of the air.

NOT to be outdone by their commercial rivals in the United States the British air ministry dispatched two daring flyers on a non-stop expedition to India. But the waters of the Persian Gulf claimed their craft and the lobbies of London hotels are now buzzing with satirical jibes at their cousins. The "blood is thicker than water" stuff does not stand up before industrial competition. A few days ago George Ade, one of our most prosperous humorists, expressed the opinion that "we" are very unpopular in England. "We" are.

AND why? Because the old, proud and stately British imperialist edifice is showing signs of needing the attentions of a repairman. Despite the loud howls of the sons and daughters of the counter-revolution and the friendly sons of George Washington represented by the Sulgrave Institution. The fact remains that those who sell goods in the markets of the world, whether they hail from the United States or America are in each other's jugular veins. Competition is the life of trade and the death of nations. Those who win can crow while those who lose must whimper.

WE have already commented on the nice things that have been said by American delegates to the international economic conference at Geneva about the delegates from the Soviet Union. The United States government does not recognize the government of the Soviet Union, but hesitates at hostages. Even while William Green, the servant of the dominant clique in the United States is slandering class-conscious workers, Soviet business agents are here talking the things over with Yankees who have things to sell. Talk is cheaper

SOVIET UNION BOYCOTTS GREAT BRITAIN

Morgan Dipped in Traction Graft

BANKER PUT HAND IN CITY'S POCKET FOR MILLIONS OF TRANSIT PLUNDER

Big Wall Street Firm Skimmed Cream of Graft in Floating Bond Issues

The Exposures Thus Far:

A secret deal has been entered into between Governor Al. Smith, Mayor Jimmie Walker, the executive editor of a large metropolitan newspaper and the traction trust to put over the 10-cent fare.

The taxpayers of the city have sunk over $300,000,000 in the subways; nearly $150,000,000 is the loss to date which the people have sustained on the incorporated traction swindle; over $11,000,000 per year is charged up on the city budget to cover the deficit for the city's part in the sell out.

The present so-called open transit hearings are a dummy proceeding to cover up the real issue. In due time those who are now apparently attacking the traction trust will come to terms with the plunderers and put over the increased fare steal.

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

The traction ring which put over the billion dollar steal made millions in graft by exploiting the construction and excavation work which this same ring under another name did for the city. The same old gang put over the dual contracts steal; but this was not by any means the limit of their accomplishment.

The financing of the whole operation, as has been previously indicated, was carried out by the open shop Morgan interests. Bonds were sold to cover the costs of the original construction work as well as costs of the proposed operation. The first fine rake off was accomplished in this way: The Morgan firm bought up the bonds, or more accurately it "furnished" the money for the bonds but instead of paying the Interborough the full par value of the bonds it allowed that company only 93 per cent of the amount for which the bonds were issued.

Now it must be understood that bonds are virtual mortgages on property. These bonds which are still in the possession of the Morgan banking interests are guaranteed by the land and materials of the industry for their full 100 per cent. In other words, the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. made an immediate rake off of 7 per cent. But this was only the beginning.

The Morgan firm did not turn the money over to the Interborough but kept it and paid it out to the Interborough only as it later needed funds for its current expenditures, building, material costs, etc. The Morgan bankers paid the Interborough 2½ per cent interest for the money which it thus held in reserve for the trac-

MINERS WIVES AT KINLOCK AID MEN TO EXPEL SCABS

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 25. — The Valley Camp Coal Company made an attempt to open its Kinlock Mine near Arnold, Pa., on the non-union basis Monday, May 23d. Energetic action on the part of the union miners and their wives made it impossible. As soon as the news of the company's attempt was made known a number of miners, together with their wives and daughters, came rushing in trucks from all parts of Allegheny Valley who from the very beginning of the strike have taken the side of the coal operators against the striking miners and their families.

The Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Company, which owns nine mines in District Five, opened its first mine on the non-union basis at Oprohalley, Pa., where about 200 men are reported at work now. More than three thousand men were imported by the company when they opened up the mine, but most of them leave the place as soon as they arrive and learn that a strike situation exists. Normally the mine employs nearly nine hundred men.

Honor Released Furriers and Bazaar Volunteers in Great Shindigs on Friday

To honor the nine union furriers recently released from prison, the Cloakmakers' and Furriers' joint defense and relief committee has arranged a novel social affair, to be given Friday evening at Star Casino, 107th St. and Park Ave.

A reception to the released furriers and the workers who helped to make the recent bazaar a stunning success will precede the ball. A short address by Louis Hyman, manager of the Cloak Makers' Joint Board will precede the long night's holiday revel.

Admission will be 75 cents, and 50 cents to the bazaar volunteers.

REORGANIZATION IN CLOAK SHOPS BIG UNION ISSUE

Chairmen Meet to Plan Joint Board Action

The shop chairmen of the cloak and dressmakers will meet tonight after work at Cooper Union. Louis Hyman, manager of the Joint Board, will give a detailed report on the reorganization plans that the manufacturers are now planning to put into effect.

The question of unemployment insurance and the contempt of court proceedings brot against the Joint Board officials will also be taken up.

In a statement issued yesterday, Hyman discusses reorganization. He points ont how with the co-operation of the right wing it is resulting in thousands of workers walking the streets jobless. The agreement is being violated wholesale by the manufacturers with Morris Sigman and his clique fundamentally to blame, he declared.

"During the last strike our main fight was against reorganization," said Hyman. "Finally, due to the sabotage and provocation of the Sigman clique we had to concede the clause on reorganization in the contract signed with the manufacturers belonging to the Industrial Council.

"Reorganization, according to the contract is to be put into effect only in those shops employing a minimum of 35 workers and guaranteeing at least 32 weeks' wages a year. It also has a clause forbidding the sending out of any work to other shops.

"The bosses under the contract are prohibited from discharging any workers for union activities. Those workers discharged under the reorganization plan are supposed to receive a week's wages. A labor harean was to be established to give the manufacturers workers to place those discharged.

"The contract has been taken advantage of by the manufacturers with the assistance of Sigman. The best union members are being discharged, especially those who have refused to register with Sigman's union.

"This step at this time is the last drive on the part of the bosses to break up what is left of the union. They have succeeded so far with the help of Sigman to bring the union to the state of demoralization.

"The results have been thousands of unemployed workers walking the streets with the only alternative of working in non-union sweat shops. The conditions grow worse daily. The unemployed tramp the streets without any relief from Sigman.

"Last year at this time the Joint Board paid out from the insurance fund three-quarters of a million dollars. On the other hand we see Sigman, with the aid of the bosses appropriating half a million dollars of the fund, belonging to the workers, for his own use.

"The Joint Board has called a meeting of the shop chairmen for Thursday night where consideration will be given to the question of reorganization and the handling of the contract on the part of the bosses. The meeting must furnish the means of action to be taken against the bosses who are collaborating with Sigman's union.

400 FUR WORKERS PUT OUT OF JOBS BY RIGHTS, BOSSES

Refusal to Register is Cause of Shutdown

JERSEY CITY, May 25.—The fur district today looked like Passaic a year ago as 200 police threw a cordon around Logan Avenue to help the fur bosses in their lockout of 400 furrier members of Local 25.

Every fur shop in Newark and Jersey City was closed down yesterday in a lockout engineered by the bosses and the international union against the workers of Local 25 who refused to register with the international. While Vice President Sorkin, in charge of the "reorganization" of militant Local 25, was declaring publicly that he is "working hand in glove with the bosses," the workers themselves flatly refused to have anything to do with the reorganization.

Only 10 members of the union actually registered with the international, resulting in Sorkin's decision to throw the remaining 400 ont of work. Not satisfied with obtaining the bosses' cooperation, Sorkin got the police department to blockade every entrance to the Logan Avenue fur shops.

Cops were stationed at every possible street and alley entrance and demanded that workers show registration cards before entering the Logan Avenue. Residents along the street were escorted personally to their homes.

A mass meeting of the locked out workers was held tonight at New Montgomery Hall to call a general strike.

When Sorkin and his assistant, Lucci, showed up in the fur district today, they were booed and hooted off the street. Lucci was chased out of a New Brunswick shop where he was attempting to sow disruption among the workers.

The International hopes to use the members of Brooklyn Local 58, also employed on rabbit furs, to break the strike of Local 25, but so far not one Brooklyn worker has signified his willingness to do the International's dirty work.

Injunctions Helping Cops Break Strike of Builders' Union

WORCESTER, Mass., May 25.—Police clubs and injunctions let the building laborers and bricklayers helpers on strike here today know where the state stands in industrial struggles. Twenty-two workers were arrested and jailed in connections with picketing yesterday while injunctions were being produced today to legalize police interference.

BRITISH MOVE ON HANKOW TO TAKE CONCESSION BACK

Japan Foresees Fall of Chang Tso-lin

BULLETIN.

LONDON, May 25. — Shanghai dispatches today said that a British warship had left Shanghai for Hankow taking twelve tons of barbed wire and hundreds of thousands of sacks for the making of sand barricades. The action is taken as evidence that the British are preparing forcibly to retake their Hankow concessions from which they were expelled by the Nationalists.

On the heels of this came a Tokio dispatch saying that Japan was alarmed by the impeding collapse of Chang Tso-lin's Peking government, and was sending a brigade to Shantung province with the purpose of taking over the Shantung railway.

PEKING, May 25. — Anticipating the success of the Nationalist drive against Peking, the officers commanding the imperialist forces here are planning to strengthen their garrisons at Tientsin and Peking.

General Smedley B. Butler, commanding the American marines in China, is in Peking making an inspection of the "defence" force here and it is regarded as likely that he will request the war department for the transfer of troops to northern cities which are the object of the Nationalist drive. There are 1,600 marines aboard transports in Shanghai harbor ready to leave for northern ports.

At a celebration of Empire Day, Sir Miles Lampson, the British minister in China, declared that British imperialism was "misunderstood," and that imperialism was "not meant to oppress them" but has as its "object the spread of civilization." The imperialist powers are "leading civilization" in China with 174 war vessels, it is estimated.

The conquest and exploitation of colonial peoples by Great Britain was celebrated by British business men and soldiers both in Peking and Shanghai. Forty warships, of eight nations, were decked with flags in honor of "Empire Day" at Shanghai while thousands of Chinese silently watched the parade of imperialist troops and the military planes circling over the city, reports from Shanghai state.

Cook, Mine Leader, Sees Alliance of Workers of Both Countries to Fight Die-Hards

BULLETIN

LONDON, May 25.—The Russian Soviet Embassy tonight issued an official statement deploring the decision of the British government to break off relations with Moscow.

"The British government's decision is of tremendous importance to the whole world," the statement read. "We cannot but express amazement and deep regrets that such an important decision was reached upon such flimsy pretexts."

MOSCOW, May 25.—Pointing out that the British abrogation of the Anglo-Soviet trade agreement would be a harder blow to the tottering British economic structure than to rapidly growing Soviet industry, M. Mikoyan, commissar of trade, declared today that his department would end all relations with Great Britain. The Soviet Union, he said, would liquidate all its activities in Great Britain as soon as possible and completely boycott Britain.

"In spite of Britain's violation of its engagements to the Soviet," the Trade Commissar said, "Soviet organizations in London have been instructed to fulfill all of its engagements already made.

That the House of Commons, dominated by the die-hards, will approve the decision of the Cabinet is regarded as certain.

"We will be able to stand the blow without great difficulty," said Trade Commissar Mikoyan. "The British will soon realize that greater harm has been done England than the Soviet Union. Despite the major place England has occupied in our trade we will rebuild our external commerce and will insure an immediate market in other countries.

"Baldwin is mistaken if he thinks that after expelling the trade organization that their functions will pass to British commissions and firms."

POWERS SPLIT ON RUSSIAN POLICY, BERLIN'S OPINION

BERLIN, May 25.—Political circles in Germany take a rather calm view of the Anglo-Soviet break.

The general opinion in informed circles in Berlin, which are in closest touch with both the British and the Russians, is:—

1.—There will be no war.

2.—There will be no solid anti-Soviet front of the western powers, which England supposedly is trying to create, for the reason that Germany is the necessary key state to such a front, and will never join it.

Germany, it is emphasized on all sides, will stay neutral at all costs.

The powers expect to repeat the Chinese performance in Russia, each pursuing its own advantage. France and America, especially, are expected to go after the trade that England loses.

The Baltic region, already trembled by its own problems, now becomes, more than ever, the battle-ground for Anglo-Russian flank attacks.

The Lithuanians arrested General Konstatin Kleszinski for alleged spying for Russia, while the lefts arrested and searched Russian monarchists. It is understood that these very active anti-Russian forces are maintaining connections with official England.

Pere Marquette Cuts 20% Stock Dividend But Can't Raise Pay

Directors of the Pere Marquette Railroad Co. formally declared a stock dividend of 20 per cent yesterday, the project having already received the approval of the stockholders of the road. Payment of the dividend is also subject to the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Six thousand Pere Marquette workers have taken a strike vote in force consideration of their demands for changes in working conditions. The company claimed that it could not afford the increased expense.

ANTI-IMPERIAL LEAGUE SCORES STIMSON 'PEACE'

Calls Upon Latins to Fight Imperialism

CHICAGO, May 25.—Denouncing the so-called peace in Nicaragua which American newspapers are acclaiming, as a peace of imperialist oppression, the All-American Anti-Imperialist League has just issued a statement calling upon the peoples of Latin-America to join hands with working class and progressive elements in the United States against American imperialism.

The statement urges the establishment of a Federation of Latin-American States and to express its aid to the growing movement for Latin-American unity to protect common interests. To its supporters in the United States, it proposes a sustained campaign for the termination of the U. S. intervention in Nicaragua.

Eleven secretaries heading the national sections of the All-American Anti-Imperialist League in as many countries signed the declaration as follows:

Cuban secretary, Jorge A. Pivo; Porto Rican secretary, Vincente G. Polanco; Central American secretary, Augustin F. Marti; Mexican secretary, Salvador de la Plaza; Colombian secretary, J. Zapeleta; Venezulan secretary, Gustavo Machado; Peruvian secretary, Octavio Vargas M.; Equadorian secretary, Juan F. Karolys; Brazilian secretary, Eduardo Mattos; United States secretary, Mannel Gomes.

"The 'peace' which the United States government has just established in Nicaragua marks another brazen advance toward the conquest of Latin America by Wall Street and Washington.

Peace of Slavery.

"It is a peace of slavery, a peace of oppression, a 'peace' resting on imperial violence and the shining bayonets of U. S. marines.

"Dr. Sacasa, the Liberal leader, is exiled from his country, in spite of the fact that he is constitutional President of Nicaragua and is supported by the overwhelming majority of the population. The usurper Diaz, active tool of American imperialism since 1909, is maintained in the presidency and receives a Wall Street loan to finance his government. U. S. military forces take over the police power of Nicaragua as a national constabulary.

"Diaz seized the government of Nicaragua in the winter of 1926, and was at once recognized by President Coolidge. Immediately the people rose up against him. The Liberal forces defeated him in battle after battle. His overthrow was plainly only a matter of weeks, when without warning or any declaration of war, the United States government began landing marines in Nicaragua. The first contingent of marines landed late in December, and on December 24th, 1926, Rear Admiral Latimer gave Doctor Sacasa until 4 p. m. of

...ORGANIZE AND STOP SWINDLERS

ARTICLE IV.

By CHARLES TALE HARRISON.

The statements made by the officials of the "Big Four" that the average person is highly "sold" on industrial insurance is doubtless true. But that statement is made with the idea of misleading the public.

Last year the total industrial lay-ments were $1,458,587,229 and all original commissions on this business were charged back to the agent's salary except for the $100,404,748 paid as matured endowments and death claims.

In effect this means that the "Big Four" pay their agents for only 10 per cent of the total business produced.

Charge More Millions.

On lapses alone the industrial field workers were fined over 33 million dollars last year. This is a very high price to pay for the privilege of working for the very select group of gentlemen who saddle the industrial heap.

In addition to this lapse fine, an additional charge of, over 4 million dollars was made because 799,380 policyholders decided to cash surrender their policies after ten years of premium payment.

The ordinary companies doing business in the state of New York last year lapsed ordinary policies to the tune of $1,456,521,677. Not a cent of the original commissions was charged back as fines to workers who procured this insurance. The same holds true for "ordinary" cash surrenders.

Haley Fiske, the arch-defender of all the evils with which industrial life insurance is beset has the following to say on the question of lapses:

"Critics of industrial life insurance lay great stress on the large number of persons who take out insurance and then after payment of premiums for varying periods, permit the insurance to lapse. These critics sometimes make the evils of lapsing appear much worse than they really are. As a matter of fact, lapsing policyholders are seldom the victims of serious loss. The great majority of lapses are on policies of less than three years' duration. . . ."

Such a statement coming from so great a personage as Haley Fiske, $150,000-a-year president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company must be true. It is, in some respects.

Issue must be taken with Mr. Fiske when he says that the lapsing policyholders "are seldom the victims of serious loss." Not only are the policyholders victims of a serious loss, but the agent on whose books a lapse occurs is also a victim of a serious loss.

Agents Forced to Overcharge.

Assuming that the life of the average lapsed policy is only one year, American policyholders, as has been pointed out in a previous article, sustained last year a loss of over 50 million dollars.

Now if a fifty million dollar loss is not a serious loss then surely the "Big Four" would not be greatly inconvenienced if the method of fining agents for lapses were forthwith discontinued. After all it is only an annual item of 33 million dollars.

As industrial life insurance is constituted at present the agent is forced to aid and abet the existing overcharging and harsh policy conditions.

The public knows little or nothing about insurance in spite of its great social and economic significance. The agent who makes the weekly visit to the policyholder's home is the source of all insurance knowledge to which the insured has access.

Perpetrates Fraud.

Because any lapse of industrial insurance means a heavy fine being levied against his salary, the agent is compeled to urge the continuance and purchase of certain types of policies which he knows are fraudulent and unfair. The policy may have been written years ago, still, unless he is prepared to suffer financial loss he must act as an accessory to company's swindle.

The powers that be are doing all in their power to see that the present criminal system of fraud and misrepresentation goes on. A new system based upon equitable rates and conditions for the policyholder, and the abolition of the decidedly unfair lapse and charge-off method would give the institution a more social aspect than it enjoys today.

Organized in England.

In England practically every industrial insurance worker is organized. Two unions cover the country. They are the National Federation of Insurance Workers with headquarters in London end the National Amalgamated Life Insurance Workers with a total membership of 70,000.

These two powerful labor, unions see to it that a high standard of living is obtained in their industry and that better working conditions are continually introduced.

In addition to safeguarding the material interests of their members these workers have a share in the control and administration of the companies for which they work.

As the idea of industrial weekly premium life insurance was imported to America from England it would be quite in line with insurance precedent, if that is required, to import the idea of an agent's union.

It seems that after all these English are not so slow.

...Five Ruthenberg Drive...

...N. Y. to Support...

The Ruthenberg drive for the members of the Workers (Communist) Party is meeting with great success in the New York district. Already, nearly two weeks after the drive over, 800 members have been obtained for the party.

The Bronx section, in proportion to its size, leads the drive, according by contributing at least 90 new members. Section 2, the largest in this city, has contributed about the same number.

While this is a very good beginning, all the party functionaries must put some more ginger into the drive and make a quota of the district "Every Member Get a New Member." While we have cases where comrades have taken in as many as ten new members, as for example the case of Comrade Alfred Lessoff of Coney Island, there are still the great bulk of the comrades who have not yet secured their new member.

The District Executive Committee will intensify the Ruthenberg campaign and urges all the comrades that in their mass activities, in the unions, in the shops, to bear in mind that their task is not only to carry on propaganda and in general broaden the influence of the party, but also to concentrate on the most promising sympathisers and win them over to the party.

the following day to leave his temporary capitol at Puerta Cabezas. From that time on, the U. S. military forces invaded one section of the country after another. The Nicaraguans continued to struggle bravely for months, but have at last had to yield to the superior force of Wall Street and Washington.

"Yes, this is peace, and all Latin-America will remember it!

"Now more than ever the cry for Latin-American unity against Wall Street becomes a rallying force from the Rio Grande to Cape Horn! One bitter experience after another has demonstrated that the smaller countries of the Western Hemisphere are destined to fall under the yoke of U. S. imperialism, unless they unite to defend their common interests. That they are actually uniting is the great augury for freedom in the western world. It is no small matter for Mexico to have recognized the Sacasa government officially, in the face of the U. S. attitude. It is an unmistakable signal of the gathering struggle, that virtually every important newspaper in Latin-America denounced the U. S. aggression and proclaimed its sympathy for Nicaragua.

"Peace? Yes, but a peace that can mean only war.

"The All-America Anti-Imperialist League calls upon all the peoples of Latin-America to unite their forces. The creation of the Federation of Latin-American States becomes a matter of life and death for every one of them.

"Down with American Imperialism!

"Let no more of Woodrow Wilson's phrase, "self-determination for all nations," a fighting slogan to throw into the teeth of those who (like Woodrow Wilson himself) have used it as any empty phrase to conceal imperialist aggression.

"The United States government is trampling on the rights of weaker peoples, not only in Latin-America but in the Philippine Islands, in China, and wherever Wall Street profit-empire blazes its path.

"We feel a common bond with all of these peoples, as well as with the working masses of the United States itself, whose class interests are directly opposed to those of Wall Street.

"We call upon the workers and farmers of the United States to stand by us! We call upon every one in America who sympathises with the cause of human liberty, to support us.

"Under imperialism there is no peace!

"Let us join hands for the peace of independent republics living side by side, the peace of mutual respect, the peace of liberty!

"The United States Section of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League will begin an immediate campaign for the termination of U. S. intervention in Nicaragua. Funds for this campaign should be sent to the office of the League, Room 48, 104 S. Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Meantime resolutions of protest against the "peace" of Nicaragua should be passed by labor unions, and other mass and progressive organizations, and copies forwarded to Washington.

Wants Girls to Work 54 Hours a Week

By Alfred Wagenknecht

The Bundy Club enters the field against 44-hour laws. It has an organization of employers in Bundy, Texas, called the "Only Independent Glass Co." says Mrs. Miss Broderick Price, first vice president; "something like the Rotary Club, but more carefully selected."

Mrs. Price comes from an old Indian word meaning "Light." But still new its light has been hidden. First news of the Bundy wants in a long front page story in Women's Wear, a daily newspaper in the interest of department store owners and women's garment employers. Zonta was among the first to start cooperating with the National Retail Dry Goods Association in fighting 44-hour laws.

"Never heard of them," said the New York Consumers' League, which is on the other side of the 48-hour fence. "Better try the National Association of Manufacturers."

Women's Party Knows

It was a good hunch. The manufacturers turned us over to the National Woman's Party, and the party furnished the phone number of Mrs. Price.

"Yes," said Mrs. Price, "the New York 44-hour law is very unfair. It's all right for the labor unions to make restrictions for their own members, but they have no right to force such laws on the rest of the workers. They are only a minority of the workers.

Zonta, like the National Woman's Party, says it is championing working women in fighting shorter hour laws. If the bosses cannot hire women at shorter hours, they will get men, argues Mrs. Price.

Welfare to the Rescue

"And why," wonders Mrs. Price, "don't the folks who want these changes go direct to the department-store managers, instead of to the legislatures. The stores have welfare departments and they help their employes all they can."

Zonta is two or three years old and a national movement. There are 60 clubs, with 3,000 members about the country, and 80 members in New York City. All very carefully selected, Mrs. Price points out.

Chicago Cops Herd Metal Rubbing Scab Even at Meal-Time

CHICAGO, May 25 (FP).—In the epidemic of union shops that went bad after the election of Mayor William Hale Thompson, the case of the Chicago Flexible Shaft Co., is as raw as that of the White (Regan) Printing House. Thompson's police force has acted just as badly, appearing in large numbers at the plant, overawing pickets bent on legitimate activity, and, apparently, accepting favors from the company.

Broke Agreement.

The Chicago Flexible Shaft Co. has been union in the polishing and grinding departments for the past 11 years. It manufactures the Cooper and Stewart sheep shears and clippers, the Sunbeam electric iron and the Sunbeam electric toaster. Alone of the 61 Chicago shops under agreement with Local 6, Metal Polishers' International Union, the Flexible Shaft concern refused to sign the standard contract embodying a 10c hourly raise May 1. All the other shops are now paying $1.10 an hour. The union called a strike on the lone objector.

The struck plant employs 33 highly skilled polishers and grinders, some of whom have been employed there the past 18 years. All the men walked out. Inexperienced strikebreakers have been taken on in their place to keep up a bluff of production. The union is paying $25 a week strike benefit.

Scabs and Herders Eat Together.

The scabs are herded in the plant, sharing meals there with Mayor Thompson's policemen and the private gunmen of the notorious National Metal Trades Association, which is in charge of the attempted open-shop experiment. It contemptuously spurns the efforts of President John Fitzpatrick of the Chicago Federation of Labor to bring about a settlement. It sees to it that uniformed city police are on duty in 8 shifts of 8 hours each inside and outside the plant. Police flivver squads roar around the neighborhood.

American customers of the firm are being informed of its change of labor policy. As Australia is strongly unionized it is quite likely that it will back elsewhere for the bulk of its trade, thereby cutting out Canadian and Pacific northwest regions are also interested in the facts. Apart from union sympathies there is the consideration that the quality of work turned out by the class of workmen willing to stand under police guns and clubs while being herded into the Flexible Shaft plant is doubtful.

British Workers Fight Move

LONDON, May 25.—An official breach between Great Britain and the Soviet Union will only cement the relations of the workers of both countries closer than ever, declared A. J. Cook, Secretary of the Miners Federation commenting on breach of Anglo-Soviet relations advocated by the tory cabinet.

British labor, he said, would never forget that the workers of the Soviet Union sent them millions of pounds to keep them from starving during their strike.

British labor is solidly opposed to the action of the die-hard Cabinet. Large sections of the financial and industrial worlds are also indignant at the Cabinet's decision.

PARIS, May 25. (INS).—The Soviet Union is reserving efforts to settle the debt question with France following the break with England, it was learned today.

The Foreign Office today declined to comment on the British decision to break with Russia, stating that it would have no influence on Franco-Russian relations.

BERLIN, May 25.—The collapse of the Locarno policy and the growing hostility of Germany is seen in the Anglo-Russian break by the Nationalist press of Germany, headed by Der Tag which stresses the fact that Anglo-French solidarity has been cemented by the visit of the French president to London.

Rote Fahne, the Communist organ, charged England with the first step in an anti-Soviet war and urges the world proletarians to rally to the red flag. This newspaper predicts strong resistance by British labor to the British government's action.

U. S. To Gain Trade

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Great Britain's break with the Soviet Union is regarded by Washington officialdom as one of the most important international developments since the war.

The United States probably will benefit indirectly from the Anglo-Soviet break, for if Moscow carries out its threat to boycott British goods it means that Russia must turn to America and Germany for the manufactured goods she needs so badly. No other markets are available, generally speaking.

...Drive On To Kill 7-Hour Law...

...Bosses Open Fight

By MARGARET LARKIN

The announced indictment of the managers of the shop-owned company union in the Standard Knitting Mills at Cohoes, N. Y., is the first indictment of the New York Joint Boards reform campaign in the manufactured Ladies' Garments industry.

A complete history with many types of employers and a crying need for reinstatement was portrayed by the complaints recently presented to the Governor's Commission. Miss Larkin outlines the administration's findings.

THE INDUSTRY.

There are three types of employers in the women's garment industry in New York, the "inside manufacturer," the jobber, and the sub-manufacturer or contractor.

The "inside manufacturer" maintains regular inside shops which produce and market a finished product from raw factory down.

The jobber does not, maintain any shops at all, but purchases material and gives out their work to a number of sub-manufacturers.

The sub-manufacturers usually have no contact whatever with the retail trade. They maintain small shops with a few machines, but in reality act in the capacity of petty foremen for the jobbers, rather than as independent employers.

The jobber-contractor system was recognized as the cause of much of the chaos in the garment industry by the Governor's Commission, which made a two year study of the industry. In its final report, issued on May 20, 1926, the Commission points out the irresponsibility of the sub-manufacturers, who force workers to make concessions in wages, hours, and working conditions in order to get only to those who take pride in the fact that they live in an atmosphere of filth. Governments are glorified chambers of commerce.

AS Communists we must recognize facts, draw certain conclusions from them and then shape our policies to draw the maximum political advantages from them. The conflicting interests of the imperialist powers is one fact. Another fact is the existence of the Soviet Union, the nucleus of the coming world federation of Soviet governments and eventually of the World Republic of Labor. Between the capitalist powers and this power there cannot be any peace. This fact should be engraved in the mind of every worker.

A French king once made history by the declaration: "After me the deluge." In other words he did not give a damn what happened to the world after he had his last bath of roses and lay on an honest king as kings go. But he was not a diplomatic king. And had he to run for re-election he never would expressed himself in this fashion. Now, our Wall Street capitalists do not like the Soviet Government. But they know that there is some business to be done there and there is a ruble. So, while the ruling classes of Great Britain are more worried about the loss of trade, our business interests in China think about a temporary loss of trade our business interests have no such fears. They want to sell their goods. Perhaps their daughters want to go presented to the king of England. That costs money. And if they get the dough thru trading with the hated Bolshevik Government of Russia, what of it? Money is money and the flunkeys at Buckingham Palace ask no questions of a pound note.

Employers' Associations

The employers in the cloakmakers' industry are organized in Associations; the "inside manufacturers" in the Industrial Council; the jobbers in the Merchants' Ladies Garment Association; and the sub-manufacturers in the American Cloak and Suit Manufacturers' Association.

The employers in the dress industry are organized in the same way: the jobbers in the Wholesale Dress Manufacturers' Association, and the sub-manufacturers in the Association of Dress Manufacturers, Inc. The "inside manufacturers" have no employers' Association.

More Politics From Now On in Booze Sleuthing; Doran Commissioner

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Practically the entire responsibility for federal prohibition enforcement will be shifted from an assistant secretary of the treasury to Dr. James M. Doran, the new commissioner, it was learned today.

Under Seymour Lowman, of New York, newly appointed assistant secretary, it is understood that Secretary Mellon virtually will revert to the method of enforcement employed before Andrews took charge. Under that policy the assistant secretary had little to do with actual enforcement and when problems of major policy, too big for the commissioner arose, they went directly to the secretary.

It is also understood that the political influence of senators and representatives again will become the principal factor in the selection of important dry personnel.

By Earl Browder

[illegible] March 15, the Hupeh Provincial Union Congress met in Wuchang, and on March 16, the committee members of the Hupeh Kuomintang issued a new manifesto, declaring Chiang Kai-shek as a counter-revolutionary. This manifesto, published in the Hankow Min Pao, Hankow, March 16, 1927, contains the following declarations:

"The Party has lost its power, and all the power has gone to the hands of a dictator and the highest organization of the Party has lost its function."

"Help the Central Executive Committee to overthrow the condition of usurpation, to restore the spirit of democracy, to make all Party members obey the orders of the Party. All political and military affairs should be unified under the direction of the Party. . . Every person no matter who he is should submit to the power of the Party. . . Only the oppressed masses are the supervisor of the Party. Only the principles of Chang Li (Sun Yat Sen) and his spirit are the director of the Party."....

"Now it is time for us to manifest the power of the Party. Whether our Party will even exist depends entirely upon whether we can make the power of the Party felt."

The Mass Base of the Chinese Liberation Movement.

The days pass but Chiang Kai-shek fails to set up a government with any popular following or to make any substantial increases to his military forces. On the contrary, there are persistent rumors that considerable sections of his army have refused to obey orders to advance on Wuhan (Hankow), the seat of the People's Government.

Chiang's chief spokesman, Wu, has already admitted that no immediate advance against the People's Government is contemplated but Chiang himself says, according to Shanghai dispatches: "I do not intend to advance toward Peking until I have exterminated the Communists in my rear." The conclusion is inescapable that traitor Chiang is not going anywhere—at least at present—either toward Wuhan or Peking, but is having his hands full maintaining Nanking as his present base. It is also highly probable that Chiang has no real control over such troops as are in the field against the Mukden and Shantung forces.

On the other hand, the armies of the People's Government are advancing steadily along the main line of the Hankow-Peking railway and have captured the strategic city of Chengchow—the junction of the Pukow-Tientsin railway.

Of equal importance with the military successes of the People's Armies (and in a large measure responsible for them) is the tremendously rapid growth of the peasant organizations. Even into the dispatches of the imperialist correspondents there has crept lately brief references to these peasant organizations which are of an economic, political and military character. The imperialist press at first referred to them as bandit organizations and even published pictures of their meetings, etc., with misleading captions. But the fact that these peasant organizations were putting down banditry and defeating the troops of the militarists with merciless effectiveness could not be concealed forever.

The Chinese peasants are marching with the liberation movement. They support the People's Government and not Chiang Kai-shek.

Commenting on this feature of the Chinese struggle in connection with the general developments since the treason of Chiang Kai-shek and his capitalist and compradore following, the Moscow Pravda says:

"The abandonment of the revolution by the Chinese bourgeoisie is more than made good by the rapid growth of the peasant movement which expresses itself in the formation of a number of organizations like the 'Red Lances' and self-defence committees, the peasant unions, etc. The Putsch of Chiang Kai-shek has thus merely given a new spur to the peasant revolution which has been ripening for some time and which has even broken through occasionally. The provinces of Honan is in the throes of a powerful peasant movement. Before the gates of Canton an insurrectionary movement is sweeping up under the leadership of the Communists. In Honan the peasants are organizing self-defense organizations. Whole districts are under the control of the Red Lances. The struggle against the large-scale landowners is becoming ever more decisive.

"The tireless work of the Communist Party and the trade unions which are continuing their activity in the districts occupied by Chiang Kai-shek and the general growth of the forces of the proletariat are a guarantee that the Chinese revolution will advance to victory over all hindrances and difficulties." (Emphasis ours.)

The peasantry is the mass base of the Chinese revolution, the organized working class is its mass leadership. These are the guarantees of its final victory, in spite of imperialist lies, imperialist agents and imperialist troops and battleships.

The desertion of Chiang Kai-shek has removed the brake which the right wing put on the development of the Chinese mass movement because it was afraid of the masses.

If the working class of the imperialist nations does its duty and prevents all armed aggression against the Chinese liberation movement by their governments, the Chinese masses will not be checked again.

Imperialists Are Shamefully Misunderstood.

We submit that the appended two paragraphs taken from a Shanghai dispatch of May 24 to the New York Herald-Tribune, and which appear in that paper in the same sequence as below constitute in themselves an anti-imperialist editorial to which nothing need be added:

(1.) Sir Miles Wedderburn Lampson, the British minister, speaking at a celebration of Empire Day, said that British imperialism was misunderstood in China and that efforts were made to inculcate in the Chinese the idea that imperialism is designed to oppress them, while its purpose is to spread civilization.

(2.) Shanghai harbor presented a brilliant scene when forty warships representing eight nations, were gaily bedecked with flags in honor of British Empire Day. Ashore thousands of foreign troops were cheered by foreigners, but were silently watched by Chinese as they paraded the streets while British airplanes flew over the city.

E. Mischuk Dead

The District Executive Committee of the Workers' (Communist) Party of America expresses its deep sorrow at the untimely death of one of its young Party members in Providence, Comrade E. Mischuk. With the death of Comrade Mischuk the Party loses one of its most loyal, devoted and courageous workers. Comrade Mischuk was a Russian immigrant, who came here to escape the unbearable conditions under which the Russian farmer lived at the time of the Czar. However, he did not escape the exploitation in this country and had to work and privation, coupled with self sacrifice and devotion for the movement has hastened his death.

With the coming of the social revolution in Russia, Comrade Mischuk has thrown himself into the Party work with all fervor and devotion. Comrade Mischuk was also an active worker in the Russian Sick and Death Benefit Society in Providence, the establishment of which he was largely responsible for. Comrade Mischuk was buried on Sunday, May 15th and a demonstration of 600 workers accompanied his body to the graveyard, paid tribute to his work. C. S. Shiller.

British Imperialism Moves Toward War

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

BRITISH imperialism has made another move in the direction of war but in so doing it has again weakened its world position.

The tory government in Great Britain has abandoned the world of reality for the world of Alice in Wonderland.

The boasted brilliancy of British diplomacy has succumbed to a subjectivism which is out of place in a world divided between two warring social systems—that of the Soviet Union and the capitalist world and where sharpening imperialist rivalries produce a constant state of tension.

We have already stated that the British cabinet, dominated by the Churchill - Birkenhead - Joynson-Hicks wing had to make the choice of dropping the whole offensive against the Soviet Union and facing a general election under extremely unfavorable conditions or of putting on a bold face, breaking off relations and arousing nationwide resentment among all sections of the population opposed to the consequent loss of trade and the threat of war.

LET there be no mistake about the meaning of the tory cabinet's decision. It has embarked upon a war policy. Whether it will be able to carry it thru successfully is another question.

As it is, the effort made by British imperialism to isolate the Soviet Union at Geneva failed. It did not succeed in securing the endorsement of the United States for its isolation policy and neither has Germany been whipped into line. France appears to have given her tentative approval to the British policy but Germany quite evidently demands the complete evacuation of her territory before she is willing to consider support of Great Britain. France is not prepared to make this concession to please Great Britain.

BUT France under the leadership of Poincare, may follow Britain and break off relations with the Soviet Union. If this is done the fall of the French cabinet can be expected as large sections of the French industrialists will want to profit from the Russian trade which will come to France as a result of the boycott that the Soviet Union will institute against Britain. The French working class is of course opposed to a break with the Soviet Union.

ACCORDING to Paris dispatches, if France severs relations with the Soviet Union, Italy, Holland and Roumania will also line up with Great Britain. The attempt of the British foreign office to set up a hostile front against the Soviet Union in recent months, composed of the nations mentioned and others, would indicate that this is a possibility but no fact remains that the British government has been out-maneuvered by the peace policy of the Soviet Union which has been adhered to rigidly in spite of the unprecedented provocations in China and London.

GREAT BRITAIN has lost much of her moral fictitiousness by reason of her open warlike activities and it is not probable that many European nations are willing to at once repudiate the decisions of the Geneva Economic Conference even the Great Britain cracks the whip.

With the working class at home the British imperialists have played a mad game. While its policy of aggression in China and against the Soviet Union requires that it make all possible concessions to the workers, it has succeeded in arousing the whole labor movement against it by the bill for throttling the trade unions. Even the reformist leaders, whose opposition to the general strike and the miners' strike differed but little from that of the Baldwin government, are now compelled by mass pressure to resist the government attack.

IT is, nevertheless, certain that the "hardboiled" stand of the tory government on this issue is based largely upon the belief founded upon experience that at the critical moment the reformist will again offer to surrender under guise of compromise, that they will desert the masses and make peace with the government rather than take a determined stand against the "Arcos" raid and a break with the Soviet Union.

THE tories believe further, and with justification, that the MacDonalds, Thomases and Hendersons, etc., are willing to accept those portions of the trade union bill which prohibit centralized control in the labor movement, general strikes, mass picketing, sympathetic strikes, etc., provided they are allowed to carry on their parliamentary — "constitutional" — activities without too much interference by the government.

R. Palme Dutt, writing in "The Labor Monthly" for May, quotes MacDonald's statement in the "Daily Herald" for April 6 (after the text of the trade union bill had been published) as stating:

"The bill is a handicap to labor insofar as it treats of admitted difficulties which might be the subject of an exchange of views."

This is a clear offer of compromise made before the fight on the bill really began.

THE reformist leadership made no attempt to rally the working class for struggle but instead tried to slip out of the struggle in return for immunity for parliamentary labor leadership.

Under such circumstances it is little wonder that the imperialists felt that no serious opposition was to be expected from the official leadership. This encouraged them to go the limit. That they went too far is evident now but they still hope for aid from reformist quarters in the shape of "backing and filling," wordy protests relative to violation of "democratic principles" and failure to really mobilize the masses for struggle outside of parliament.

IF the imperialists are able to enact the trade union bill, if they are able to secure, a majority in the next election, if they are able to pursue their offensive against the Soviet Union with some measure of success, if they are able to continue their aggression in China (which is in reality another avenue of attack against the Soviet Union), if war follows the breaking off of relations, the official leadership of the British labor movement must take full responsibility for it.

LET us repeat. The British government is following a war policy. It is trying to provoke war against the Soviet Union and in spite of its weakened position the severance of relations with the Soviet Union is another step toward war.

The task of the rank and file of the British labor movement, the British Communist Party and the national minority movement is a two-fold one:

It consists in forcing the official leadership to fight—of defeating its program of abandonment of militant struggle in return for concessions which are meaningless to the masses.

It consists also of organizing all available forces so that the imperialist plot for war on the Soviet Union and the attempt to crush all life and will to fight out of the labor movement (both part of the same offensive) shall be smashed, the tory government driven from office and the labor movement of Great Britain begins to move rapidly forward to the conquest of power.

Without forgetting that their main task is to defeat their own ruling class, the labor and revolutionary movements of the other imperialist nations must render every assistance to the British working class in its heroic effort to safeguard its organizations and standard of living, stop war on the workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union and intervention in China.

Sec. 2, New York, Puts Matter of Daily Worker Loans Before All Units

(By Martin Reed)

The Executive Committee of Section 2 decided that every unit in the Section gives a $100 loan to The DAILY WORKER.

Two units of Sub-Section 2B were the first to respond with $100 each. Comrade Litvin, Sub-Section organizer of 2B, challenged all other units in the Section to raise the same amount.

The units of Sub-Section 2A accepted the challenge. Factory districts No. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 gave $100. loan each. Factory district No. 1 will follow the other units.

The party units must be the first ones to respond in this emergency. All units in Section 2 will answer Comrade Litvin's challenge and answer loud so all units of greater New York may hear and do the same thing. Who is next? Answer.

...tion company. The Interborough has paid ... and more when it was in such financial ... banking houses.

Now you see additional subways ... The Interborough pays not one cent for the franchises. Through the so-called ... Contracts Nos. 3 and 4, the city ... a matter of fact paid the companies this interest, at the maximum ...

Yet this all! Not at all!

The gentlemen who put over the steal for the traction trust received their reward. It has already been revealed how Edward Reid Hoagland, counsel for the Interborough, received the bonus of $50,000 for his part in the frame-up. Theodore P. Shonts, president of the Interborough received two bonuses, one of $125,000 and another of $25,000, making a handsome total of $150,000. Timothy S. Williams, then president of the B. M. T., received a bonus of $100,000. His salary, which before the steal had been a paltry $36,000 per year, was thereupon increased to $75,000. Shonts, who previously had been trying to make ends meet on a mere $50,000 per annum, was promoted to the less trying wage of $100,000 annually.

Nor was this all!

Under the contract, the Interborough was allowed $3,000,000 for the so-called Steinway Tunnel for which the Interborough had neither exact franchise rights nor legal claim of any sort. For this pretty piece of trickery and outright theft thanks is again due to the same George McAneny then chairman of the Board of Estimate.

As for the B. M. T., as may be expected, this company was not left out entirely in the cold. First of all there was allowed it something like $1,000,000 for land used to connect the subway and elevated lines at Fifth Ave. and 36th St., Brooklyn. In addition there were numbers of other parcels of land not including the contribution of the bonus to the president of the concern, Timothy S. Williams, who received the previously stated $100,000 together with the increase in salary.

But even these royal rake-offs were as small change to the revenue exacted by the Morgan firm. This concern which has its long fingers in everyone's pockets was not content with the trick of selling mortgage bonds worth 100% at an initial profit of 7% as previously stated; it was not satisfied with withholding the money from the Interborough and charging interest for not passing on this money; it has had to receive a bonus and a percentage.

In the first place, Morgan received 3% of all money raised through his firm; secondly the firm received a cold cash bonus of $500,000—a clean half million of dollars!

The foregoing is something of the picture as it appears to one who obtains a sort of bird's eye view of that period when professional hold up artists joined with the more respectible financial bandits to form a Plunderbund of unequaled audacity. That their form of plunder was made "legal" is but another proof that they are essentially social parasites.

The testimony already revealed before the present transit hearings in which it was shown that the ring operated the subways not for service but for plunder is scarcely astonishing in the light of the above facts. The original booty captured by this gang just as is the present toll, was under the "preferential" guaranteed earnings provision in the contracts charged up and paid for by the city, sums running into the tens of millions.

The next article will reveal how this gang was perpetuated by the appointments of Governor Miller, how it has maintained its hold to the present day.

B. M. T. CONTROLS CITY TRACTION, HEARING SHOWS

Ring Keeps Control By Shady Stock Voting

By ROBERT MITCHELL

The Transit Commission investigation of the traction situation opened its second hearing at 370 Madison Ave. yesterday with its star performers on the first part of the bill.

The Monday hearing revealed the fact that perhaps as much as 90% of the I. R. T. stock is in the hands of Wall Street speculators who use their power to elect their men, stock swindling dummy directors. These directors use their offices merely as means of plundering the company by selling themselves coal, supplies and other materials at exorbitant figures.

While the Monday hearing disclosed the fact that the present traction ring had no interest in providing transit service to the people, the proceedings yesterday showed that by means of corrupt and undoubtedly illegal voting of stock which in most cases these speculators no longer owned, they have perpetuated the plunderbund now operating the transit lines.

The second disclosure was a confirmation of the fact that interests closely associated with the B. M. T. now control the Interborough.

The first witness to be called was Thomas L. Chadbourne, senior member of the firm of Chadbourne, Stanchfield and Levy, attorneys for banks, railroads and the Powers that Be in general. Chadbourne came to testify on his own request thereby implying a willingness to furnish information which was immediately belied by his reluctated refusal to reply to pertinent queries as to when the traction ring had acquired control of the local lines.

Big Stockholders.

Questioning of Chadbourne, which occupied the major portion of the short hearing, revealed the fact that as the personal friend of Gerhard Dahl, chairman of the B. M. T. Board of Directors, he owned some 9,800 shares of stock in the Interborough. His holdings in the B. M. T. total about 7,200 shares or approximately 10% of the entire issue.

Chadbourne proved more than a "tough customer" on the witness stand. All questions intended to reveal the date or the method of building up the traction ring were "respectfully declined through advice of counsel as being a delving into my purely private business." Nor did this gentleman budge when the chairman of the Transit Commission, John F. Gilchrist, under the request of Untermyer, the commission attorney, instructed him to answer the questions. The answer was the same: "I decline to answer."

Terrible Punishment.

Untermyer hinted at some steps to be taken as a result of the refusal. Dahl, chairman of the B. M. T. total Perhaps he meant to infer that Chadbourne would be reported to the Grand Jury—perhaps he might even be reported to J. P. Morgan & Co., the result will undoubtedly be the same in either case.

Following the testimony of the distinguished democratic politician, Chadbourne, who is undoubtedly one of the leading powers behind the traction swindle, Horace M. Fishes, was recalled to the stand. His uncomfortable position on Monday pulling the few beans which have thus far rolled from the carefully guarded traction table.

On Monday, Fisher was quite put out by the cross questioning. On leaving the stand at the time he was asked by one of his colleagues in

Former Grafters Who Courts Actually Aprove Ring Cash for Bribes

Peter Kornreich, ex-cop, ex-politician and democratic district leader of Morrisania Ave., Astoria, arriving at Magistrate Corrigan's bail to be arraigned on a charge of grand larceny when he heard the verdict of guilty rendered him by a jury in Queens County on Saturday, Long Island City.

Kornreich brought suit on claim for $50,000 against the Officer Co., owners of an office building at 50-52 Jackson Ave., Long Island City, on January, 1926, he fell five stories down an elevator shaft in the building, and received a fracture of the right hip, a fracture of the right wrist and internal injuries, he alleged, when he was ordered to enter the shaft to work, by the superintendent of the building. Interventions were taken for his safety, Kornreich alleged.

Kornreich recovered in an ambulance room before an ambulance surgeon arrived from St. John's hospital, across the street. He declared his faint was due to happiness at the verdict, and that he was not in need of medical attention, and left for home to tell his wife the good news.

graft ask to why he had given away so much dope.

"Why didn't you say, we haven't got the data?" "I tried to," replied the much worn out Fisher, "but he wouldn't let me!"

The Proxy Game.

Yesterday, Fisher was less harassed by the inquisitive Untermyer. In the few moments he spent on the stand, there was disclosed, however the fact that at the last annual election of the Interborough directors, held on September 15, 1926, there was voted a block of "proxy" votes many thousands in excess of the amount in the possession of the directors.

The conclusion seemed to be that in addition to voting stock without the knowledge of the owners, perhaps even against their wishes, the Interborough directors voted themselves into power by means of a falsified trust. How this was accomplished was not disclosed. Significant in this respect was the testimony that the large block of stock in the possession of Hayden Stone & Co., the largest single broker controlling Interborough stock and a company in association with the B. M. T. not yet voted at the September election. No doubt this circumstance will throw some light on the growing indications of an antagonism of some sort between the banking groups holding the bonds of the companies and the non-stock holding directors.

Several much scared and decidedly youthful office managers of the down town brokerage houses then followed one another in rapid succession. At this stage there was revealed an interesting bit of information as to the Wall Street methods of controlling stocks not actually in their possession. The brokers before a meeting of the directors of a particular business concern send in the proxies of the whole amount of stock on record in their offices.

Any part of this stock may be and often is already out of their possession due to the fact that other brokers may in turn have purchased it for their own "clients." The first brokers, nevertheless, vote the stock quite as if they were actually in possession of it.

Chadbourne, earlier in the morning had emphasized the fact with a decided flourish of virtue that such practice is "unethical" and is so considered in Wall Street. The testimony, however, revealed the reverse, so far as Wall Street "ethics" is concerned.

By such a process as this was the Interborough gang of plundering directors elected last September and by such devices has the same gang maintained its power from the beginning.

It is noteworthy that the list of the largest contributors includes [illegible] men in business profit directly from sale of war supplies.

The congressional committee report on that point said:

"If the curtain were only pulled back, in addition to the interests heretofore enumerated, the hands of Rockefeller, of Vanderlip and of Morgan, of Remington, of Du-Pont, and of Guggenheim would be seen, suggesting steel, oil, money bags, Russian bonds, rifles, powder, and railroad."—(H. of R. 65th Congress, 3d session, Report No. 1172—Investigation of National Security Leagues, p. 6.)

The Security League at that time was spending about $100,000 a year, although in 1918, in view of the congressional campaign and the entrance of the League into politics, its expenditures reached the sum of $285,667.56. Its budget has since been greatly reduced. For three years ending in 1919 the Carnegie Corporation gave the League $50,000 a year.

The National Civic Federation numbers among its heartiest supporters Mr. Finley J. Shepard and his wife, the former Helen Gould, and V. Everit Macy of the Central Union Trust Company. The late August Belmont, who made his fortune in street railways, was also a large contributor. One trade union member of the Federation's executive committee, who does not wish to be quoted publicly, states that Judge Elbert H. Gary of the United States Steel Corporation has been "one of the Federation's financial angels." The position of a trade unionist on a board with anti-union employers backing the work is, of course, somewhat delicate.

The American Defense Society stated in 1924 that it had 1,080 contributors scattered in 44 states and the District of Columbia. Its chairman, Mr. Elon H. Hooker of the Hooker Electro-Chemical Company, manufacturers of chemicals used in warfare, is a director of many corporations that doubtless assist directly or indirectly. Mr. Hooker solicited funds for the society on the stationery of his company. Mr. Franklin Remington, chairman of the Finance Committee, is a director of the Great Western Chemical Corporation.

The American Constitutional Association in West Virginia, and the Better America Federation at Los Angeles are both employers' organizations whose patriotism is frankly identified with their private interests. Naturally they are supported by those who profit from their activities. In the case of the Constitutional Association, an interesting piece of testimony as to who gave and how much, came out in a suit brought by a professional solicitor named Kirk, who thought he had not received all the commissions due him. The testimony showed that Judge Gary, whose corporation operates the largest single coal business in West Virginia, gave $5,000 in 1921, with this letter:

United States Steel Corporation
Chairman's Office
New York, May 11th, 1921.

Dear Sir:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 2nd instant. It was placed before our Finance Committee on yesterday, when it was decided to make a contribution of $5,000 toward the work of the American Constitutional Society, with the understadding that the money is not to be used for any political purpose, but with the sole object of assisting and maintaining American institutions.

I am enclosing herewith check for $5,000 together with voucher, which you are requested to have signed and returned to this office.

Hon. Edward M. Kirby, Secy.,
American Constitutional Assn.,
House of Deisgates,
Charleston, W. Va.

Very truly yours,
E. H. GARY.

Some Contributors.

The evidence also showed the following contributors to the maintenance of the Constitution:

Pocahontas Coal Co.	$3,360
Wm. McKell Coal Co.	465
Carnegie Gas Co.	300
West Virginian Utilities Co.	260
H. Bowen, of the Bowen Coal Co. of Branwell	250
Wm. Ord. Pres. of a coal Co. in McDowell Co.	250
Bottom Creek Coal Co.	250
Crystal Block Coal Co. (a subsidiary of U. S. Coal Co.	250
Manufacturers' Light & Heat Co.	200
Col. Leckie of the Leckie Coal Co.	100
Atwater & Co., coal buyers	100
Dollar Savings Bank of Wheeling	100
Walker Peterson, president of Warwood Tool Co.	50
Dry Fork Colliery Co. of Bluefield	50

Other contributors named in the proceedings were the Consolidation Coal Company (a Rockefeller property), the Wheeling Steel Corporation, which gave $2,000, the Elkhorn Coal & Coke Co., the Empire Coal & Coke Co. and the Raleigh Smokeless Fuel Company. All these were contributors in 1920. They clearly prove the character of this particular brand of patriotic concern for the Constitution and "American institutions."

In the case of the Better America Federation, some direct evidence is at hand from public hearings in 1922 before the California Commission on Immigration and Housing, reported by Franklin Hichborn. After citing the fact that the Southern California Edison Company contributed $3,000 a year, he says:

"Thus, in 1920, the San Joaquin Light and Power Company subscribed $300 to the Better America Federation out of 'surplus,' and charged an additional contribution of $15 to 'miscellaneous general expenses.' 'Miscellaneous general expenses' are operating expenses. The following year, 1921, the company allowed the Federation $600 out of surplus and $6 as a 'miscellaneous general expense.' No protest followed these $15 and $6 budgets. The company evidently considered it was safe to make its Better American Federation contribution an operating expense. At any rate, the next year the company charged up to operating expenses $300 contributed to the Better America Federation.

The Southern California Edison Company has its $3,000 a year Better America Federation contribution under general expense, but the Edison system is responsible for the following gems in public utility bookkeeping: 'Donations to Los Angeles Community Fund' is reported by Edison companies $30,000 a year for five years, $200,000 in all, for the support of the Better America Federation."

REPORT OF JOHN BROPHY

When Mr. Lewis says we do not apply this policy in our own district he forgets to add that we attempted to apply this policy fully against interests, having union and non-union operations in this district after the 1922 strike in the cases of the Weaver interests at Nanty-Glo and Revloc. The Revloc miners came out with the union men and we refused to sign for the Nanty-Glo mines unless they signed for Revloc. The Weaver interests appealed to Lewis and after considerable correspondence he personally signed the agreement with them and then insisted upon the Nanty-Glo men returning to work under threat of revocation of their charter. This contract he forwarded to me in duplicate for me to sign. These contracts, signed by Mr. Lewis, are still in my files awaiting my signature. After this desertion the Revloc men soon became discouraged and returned to work.

How can we apply our policy in this district when the appeals of the operators result in Mr. Lewis signing contracts over our heads?

These interests so tenderly treated in the national policy in 1922 have since jumped their contracts and are now scabbing ALL of their operations.

It is plain to be seen that securing a wage contract for the older organized sections is not enough. It does not increase the strength of the union. In fact it will not even permit the continued maintenance of our present strength. With the constantly increasing non-union production, the union is suffering a constant decrease in the proporation of production controlled and is being more and more subject to pressure from the non-union areas.

A Constructive Policy.

If the United Mine Workers of America are to increase in power, and to secure additional benefits for our membership, we must adopt broader and more constructive policies. These policies must be so shaped as to enable us to realize our ideal of a complete unionization of the mining industry.

Heretofore the organising of the non-union fields has been secondary to the securing of wage agreements in the older organized sections, with disastrous results, as has been shown. The organization of the non-union fields and the securing of contracts for them must be made of equal importance to the securing of coutracts for the older fields.

Nationalization of the mines must be made an active policy instead of an abstract theory buried and forgotten between conventions. This is of great importance to the union. It will give hope to the rank and file who see no hope in private ownership and management of the industry.

The Labor Party should be a goal towards which we should work steadily. We have had ample evidence that the two major political parties are not interested in securing justice for labor. Nor will they be interested until labor shows itself powerful enough politically to challenge their control. This can be done only by building up a Labor Party.

Democracy in the union must be re-established. This was one of the most important principles upon which the union was based. For several years we have been drifting away from the democratic principle. Persecution and expulsion of those who differ with officials are becoming the order of the day.

A healthy growth cannot be had unless there is an atmosphere of freedom where all of us are given an opportunity to set forth our ideas. The good sense of the membership can be relied upon to accept what is sound and reject what is unsound.

27 Years Membership.

I have not made the foregoing statements in carping criticism but out of a sincere desire to assist in building up the United Mine Workers of America, in which I have held membership for more than twenty-seven years. The last ten of these years I have been your District President, and while I am now retiring from that office I hope to continue my membership and intereste as one of the rank and file. During all the years as an officer and member the affairs of the union have been my main interest and I have always endeavored to give it my best service. I have stood steadfastly for the things I have thought best for the organization regardless of consequences to me personally. My study of the industry and the union's relation to it convinces me thoroughly that if the United Mine Workers is to be a power the past policies must give way to broader policies. I have always stood ready to make reductions, but I realize that is not sufficient. We must now concern ourselves with more than wages and working conditions.

It is my firm conviction that a broad policy, such as I have outlined, actively adhered to, will soon restore the United Mine Workers to its former strength and set it well on its way toward the fulfillment of all its ideals.

Fraternally yours,
JOHN BROPHY.

A Modern Factory

By BERTHA KANTOR.

A big, modern factory! When my application for the job was accepted, it gave me the happy illusion that at last I had found the right place. Here must be plenty of light and air; here, there will be no more choking pressing feeling in my breast, no more sharp electric light hurting my eyes.

Happily I came into the work-room, and . . . my happiness disappeared. My old friends were smiling at me—the bright electric lights. The whole place was the same old "Hole" which I am so well acquainted with.

No Light or Heat.

The working room was located at the rear of the floor. A corner with one window facing a blind, dark alley, and another looking outside, front, place which forgot the time it was washed last. A dirty floor. It is so cold and damp. Later on I learned that no matter how warm and shining it is outside, cold and dampness still prevails in this corner; it penetrates to your very bones; you always have a feeling of a dreary, rainy day in November.

The front of the floor and the big windows that had attracted me so much, this is divided from the working room by a partition. There is the office, the shipping room. A space is also occupied by a big table for no definite purpose except to play cards when it is slow.

Boss On Guard.

So, here I learned the bitter lesson that things can be arranged so skillfully as to make life miserable even in the big modern building. I must confess that my trust in the big, modern building had been great up to that time. But let's return to the working room. Two rows of machines; at the end a little table. Here the boss sits, facing the machines. A big clock before him on the wall. He notices every move of yours, he counts how many times and for how long you leave your chair during the day.

Favoritism and Speeding.

We are here thirty girls and men. Three girls and one man work on each garment. Besides the weekly wages, men receive a few pennies extra for each garment with the intention that they should work faster and rush the girls. When there is not much work the slow workers are laid off for a day or so. To the fast ones the boss says politely: "I'll soon announce no work tomorrow but you should come in."

We are thirty here, but seldom you will hear the sound of our voices during the whole long day. The only contrast to this atmosphere of gloominess is my neighbor Mary. She is nineteen; she is always happy, sings, laughs, and chatters. The little devil, "Come on, cheer up, for heaven's sake;" she pulls me by my sleeve. "I'll sing you something." And she begins: "Blue sky smiling at me, beautiful birds I see . . ." Mary is the real "Jazz Baby." If she ever finds out that I do not dance the "Black Bottom" I will be lost in her eyes. She once happened to look at a pamphlet I was carrying: "Infantile Paralysis. What is it?" she asked, surprised. "You see, it gives you a good remedy, it tells you how to cure the worst sickness of all." "How did you come to it?" See it advertised in the trollies? But you never read a good book," and she fetches me a "True Story." I felt embarrassed a little.

The Noiseless Sam.

My other neighbor is quiet like a fish. "Mary, what is his name?" "I don't know, did he just come up recently?" "Oh, no, six months ago, but he never says a word." I found out later his name was Sam. "Sam," I said. "I have a fine proposition for you. Put a sign on your mouth: "A voice can be rented from 8 to 6." There are very many who would be glad to have some kind of a voice. He does not understand. "I am busy." "Were you just as dumb, when you worked on piecework?" "But you see, then I worked on my own time. But here, we should not deceive Mr. Smith, he trusts us, he pays us for every minute."

"Sam, you know something about slavery, don't you? A whip was used in the olden days, but you have the whip in your very blood and flesh." He lifted at me his blue eyes, they are tender like the eyes of a lamb. He smiles childlike, and again his head is bent over the work.

A conscientious specimen of a slave.

The USSR in 1932

By SHIRLEY REEVE.

A STRIKING example of how the workers' interests, in the Soviet Union are the first to be considered in all plans of the Republic is to be found in material recently published by the "Gosplan." This material will be used in drawing up the perspective "Peoples' Economy" Plan for the next five years. The "Gosplan" is the State Planning Commission and has some of the ablest and best known scientists and statisticians in the world on its committees.

By 1932, the productivity of industry in the Soviet Union will have increased by 50 per cent it is estimated and therefore the real wages of the industrial workers will also be increased by 50 per cent.

THE Peoples Economy Plan of 1927-1932 will not only provide that the PROFITS OF THE INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY OF LABOR GO TO THE WORKERS, but will also include plans for "new cities." The new cities according to the project of the Gosplan should be distributed over the whole country and their character changed. The new cities will have the appearance of small city parks, permitting the combining of industrial and village labor under the most favorable conditions. This not only from the economic point of view, but also in the interests of the cultural development and physical well-being of the population.

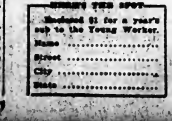
Another interesting fact characteristic of the continuous improvement of the living conditions of the workers and peasants in the Soviet Union is that the growth in population, very carefully calculated on the present rate of increase will have reached 15,500,000 in 1932. 4,000,000 of this increase, it is estimated, will take place in the cities.

THE PLUMBERS HELPERS

The American youth in the last few years has shown renewed activity. In the last few years they have taken part in mass struggles of young workers such as in the mining campaign and strike, the needle strikes, the youth strike in Bellaire and the Passaic strike. Due to the intensification and simplification of production and the closing down of the immigration bars, the activity of the American youth in the economic life of the general labor movement, is already being felt. In the organization campaign and strike of the plumbers' helpers, we find a spontaneous movement involving practically all the helpers in the trade. The bonafide union has bared all attempts of the helpers to get into the stream of the general labor movement. The persistence and vitality of these young workers will force the parent union to take them into their ranks especially when we consider that the helpers are at this time out on a sympathetic strike with the Plumbers' Union.

The young workers of this country must give the utmost of support to this movement. These pioneers in the organization of the unorganized young workers must be encouraged and helped by raising this question in every labor and youth organization and by financial aid. All power to them!

SPORT



HELEN WILLS

All sport enthusiasts as well as full blooded Americans will watch the progress of Helen Wills in Europe. Ill health accounted for her showing last year. Restored to health and her usual brilliant tennis form she is on her way to a series of matches thru which she intends reaching the top again. There seems little doubt she will become world's champ, and will stay one for a long time now that temperamental Susanne Lenglen is out of it. Preceding Helen Wills, Tilden has made his comeback an impressive one. European cities sat up and took notice in his decisive wins in Germany, Holland and France. Both Tilden and Wills represent a part of the cleaner side of American sport and both are masters in their game.

Having achieved world-wide and everlasting fame as a daring prophet in predicting Sharkey would beat the Boston Mahogy, we rest on our laurels. We are not going to endanger our reputation by predicting the winner in a Sharkey-Dempsey fight. Liks Lindberg, on having crossed the Atlantic, why bother risking a return trip?

It's enough to know that we were right. We admit it. Hereafter on advices on matters of sport, consult the international expert of the Youth Column.

PHILA Y. W. L. PICNIC

Sunday, May 29th, is a big day in Philadelphia. On that day the masses will stream "back to nature"—to Flaxman's Farm, Somerton, Pa., where the Young Workers League has arranged the first picnic of the year. Every young worker in the vicinity, everyone who has some youthful spirit left, will be there.

At seven in the morning the fun will begin. And it won't cease until twelve at night. There will be dancing in the beautiful new pavilion, sports, all sorts of entertaining features, a couple of good speakers, AND . . . JUST WAIT AND SEE! There will be the most pleasing surprise of the year!

The proceeds of the picnic will be divided between the Young Workers League BUILD THE LEAGUE FUND (of district three) and the summer camp of the Young Pioneers League.

Listen, friends, take the advice of an old picnic-goer, take any car or elevated going to Frankford, stop at Marguerite St., exchange for Somerton bus and get off at Somerton Station. There you will find a committee which will take you to the picnic. If you miss this, you miss the liveliest, most enjoyable picnic ever arranged.

PAN-PACIFIC LABOR MEETING SCORES U. S.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE tory government of Great Britain is surely carrying the white man's burden these days. The weary and low in spirit from defending the interests of civilization against the Chinese, the Hindoos and other wicked people that insist on claiming the right to live according to their own standards, the British ruling classes can afford to expend a little surplus energy looking after the interests of American imperialism.

IN the raid made on Arcos, the stool-pigeons of Scotland Yard claim to have seized certain documents indicating that the Communist International is conducting Communist propaganda in the United States. This information was immediately dispatched to Washington. Perhaps the battered aristocrats of old England expect that in return for this bit of finking their wealthy cousins may become amenable to a suggestion for a cancellation of the debt that Great Britain owes the United States.

IN order to discover that the Communist International is carrying on agitation against the capitalist system in the United States as well as in every other country in the world all the clever detectives of the United States government have to do is to read The DAILY WORKER which is published quite openly. In fact the Communists of the United States go to great trouble to distribute the statements of the Communist International on current events, because they know that those statements have great educational value for the working class.

WHETHER the British government succeeds in hooking up a serious combination of powers in its present anti-Soviet drive remains to be seen. There are rumors that France is about to break off relations with Moscow, Italy is almost certain to follow Downing Street and a few other little powers may yelp at the clink of British gold. But there is a strong likelihood that the country of Great Britain will fall flat. The record of her ruling classes for treachery and deceit which earned her the title of "perfidious Albion" is too well known to lead honest people into believing the statements of a British government official.

AS one writer in the New York Telegram points out premier Baldwin's speech indicated that the break with the Soviet Union was based on the alleged activities of Soviet officials in the stealing of British government official documents not intended for public consumption. The same writer points outs. Scotland Yard resorted to burglary and second story work in attempting to make this charge stick.

ALL governments spy on each other and important secret documents are constantly disappearing from government archives. Only quite recently, president Calles of Mexico came into possession of secret instructions issued by the state department to United States agents in Mexico, urging them to conduct an aggressive campaign against the Calles government. The military attachs attached to the United States embassy in Mexico from whose safe the documents were stolen was recalled and the matter was hushed up. Calles used the incident to good advantage in his dickering with Washington. From the point of view of capitalist ethics the thing was alright.

THE fact is that Great Britain's decision to break with the Soviet Union is an act of desperation to which she is driven owing to the defeat she has sustained in China and the fear that a revolt in India would bring the rotten imperialist edifice tottering to its base. She fears the Soviet Union because it is a government of free workers and peasants that stretches out a friendly hand to the oppressed of all lands. It is not Soviet Union "agents" that are menacing British imperialism but the Communist idea, which finds fertile soil in the countries that are under the heel of British militarism.

THE German press with one voice declares for neutrality in the present Anglo-Soviet crisis. The Germans are not willing to risk the loss of much business with Russia by joining the anti-Soviet line of England is ready to make heavy concessions in return for assistance. In the meantime we may expect to see the columns of our capitalist papers filled with rehashed "discoveries" of Soviet propaganda.

THE capitalist world is a house divided against itself. It has no morals and its god is profit. Every

There is nothing in any of the documents published (even assuming their authenticity, which is doubtful) that would indicate that the Soviet Union has carried on any propaganda in Great Britain.

GOVERNOR FISHER HIDES RECORD OF COAL MINE THUGS

Shaft Caves; Injures Four Men at Kingston

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 26.—Governor Fisher of Pennsylvania in effect is placing himself as a shield for murderers and thugs used by the coal companies of his state. He has refused to allow Oliver K. Eaton, an attorney for the United Mine Workers of America, to see the official records as to who is sworn in as coal and iron police, and who vouches for the new men added to the force.

Evidence is accumulating that the Pittsburgh Coal Co. is importing gunmen and thugs from outside of the state and having them sworn in as Coal and Iron Police. The law of Pennsylvania provides that to become a member of this body, that is, a company guard wearing a state uniform and with considerable power to make arrests, a man must be a resident, and have the sworn statements of two well reputed citizens who act as guarantors. The Coal and Iron Police of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., which have been shooting and marauding thru the mining camps are, many of them, the union dis-covers, hired gangsters, brot into the state, and guaranteed by still other gunmen, previously in the company's hire.

The man or men who shot James Moore in the back a few days ago were Coal and Iron Police of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., stationed at Crescent, near here. They may very well, the present investigation shows, have been Chicago gangsters, or fresh from the bed-lands of Cicero.

The governor cites a decision of the attorney general that the Coal and Iron Police records are his private property. Legal action to compel an investigation is contemplated.

The Daily Worker Must Have Your Aid

AN APPEAL TO ALL PARTY MEMBERS AND SYMPATHIZERS.

Comrades:

Because of technical and managerial changes in the present plant The DAILY WORKER must either make new arrangements involving considerable expense, or secure new quarters immdiately.

The DAILY WORKER faces the danger of immediate suspension. We have received an ultimatum from our printers stating that they would no longer continue publication unless $1.800 is raised before Monday, May 30. To meet this situation adequately, we must have in our hands not less than $25,000 by July 9.

The DAILY WORKER editors and business manager are on trial today on a charge preferred by open shop "patriotic" societies. They face jail sentences.

The whole world trembles with the threat of a new war.

If The DAILY WORKER should be permitted to suspend at this time it would be the most crushing blow our movement has yet received. It would mean a direct encouragement to the forces of American imperialism to go forward full speed in their nefarious march toward a new World War. It would be hailed with triumph by the Greens, the Wolls, the Sigmans, and the Cahans, as well the entire horde of open-shoppers and enemies of labor, whose interests these betrayers of the workers are protecting. It would be a signal for a direct assault upon labor and its standards on every front.

Comrades! No matter what self-sacrifice and devotion you have already shown in your day-to-day struggles against the bosses and the right wing, this is the time for the even greater sacrifice and devotion. We must not lose the heart and center of our movement. We must not lose the vital dynamo of the class struggle. We must not lose The DAILY WORKER.

We therefore ask in all earnestness that every comrade and sympathizer take stock of his resources and send to us immediately every available dollar he can raise through loans or contributions. Unless this plea is acted on with speed and dispatch, we may tomorrow face the prospect of the loss of our beloved organ. We have the utmost confidence that the comrades throughout the country will respond to this frank statement of our difficulties with a Bolshevik determination, which will pull us through.

U. S. Conference Demanded to Help Sacco and Vanzetti

AL SMITH PACKED TRANSIT BOARD WITH FRIENDS OF TRACTION FIRMS

State Board Packed to Assure No Hostile Move Against Plunderbund

The Exposures Thus Far:

The billion dollar traction steal which was incorporated in 1913 made its way by wholesale fraud and the corruption of city and state officials.

Over $300,000,000 of the city's money was sunk in the subways; nearly $150,000,000 in addition has been the loss to date as a result of the yearly deficit of over $11,000,000 which the taxpayers must bear as a result of the sell out.

On the top of this a huge increased fare steal is now being planned; involved are Governor Al. Smith, Mayor Jimmie Walker, the executive editor of a large metropolitan newspaper and others mentioned in the following article.

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

The Morgan banking concern dipped its long arms into the pockets of the city taxpayers for millions in the form of bonuses and special percentages exacted by this concern for floating the bonds of the traction companies. The officials of the city, the officers of the companies and no doubt numerous others received hundreds of thousands of dollars in bribes to put through the traction swindle.

The chairman of the city Board of Estimate who sanctioned the steal was George McAneny, later appointed to the new Transit Commission by Governor Nathan L. Miller. Another who was on this board was William A. Prendergast, later appointed to the position of chairman of the New York Public Service Commission by Miller. This position Prendergast still holds. Now he is being used as the mouthpiece of the traction interests in their temporary squabble with Al. Smith, who in 1925 was eating quite peacefully out of their hands.

The part played by Leroy T. Harkness, assistant counsel, for the New York Public Service Commission in 1913 has already been indicated. That he was not alone in his betrayal of his sworn trust is proved by the fact that Travis H. Whitney, now vice president of the B.-M. T., was then the chairman of the Public Service Commission.

Legalize Steal.

To make the infamous 1913 steal "legal" it was necessary to put legislation authorizing the plunderbund. A bill was accordingly put through the New York State legislature, known as the Wagner bill.

The author of this bill is Robert F. Wagner, then state senator, later justice, now U. S. Senator Wagner, but the same Tammany grafter through whose hands several transformations. Wagner, it will be remembered, was the running mate of Al. Smith in the recent democratic landslide by which this precious pair were hurdled into office.

Did Senator Wagner get his reward for the part he played in the deal? No doubt! Among other evidences, there is the fact of his having advanced in public favor and of his having risen in public office—and no one, let it be known, rises in the empire state except through having come to a complete "understanding" with the traction czars. This is the writing on the wall which the somewhat perplexed, Al. Smith is reading with no little worry.

Al. Smith has already had one experience in attempting to buck the transit powers that be. In 1920 Al. was still the tried and true "friend" of the gullible people. As such his mission was to defend the fair public and to contend with the dragon of traction even as other heroes had invariably been called upon to do before him. What did Al. say then?

Brave Words!

"The traction question must be settled by municipal ownership. We have tried every other means and every other method but the time is now at hand when it will be just as ridiculous to think that private companies can operate transit facilities sufficient for the people of the state as it would be for us to believe that we could ever go back to the time when the little private water com-

BOSTON, May 26.—Sentiment is growing among militant labor bodies for a national workers' conference to save Sacco and Vanzetti from the electric chair on July 10. This was disclosed here today following the failure of Governor Fuller to name an open commission of five to review the evidence in the celebrated case in public.

When Fuller refused the request of the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee for such a commission in a letter made public today, he overturned at one blow the whole elaborate strategy followed by the committee for the past several months.

For months the official defense committee has tried to head off the vigorous protest movements planned by other labor bodies. This policy it has justified by the plea that only respectable middle class and upper class elements would be able to swing the governor over to the committee's plan of having a commission appointed to review the entire case in public hearings.

For weeks now Fuller has been deluged by requests from liberals, lawyers, clergymen and other spokesmen for respectable middle class opinion, to name the commission. But yesterday he informed the defense committee that he had no intention of naming such a body, but would continue his secret star chamber investigation of witnesses and evidence.

Halt Effective Protests.

In the meantime militant labor has found countless obstacles placed in its way by the defense committee, composed for the most part of personal friends of Sacco and Vanzetti, earnest people who have little conception of nation-wide agitation and organized propaganda because of their anarchist principles.

Efforts to hold a great national labor conference in Boston or New York were spiked last month by the committee. Efforts to raise money on a big scale have also been halted by the committee's policy that it alone had the right to handle defense funds, despite its meagre organization and contacts.

Anxious not to jeopardize the case, labor organizations such as the International Labor Defense deferred to the committee's practical command to soft-pedal vigorous labor demonstrations against the impending execution of workers' champions. Now that the committee's long and tortuous policy has been proved futile, demands were pouring in today for the calling of a national conference.

Louis Hyman, manager of the Cloak and Dress Makers Joint Board will speak, preceding the ball.

ATTACK ON DAILY WORKER PART OF DRIVE ON LABOR

CHICAGO, May 26.—In a statement issued today on the prosecution of the editors and business manager of The DAILY WORKER by various patriotic societies, the International Labor Defense, thru James P. Cannon, secretary, says:

"This attack on the only national labor daily, whose militant support of all progressive labor movements and brilliant workingclass editorial policy has won it a place in the hearts of thousands of American workers, is a signal for all lovers of liberty to rally to its defense."

"The same forces that are trying to murder Sacco and Vanzetti, crush the left wing in the Labor movement as a preliminary to the destruction of the unions, conquer Latin America and make war upon China and the Soviet Union, are behind this attempt to throttle the DAILY WORKER and jail leading members of its staff."

"This attack must not be allowed to succeed. The International Labor Defense considers that in this case are involved all of the demands of the working class for which it fights —free speech, free press and assemblage, the right to organize."

"We call upon all the members and supporters to come to the assistance of The DAILY WORKER by means of contributions to its defense fund and letters and telegrams of protest to Governor Smith of New York."

"The strangling of The DAILY WORKER would be a terrific blow to the whole American labor movement."

MINERS TO QUIZ GREEN ON TALK TO WOLL OUTFIT

Barred from membership in the National Civic Federation through the strict orders of his union, President William Green of the American Federation of Labor will undoubtedly be challenged at the next convention of the United Mine Workers concerning his address before the anti-union Federation here.

This development seemed a certainty yesterday as dispatches to the mine fields carried the news of Green's appearance at a Federation luncheon at the exclusive Bankers Club here on the same platform with Walter Gordon Merritt, legal authority on the open shop and counsel for the League for Industrial Freedom. The League is a union-smashing employers' concern which has repeatedly published vicious attacks on the American Federation of Labor.

Also present at the luncheon in New York's swankiest club were Matthew Woll, leader of the union-disrupting forces at work in the needle trades here, Gilbert H. Montague of the National Industrial Conference Board, an economic research agency kept by big employing interests; Marcus M. Marks, wealthy merchant and Republican politician; and Arthur Williams, vice president of the New York Edison Co., probably one of the most bitter anti-union firms in the city.

Green criticised the recent supreme court decision on the Bedford coal stone case, forcing union men to work on non-union cut stone against their will. Merritt upheld the decision.

BROWDER BRANDS WALL STREET AS BIGGEST MENACE

Calls on Latin-America to Fight Imperialism

(By Nationalist News Agency.)

HANKOW, May 26.—The significance of the Pacific countries on both sides of the ocean in the forthcoming world war is being pointed out in Hankow at the Pan-Pacific Labor Conference, representing eight countries: China, Japan, Russia, England, France, United States, Java, and Korea.

The working session of the conference opened on May 21. The position of America in the coming struggle for world domination and the coming war in the Pacific was outlined by Earl Browder, the American delegate, who indicated that though the United States is the strongest power in the Pacific materially, it is a country which is temporarily at a disadvantages in its struggle in the Pacific because of Japan's strong geographic position and of Britain's precedence in the Pacific arena.

He stated that America is seeking the most favorable moment to establish an Asian hegemony and is now playing off Britain and Japan against each other in order to usurp their positions. The Far East, especially China, will be the basis of the next world war, he asserted.

Bargain Among Thieves.

America previously traded off British ambitions in the Far East for America's ambitions in Latin America, Browder continued, so the idea that America was motivated by pure friendship is mistaken. American imperialism was characterized as the most dangerous in all the world for China. America's usurpations in the Philippines were cited as instances; also her policy toward Latin American countries. The enormous significance of Latin America in the imperialist struggle in the Pacific was pointed out together with the necessity for close co-operation of oppressed peoples against imperialism.

A resolution was adopted in which the conference greets Latin America, expressing regrets on account of the inability of Latin American delegates to attend, and urging on Latin American labor groups to co-operate in the struggle against imperialism.

British Criminal Freed.

(By Nationalist News Agency.)

SHANGHAI, May 26.—The British soldier who was charged with criminally attacking a Chinese woman servant on April 22, after forcibly entering a Chinese residence in this city, was tried before civil and military judges at the Shanghai British Supreme Court. The trial followed a demand from Quo Tai-chi, Chiang Kai-shek's "commissioner of foreign affairs," which was addressed to the British consul-general. In the note Commissioner Quo requested that the soldier be court-martialed and that a representative from his office be permitted to attend the trial as an official observer. According to John Law, the accused soldier, was tried in the presence of a Chinese official sitting on the bench with the British judges.

Although positively identified by the attacked woman whose testimony was corroborated by witnesses, the

Elect Delegates to Int'l. Convention

Nomination of delegates to the convention of the International Fur Workers' Union to be held at Washington, D. C., was on the order of business at four well attended meetings of the Furriers' Union held last evening.

The meetings went on record in favor of the general strike to be called soon by the Joint Board to advance the work standard of the furriers, that have been beaten down to a low level as a result of the united front between the bosses and the A. F. of L. bureaucracy.

The Rotten Borough Agents in Soft Soap

This series of ten articles, of which this is the fifth, deals with the exploitation of the industrial insurance agent and methods to combat the evils of weekly payment life insurance. This series is the result of numerous requests to publicize the details of the swindle and fraud to which the agent is subject in common with the policyholder.

Article V.

By CHARLES YALE HARRISON.

"It seems to us that the best thought of the age has fixed upon insurance as the solvent for most of the economic ills of society."

"One can in imagination picture the time, when, instead of one in every five, four in every five shall be insured in industrial mutual insurance companies; and in the development of these companies along welfare lines one may look to the time when the people shall take care of themselves through life insurance . . . a mutual service of co-operation among such a large proportion of the population that it may be called the New Socialism!"

Capitalist Hokum

The above is from a booklet issued by the Metropolitan Life addressed to its twenty-odd thousand field workers. It is the sort of nonsense which emanates from headquarters from time to time in the hopes that in some occult manner the field worker will realize, that, in spite of low wages and harsh working conditions he is helping to bring on the economic millenium as conceived by the publicity agents of the "Big Four."

The average agent for the four industrial life insurance companies is a poorly paid worker indeed. Certainly his weekly earnings are less than those received by the semi-skilled worker in the factory or mill.

What he lacks in pay, the companies try to make up for in tickling his susceptibility to flattery. Medals and honor pins are awarded him for years "of faithful service" or for high standards of insurance production. In spite of the bits of bronze and nickel which a few proudly wear the average weekly wage is not over $35.

The system under which the industrial insurance agent works makes it impossible for him to be absolutely honest with his policyholders. If the agent is overwhelmed by a surge of honesty he soon learns that fair-dealing works to his economic disadvantage.

The increase of his collection debit through additions of new policies is one of the large factors upon which depend the amount of his special salary. And as he is continually being fined for lapsed business he finds himself in the position of a man who is bailing out a sinking boat. He must bail faster in order to keep afloat.

Increases Field of Graft

The system compels the agent, if he is to retain his job, not only to write new policies (which under the present economic order is sometimes a justifiable act) but he must replace the lapsed policies with new ones before he receives a dollar in salary for his work.

When one remembers that last year the "Big Four" lapsed over six million industrial policies the bailing process must be a fast one to earn a living at it.

Must Pay 'Til Death.

The fear of a lapsed policy causes the agent to lie and misrepresent the true facts regarding the proposed lapsed policy. For example, policies issued prior to 1907 with most companies have no cash surrender value. The policy must be paid on until death. The holder of such a policy and there are millions of them in force, cannot receive a dollar of his deposits back irrespective of the desperate straits in which he might find himself. In reply to questions regarding the advisability of maintaining such a policy in force the agent invariably replies in the affirmative.

In other cases when an industrial policy has been in force for but a few months or so and the insured feels that he would like a change to a policy embodying less murderous rates, self-interest dictates to the agent that such a policy must not be lapsed.

In the light of such conditions his position is not an enviable one. He must do the company's bidding or get out. And get out he does; so much so that that yearly labor turnover with the "Big Four" is over 50%, an unusually high rate.

Many Fail

The abolition of the "lapse and charge" system will, of course, relieve the agent of the embarrassing role he now plays as scapegoat for the insurance plunderbund.

How is this possible in the face of the organized opposition on the part of these billion dollar corporations?

First the insuring public must be acquainted with the fact that their "mutual" companies are perpetuating a system whereby the defrauding of the public must continue indefinitely.

Second the agents themselves must organize into protective unions and carry on a militant fight against the exploitation of their members and the defrauding of the public.

When the forty million policyholders realize that the fight is not only for better wages and working conditions for the agent but is being waged also for lower rates and for a really co-operative control of the business, it will not be long before the inoculation "takes."

The governor himself continued busy at the state house quizzing witnesses, jurors and experts in the case. Five more jurors were questioned yesterday, making a total of six so far. They stood pat on their verdict.

William Brenner, of Chelsea, a witness, told Fuller that he was working in the Rice & Hutchins shoe factory at South Braintree at the time of the payroll murder for which Sacco and Vanzetti were framed. He was at a shop window directly overlooking the bandit car but was unable to identify any of the participants, although he declared witnesses for the state testified that they had been able to identify the criminals with ease from much greater distances.

U.S.S.R. Delegate Calls Tory Charges False

vin of illegal activity in Britain by the Soviet Union.

"Everything has been sacrificed in the interest of party struggles in Great Britain," said the Rosengoltz statement. "With full consciousness of the seriousness of the present moment the United Soviet Republics which have always pursued a policy of peace now lay full responsibility for all the consequences of the rupture between Russia and Great Britain on the present government of Great Britain."

Regarding Premier Baldwin's charges that M. Berzdin, Bolshevist adviser to the Hankow government, was under Moscow instructions, M. Rosengoltz said that the telegram upon which this charge was based bore "all signs of invention, particularly the constructions of phrases and the terms used and reference to non-existent bodies."

One "incriminating document," alleged to have been found in the possession of Robert Koling, carrier of diplomatic mail, was from the secretary of the Transport Workers' Union of the USSR and "contained instructions" that papers and periodicals should henceforth be sent to the International Seamen's Club at 26 South St., New York, instead of to Wangerin in Chicago. The International Seamen's Club receives magazines and other periodicals from all over the world.

With practical certainty that the House of Commons will tonight ratify the cabinet decision for rupture, it is understood that the Soviet embassy staff plans to leave London on Sunday.

Right Laborites Yellow.

LONDON, May 26.—The British cabinet's decision to break trade and diplomatic relations with Soviet Union was made a question of confidence in the House of Commons this afternoon, by Sir Austen Chamberlain, Tory foreign minister. The debate on the cabinet's action opened at 4 o'clock this afternoon before a packed chamber.

Little opposition to the Tory motion developed in the House of Commons, despite the indignation of the labor movement, because the weak conciliatory position taken by the right wing of the Labor Party has abandoned its intention to move a vote of censure for fear "championing the cause of Bolshevism."

Clynes Motion.

The Labor motion which John R. Clynes moved, in place of Ramsay MacDonald, was carefully worded as follows:

"That having heard the statement of the Prime Minister, this House is of the opinion that the termination of the trade agreement with Russia, and the severance of diplomatic relations, would have serious international consequences and close a promising avenue to the restoration of trade and industry, and is, therefore, a policy which the country ought not to be committed until a report of a select committee, based upon the examination of all relevant documents, and full enquiry into the facts, has been submitted to the House."

Ramsay MacDonald refrained from participating in the debate.

The vote is expected at 11 o'clock tonight.

The Old Bunk.

In moving a vote of confidence Austen Chamberlain, Tory Foreign Minister, rehashed all of the hoary charges "that the Soviet Union has carried on political propaganda in Great Britain." The recent "Hands Off China" demonstration before the British embassy was regarded by the Foreign Minister as a "Soviet plot!"

The reverse of the British in the Far East were also distributed by Chamberlain to the Soviet Union.

USSR Denies War Move.

MOSCOW, May 26.—No unusual military activity is visible here, despite rumors published abroad that Russia is placing herself on a war footing.

Official comment on Riga dispatches that the Russian Army and Navy have been ordered to make war preparations is limited to the word, "nonsense."

Premier Baldwin's speech announcing the cabinet decision for a break with Russia is published here today for the first time.

"History will show which is the strongest, the nerves of the English lords or the workers and peasants of Russia," commented Pravda.

Iowa Operator Gets Injunction.

CENTERVILLE, Ia., May 26 (FP). —The Barrett Co., operating soft coal mines near Centerville, has obtained an injunction against the United Mine Workers, forbidding the union from interfering with anyone wishing to work for Barrett at the 1927 scale. The operators in Iowa have taken some steps in organizing a scab union known as the Brotherhood of Miners which accepts the 1917 rate.

Iowa miners, like others in the union, are permitted to work during the suspension that began April 1 if they accept the 1924 Jacksonville scale. A number of outlying fields in the country are doing so and a few mines in the central competitive field (Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Western Pennsylvania). Union headquarters at Indianapolis report that the suspension is "proceeding normally."

Needle Trade Defense

The big reception that the workers of New York are preparing in honor of the recently released prisoners will be held tonight at the Star Casino, 107th Street and Park Avenue. All the released furriers with their families will be present. Chas. Wolfish, the Cloakmaker who has served four months in jail, will be there to greet his many friends. A great crowd is expected to come to demonstrate their solidarity with the men who were released and those who are still behind prison bars.

From a Guilty Conscience.

The following letter was received from Chas. Isaac Brothers: It hurts me very much that I cannot, due to the economic situation, collect very much money for your work. I therefore send you $5.00 and I have missed and hope that you will succeed in your work.—N. C., Cuba.

Workmen's Circle For the Defense.

Don't get frightened. The National Office of the Workmen's Circle did not yet decide to support the defense. It will only support the Sigman gang in its attempt to break the unions, but not the cloakmakers and furriers who are victims of this fight. Come and file members, however, are supporting the cloakmakers and furriers. Branch 155 of Toledo Ohio is the latest to be heard from. They had an affair at which $17.00 was collected for the imprisoned cloakmakers and furriers and sent to the office of the Joint Defense Committee.

Mr. Sam Ansbel writes as follows: I am sending you $5.00 for coupons. I do so because I know that you are in need of money immediately. I will try my best to sell the other coupons.

A. Lipkin, Baltimore, Maryland.

Send in Your Money.

The Joint Defense Committee calls on all other workers to follow the example of these workers who understand the importance of immediately sending in the money that they have on hand. The Joint Defense Committee needs all the money the masses collected for tickets, Roll Call Certificate Booklets, Honor Roll Lists and Coupon Booklets. Send it in immediately.

Office Workers Send $90.80

The office workers of the Furrier Joint Board at a meeting of their shop committee took up the matter of the imprisoned cloakmakers and furriers. They decided to give full support to these valiant fighters and collected the total $90.80 which has been received at the office of the Joint Defense and Relief Committee.

Fur Workers in the Garment Unions

By Margaret Larkin

The passive attitudes of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the record of administration and the arising evil of the rotten borough system are reviewed in today's instalment of the official review of recent struggles in the left wing of the needle unions.

The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Its members are workers on women's clothing, waists, underwear, white goods, embroidery, and so on. The total membership in the United States and Canada is about 70,000. In New York City, the industry is well organized, there being about 40,000 members in the New York Joint Board, at which about 25,000 are members of the four "Left Wing" locals, here specified.

In every locality where there are two or more local unions engaged in various branches of the same trade, a Joint Board is established under the constitution of the union. The chief functions of the Joint Board are to attend to complaints of members against employers, to negotiate and control the union shops, to organize non-union shops, to conclude agreements with the employers, and to work for the general welfare of the members. The Joint Board has a right to fix the minimum dues and assessments to be paid by the workers to their locals. Consequently the local would pay toward the upkeep of the Joint Board.

The New York Joint Board is composed of thirteen locals. They are organized on a craft basis—cloak operators, cloak finishers, pressers, cutters, dressmakers, button hole makers, each have a separate local. The demands of the trade cause the locals to vary greatly in size. There are many more operators needed in the industry than button hole makers, for instance. Consequently the Operators' Local 2 has more than 12,000 members, while the button hole makers' Local 64 has less than one hundred.

The Joint Board and its component locals carry on a tremendous amount of activity in the interests of the workers. Their yearly expenditures in normal times amount to nearly a million dollars, and in time of strike, additional hundreds of thousands of dollars must be spent. The strike of 1921, which lasted eight weeks, cost the union $1,046,531. The stoppage of 1924, which lasted officially for two weeks, in which few arrests were made and picketing was unnecessary, cost half a million dollars. In the first twenty weeks of strike, in 1926, for which official reports were given by the General Strike Committee, $2,794,000 was spent, half of which went for strike benefits.

Needle trades strikes in New York City are necessarily costly because of the character of the industry. Mass picketing against the thousands of shops involved must be carried on. The use of the injunction by the employers causes hundreds of arrests. Halls must be rented for the all-day meetings of the workers. Strike benefit must be paid. The union therefore prepares for possible strikes by collecting a "war chest" of a million dollars or more, with which to fight for better wages and working conditions for its members.

The government of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, as set up by its curiously old-fashioned constitution, is briefly as follows:

Local unions elect annually by direct vote of the membership, a President, Vice-President, Financial-Recording Secretary, and members of the Executive Board of the local.

The Joint Board is composed of delegates elected from each member local.

Formerly representation was equal, so that several little locals of less than one hundred members sending as many delegates to the New York Joint Board as locals of 12,000 members. In the convention of 1925, however, the Left Wing demanded, and succeeded in obtaining, a revision of the constitution, which allows representation more nearly proportional to the size of the locals in the New York Joint Board.

The manager of the Joint Board was formerly elected by the Joint Board itself. When the Joint Board became predominantly Left-Wing, after the convention of 1925, it revised its constitution to allow direct election of the manager. Louis Hyman, the present manager of the Joint Board, is thus the first to hold that position by vote of the majority of all the members in New York.

The officers of the International—President, General Secretary-Treasurer, and the Vice-Presidents who comprise the General Executive Board, are elected at the biennial convention.

The "Rotten Borough" System.

The representation of locals to the convention, which elects the International officers, carries on general business, revises the constitution, and serves as the highest body of the union, has long been a source of great dissatisfaction to the membership. It is around this point that many internal struggles, looking this present stronghold, which dwells the International officers with power unmeasured, that [illegible] which are [illegible] of the union.

The constitution provides that a local union may be established by the International only with power unmeasured, that [illegible] which are [illegible] of the union.

the local union unable to have the number of members to send delegates to the International may pay their expenses. Local unions are entitled to delegates according to the following basis of membership:

300 to 500 members, 3 delegates.
500 to 1,000 members, 4 delegates.
1,000 to 5,000 members, 4 delegates for first 1,000 and 1 for each additional 1,000.
5,000 to 11,000 members, 8 delegates for first 5,000 and 1 for each additional 2,000.
11,000 or more members, 11 delegates for first 11,000 and 1 for each additional 5,000.

Such a system, originally designed to protect the small locals, has in actual practice militated against the large ones. Local 22 and Local 2, each with 12,000 members, are entitled to one delegate for every thousand members, whereas a local of seven members is entitled to one delegate for every three and one-half members. Since locals only need three month's existence prior to convention to entitle them to representation, the result of the system has been that every convention has been controlled by a host of little locals, organized just prior to the convention, who can and do consistently outvote the great mass of the membership whenever the Administration policies are challenged. In the convention of 1925, for instance, Morris Sigman was elected as president of the International by the votes of a majority of the delegates, although Louis Hyman was supported by the New York, Boston and Chicago delegates and delegates from other cities, representing seventy per cent of the membership.

The Left Wing has championed the demand of the membership for the abolition of this "Rotten Borough" system for years, and as will be shown later, this issue is at the very heart of the present dispute.

Frigidaire Cool in Workers' Treatment

All the workers in the service department of Frigidaire (subsidiary of General Motors) are on salary. This only flatters to deceive, however, as the obligation of other firms to pay overtime is evaded.

If one had to work extra hours once a week, it wouldn't be so bad, but the nature of the job sometimes necessitates overtime three or four days a week.

Not content with this demand on the workers' time, Frigidare encroaches still farther by asking attendance at their night school. An idea is to make the worker efficient in the workers' time.

READY TO PRESS FOR RECOGNITION OF SOVIET UNION

Logical Outcome of Geneva Conference

WASHINGTON, May 26. — The miserable sham and cowardice of the Coolidge-Kellogg government in its relations to Soviet Russia was never more clearly laid bare than in the outcome of the international economic conference that has just been brought to a close at Geneva.

This conference of economists, representing all the great nations of the world, after several weeks of interchange of views and opinions agreed upon a resolution the substance of which means the recognition of Soviet Russia. The declaration proclaims that Soviet Russia is a going concern and as such is duly recognized by the capitalistic governments of the world.

Kellogg's Brain Contortions.

It means that only by mere technicality can the United States claim that it has not given recognition to the Russian government. Secretary of State Kellogg vehemently denies this fact. He attempts to maintain, that the American delegates of the world, representing the United States by appointment from President Coolidge, merely participated in an economic conference—and by no stretch of the imagination could have recognized the existence of the Russian government.

Such reasoning and such an irreconcilable attitude is of course all that could be expected from Kellogg, with his "Red" complex. But before the eyes of the world it places the Coolidge-Kellogg government in the position of being liars and cowards and makes of their protestations a yammer of sham and blatancy.

As a matter of fact it was the American delegates who were responsible for the resolution according recognition of the Communistic system. The British, French and Japanese delegations were opposed to acquiescing in any report which accorded recognition of the Soviets. Unless a unanimous report was adopted, according to League of Nation rules, the conference would have had to break up without an official declaration.

Agree to Report.

The American delegation set to work to bring about a compromise and by a bit of shifting of expressions evolved a document which while giving Soviet Russia full recognition, did so without the bluntness that was so distressing to the capitalistic sensitiveness of the objectors. This reworded report was agreed to by all and will within a few days be submitted as the official record of the conference.

Advocates of Soviet Russian recognition are getting much amusement out of the situation. The facts are really most astonishing—the American delegation chosen and represenring the Coolidge-Kellogg government not only recognians the Communist government of Russia but primarily responsible for such recognition before the entire economic conference. Senator Borah, who has demanded governmental recognition, is preparing a public statement on what was done at Geneva, pointing out the stupidity and sham of the Coolidge-Kellogg attitude and demanding that the gesture that alone remains, of exchanging ambassadors with Russia, be consummated.

normal capitalist in the world curses the Soviet Union every time he thinks of it. But capitalists must do business or die, so they prefer not to die. While some of them are driven to break off diplomatic relations with the government of the Soviet Union other capitalist groups rub their hands gleefully over the prospect of making profits at the trouble of their fellow robbers. A system like this cannot last.

THERE is one Frenchwoman who will kiss a male lip that scorns the touch of liquor. Opportunity is always knocking in one way or another, the the great majority do not see it coming and get knocked down. If aviator Lindbergh is not a volunteer advertisement for the anti-saloon league my guess is lost. Coming to think of it he is deplorably lacking in tact and being of Scandinavian descent this is not surprising.

WHAT happened is this: At one of the many banquets organized in Mr. Lindbergh's honor the hero arose to respond to a toast which was "Lindbergh: we are here," or something like that. The honored guest arose, grasped his wine glass like a man, raised it to his lips and drank not of the treacherous fluid. France fainted when it heard the news. Here was the second most important industry—indeed the only reason for all other indnstries—shattered by the unhooking of an elbow.

AS soon as the untasted wine descended to the table the hero spoke those words: "I drink to France, most heroic of nations and home of the greatest airmen." Then suddenly out of a sober banquet leaped a French girl and smacked Lindbergh on his wineless lips. At the moment of writing the female has not been shot as an industrial traitor but there is talk of deporting Lindbergh. In fact the hero's refusal to drink wine and then claim that he had taken a nip has aroused public opinion in France to such a pitch that there is a strong movement on foot for the cancellation of the war debt to the United States. Virtue is alright in its place but when an ambassador unofficial or official goes to Paris he should do as Paris does.

OUR young air marvel should stick to flying and leave diplomacy to more accomplished statesmen. It is all very well to give another country credit for being the home of strong men and weak women but it is treason most brazen to give a foreign country credit for being the only home of men that die and of women that don't. This is what Lindbergh has done, the true outside of the readers of this column may get the implication.

IT is deplorable that this column is forced to criticise our countrymen at a moment when his praise is on every tongue but duty is duty. In a week or two the pre-historic dames of the mayflower will be passing resolutions suggesting his execution for lack of patriotism. He might have helped Mellon to collect the French debt but by quaffing the champagne glass. And he might have been forgiven for his unpatriotic remarks by the great liberty-loving population of America that resents government interference with their stomachs if not with their ideas, had he hoisted his drink like a citizen. In reply to the protestations of the patriot bent on the reprisal they would say collectively: "Sure, the poor devil did not know what he was talking about. Would you, after a hooker of heady champagne?" This would floor the patriot who might be carried out by an irritated cop, feet foremost.

$35,000 Bank Robbery.

HAMMOND, Ind., May 26.—Three armed bandits today robbed Norman Kriscoss, director, and Mrs. Lavinia Green, teller of the Maywood trust and savings Bank, of $35,000 in cash and escaped.

The money had just been withdrawn from the Citizen's National Bank for the Standard Steel Car Company to meet a payroll.

AMID DIN OF CRACKING JOINTS AND THE RUSTLE OF DOLLAR BILLS U. S. LADIES BOW BEFORE KING GEORGE

By Our London Society Representative
Special To The Daily Worker

LONDON, May 26.—With knee hinges wheezing and spines cracking, sixteen American society dames got the raise of their admission fees to the royal reception that was given today abid all the exotic splendor of Buckingham Palace. True to their reputation for gameness those splendid representative of American womanhood stood up to the king with clenched jaws and a grin.

Frankly ignoring the Anglo-Russian break those ambassadors of beauty went about the serious business of cementing closer relations between the United States and the British royal family with a coolness worthy of their cause.

They sat for fully an hour in luxuriously-equipped carriages at the entrance to Buckingham Palace waiting patiently while the king was having his evening bath. Hundreds of London men and women gazed curiously at their wealthy cousins and wondered if the visitors could refrain from walking away with little bits of his majesty as souvenirs.

King George is now working full time at the king business. All union rules and regulations are now down. His majesty is putting in three shifts a day and a late night shift. He will soon win the reputation of "The Shifty Monarch." Most English kings have gained a reputation for something or other but this is the first time our present rulers seems doomed to go down in history as the man they like to toueh.

But touching the king is a case of tit for tat. Every time an American lady runs the risk of dislocating her right hip before him, it costs her enough money to support a dog hospital.

Engian expects to make enough money out of introducing American heiresses to King George this year to cover the loss of trade that is expected to follow the rupture with Russia.

This is the best-paying graft in the world, outside of the new pitch the holy father at Rome is exploiting, namely annulling the marriages of wealthy Catholics.

"5 and 10" Stores Fail In Berlin and Hamburg

BERLIN, May 26.—The attempt of German business to establish the American type of "5 and 10 cent store" has proved a failure.

WORKERS! STOP THE MURDER OF SACCO AND VANZETTI

ZINOVIEV'S CASE REFERRED TO CONTROL COMMISSION BY C. P. S. U. CENTRAL COMMITTEE

MOSCOW, May 12. (By Mail)—The decision of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union with regard to the speech of comrade Zinoviev on the 9th of May in a non-Party meeting devoted to the press day and the 15th anniversary of the foundation of the «Pravda," has just been published:

"In his speech comrade Zinoviev attacked the Central Committee of the C.P. of the U.S.S.R., its decisions and the Central Committee of the C.P. of the U.S.S.R. regards the attitude of comrade Zinoviev as a violation of all the undertakings of the opposition including comrade Zinoviev, as impermissable and intolerable in the ranks of the Bolshevik. The C.C. has therefore decided to hand the case over to the Central Control Commission for examination."

MOSCOW, May 12.—The resolutions adopted by the Moscow and Leningrad committees of the C. P. of the U.S.S.R. with regard to the speech of comrade Zinoviev declare that the attitude of comrade Zinoviev makes for disorganization and is calculated to under-mine the confidence of the proletarian masses in the C.C. of the C.P. of the U.S.S.R. and in the editorial board of the "Pravda." Comrade Zinoviev who, declare the resolutions, speaks of the necessity for the maintenance of the unity in the ranks of the Party, is actually undermining this unity. His action is a step towards the commencement of a new struggle of the oppositional block against the majority in the most impermissible forms. To place questions concerning internal party differences before non-Party workers is an attempt to obtain the support of the non-party workers for the Party. This is a step towards separation from the Party.

The resolutions demand that comrade Zinoviev be punished for this breach of Party discipline, particularly as he is not merely a Party member, but also a member of the Central Committee of the Party.

The Party conference of the Moscow Garrison which is at present sitting has also adopted a resolution demanding that the Central Committee and the Central Control Commission put an end to these breaches of discipline on the part of bankrupt leaders of the opposition.

By EARL BROWDER.

Reaction in Klangsi Province.

While these events were going on, the International Workers' Delegation arrived in Canton. After two weeks there, during which great demonstrations were organized with the participation of all sections of Revolutionary China under the slogan "Unite with the revolutionary proletariat of the imperialist countries," the delegation started to Hankow overland, a 25-day journey by way of Nancheng, thru Klangsi Province. On this trip we came into close contact with the work of reaction going on within the Kuomintang. Upon our arrival in Hankow on March 31, I was requested to put these experiences into writing, which I did that same day. The document was published in Chinese, in the "Min Kuo Jih Pao," a few days later. I quote from it:

"At Nanhan (March 17) we met the Kuomintang representative. Replying to our question, 'Can you tell us anything about the neighboring districts,' he answered: 'I can tell you that at Kanchow conditions are very reactionary.' He reiterated the news of the murder of Chen Tsan-yen, chairman of the Hankow General Trade Union, stated that he had worked in Kanchow and knew the conditions, that the reaction there controlled the Kuomintang District Committee, the Woman's Emancipation League, the Buro of Education, and the Merchants' Association, and also had a branch of the Narrow Nationalists' organization connected with Shanghai. Those forces had become very aggressive since the arrival of Li Pin (or, Ni Pi), Commissioner of the Provincial Kuomintang to the First Division stationed in Kanchow. The comrade who gave us the report concluded: 'This act is a coup directed against the policy of Sun Yat Sen'."

Kanchow Union Destroyed.

"We arrived at Kanchow the evening of March 19. We were met by a delegation with banners, who sent cards to us on the boat. But unlike every other city to which we had come, there were no cards from the trade unions, but only from merchants' associations and local Kuomintang. We asked the acting magistrate and party representative to visit us on the boat; we told them the purposes of our delegation, and then expressed surprise that for the first time we were not met by representatives of all revolutionary organizations, but only merchants and peasants being absent here. In reply to our questions, we were informed that There was formerly a General Trade Union here but it does not exist any more because it refused to register. The trade unions are not dissolved, but only transformed into preparatory organizations until they properly registier'. After many questions as to reasons for closing down the trade unions, we were finally informed of the local official version of the killing of Chen Tsan-yen, which was, that the unions made excessive demands, therefore registration was refused; 'preparatory organizations' have no right to make demands, collect dues, or organize defense corps, hut Chen refused to obey these rules; the magistrate asked Chen to come settle the dispute, a quarrel ensued, Chen threatened the magistrate with a revolver, whereupon an officer entered and shot Chen; all this occured on March 6th. This was the version of the acting magistrate and the local representative of the Kuomintang at Kanchow."

True Account of Murder.

"Later we got in touch with trade union leaders. They informed us that Chen had been arrested during a trade union meeting by soldiers, who stated that they were acting in the name of Marshal Chiang Kai-shek; the workers were afraid that danger threatened Chen and tried to follow to the magistrates office, but armed soldiers turned them back with a threat to fire upon them. The next morning Chen's body was found with 18 bullets in it; a photograph of the body was shown to us, which showed the body completely riddled with bullets. The trade union leaders told us that Chen was completely unarmed when arrested. They categorically denied the stories of excessive demands of 400% and 500% wage increases, and stated that all demands had been carefully graduated according to the economic possibilities, the very highest being 50%. They stated that several more union officials were threatened with the fate of Chen, and have been in hiding ever since. The trade unions must hold their meetings secretly, all premises being occupied by troops."

"Next day, March 20, at a conference on our boat with leaders of all local trade unions, the above statements were repeated and corroborated. We were further informed that two days previously, an election conference of the Kuomintang had been held, from which the workers and peasants had all been expelled, on the grounds that they were not qualified to participate in political matters. The Provincial Kuomintang representative (Hu Chi Shung) had approved this action. The trade union leader reporting this declared: 'The Kuomintang of this city now represents only the mandarins and capitalists because the workers and peasants have no voice whatever."

The Revolutionists Emerge.

The story of how we witnessed the suppressed revolutionary forces of Kanchow emerge, during our 36 hours there, and again assume supremacy, is extremely interesting but belongs in another place. Here we wish first to get a picture of how reaction was at work within the Kuomintang itself.

"On March 25, evening, we arrived in Nanchang. On the 26th, Comrade Tom Mann and myself, on behalf of the delegation, visited the general headquarters of the National Army, and the Provincial Government. At the general headquarters we were received by General Chang Chun very courteously; he expressed the sorrow of Marshal Chiang Kai-shek not to be able to meet us here, and invited the delegation to a banquet in the name of the Marshal, jointly with the Provincial Government. He then discussed the Chinese Revolution with us, the course of which he made statements differing from any we had before heard in China, the most important being: 'Our problems are entirely peculiar to China and have no relation to the problems of revolution in any other country; the Chinese revolution is not a part of the world revolution. On this point there are serious differences of opinion in the Kuomintang'."

"Strong Military Leader."

"At the Provincial Government we were met by the chairman of the executive committee, Mr. Li Liehchun. He also discussed with us the Chinese revolution, along the same lines as General Chang, with the addition of saying that the differences of opinion within the party were about the 'adjustment' and 'modification' of the program of the Kuomintang necessary to 'meet realities'; he also stated that the great need of the moment was a strong military leader."

"It must be added, that at the banquet that evening, both General Chang and Mr. Li spoke, and while not contradicting anything said in the morning interviews, their speeches were different in tone, being along the lines of welcoming the assistance of the world movement to the Chinese revolution."

Chiang, "The Strong Man".

"On March 29, at Kiukiang, we were accompanied thruout our stay by an officer, local representative of general headquarters, whose name I have lost. Just before our boat left, he came on board to bring us a basket of fruit, for which we thanked him kindly. He then conversed with us for 30 minutes, being interpreted by Dr. Taipoo Chen of our company. The line of his remarks was: The first necessity of the Chinese revolution is to obtain military victory; in order to achieve this, a strong leader must be found who can personally hold the loyalty of the entire army; such a man is Marshal Chiang Kai-shek; unfortuuately, there have arisen sharp differences within the party, which threaten its unity; this unity can be preserved only, also, by a strong man, in order to avoid divided counsels."

Now it had become clear what was the political significance of the struggle between Nanchang and Hankow over the location of the seat of government. From Nanchang, the reaction could base itself, first, upon its control of the provincial apparatus, and from there, move to its second, and more fundamental base, contact with the imperialist forces in Shanghai and the Northern generals with whom it was negotiating. Hankow (Wu-Huan cities), on the other hand, is the center of the most intense revolutionary spirit and organization, and already the location from which was functioning the apparatus of the Kuomintang government, which it was necessary for the reaction to disrupt.

The magic of military glory surrounding the name of the commander-in-chief of the victorious revolutionary armies was relied upon to sway the masses away from the leadership of the Central Kuomintang. Further, it was expected that again, as on March 20, 1926, military pressure would intimidate the central committee, and cause it to submit. The strategy of reaction was the production of a Chinese Napoleon.

OUR MARTYRS

The Execution of Comrade Li Tai-Chao and Nineteen of His Fellow Workers in Peking.

By TANG SHIN-SHIH.

ON the 28th day of April one of the best fighters of the Communist Party of China and the revolutionary Kuomintang were executed in Peking by the Northern militarists. Twelve days previously 20 revolutionists at the order of the imperialists. The murdered comrades were arrested on the 6th of April and were held on the Soviet Embassy in Peking which was inspired by the diplomatic corps. Five hundred armed bandits of Chang Tso-lin entered the foreign legation which consisting to the agreement forced upon China by the imperialists in 1900 after the Boxer rising, had not been entered by any armed Chinese. As no "suitable material" against the arrested was found, the necessary documents were quickly fabricated. Upon the basis of these forged documents an "extraordinary court" then sentenced the arrested to death by strangulation after farcial proceedings lasting two hours. The sentence was immediately executed.

AMONG the murdered was the prominent leader of the Chinese revolution and of the Communist Party, comrade Li Tai-Chao. His death like the deaths of the others means a tremendous loss for the Chinese proletariat and for the Communist Party.

COMRADE Li Tai-Chao was one of the founders of the Communist Party of China. He was a permanent member of the Central Committee of the Party. The Party had instructed him to work especially in North China. After the insurrection against the imperialists on the 18th of March in Peking, the Peking government issued an arrest warrant against him. He fled and remained for some time in Moscow, but soon afterwards he returned to Peking in order to continue his work illegally. During the fateful years of 1925-26 Li Tai-Chao and Li Ta-chao and his comrades fearlessly and tirelessly worked toward the work of organizing the revolutionary struggle of the proletariat against the militarists of North China and their imperialist supporters and acted a special hated of Li Tai-Chao.

COMRADE Li Tai-Chao rendered special services in the establishment of cooperation between the communists and the Kuomintang. At the instance of Comrade Lenin he tried as early as 1921 to persuade the Chinese communist group to participate in the national revolution. As long as General Wu Pei-fu gave himself out as a friend of the national emancipation of China, Li-Tai-Chao maintained touch with him, but immediately Wu Pei-Fu commenced his reactionary activities, he was abandoned by Li Tai-Chao. In 1922 Li Tai-Chao joined Sun Yat-Sen. Li Tai-Chao was the first communist member of the Kuomintang and Sun Yat-Sen accepted him with enthusiasm. Li Tai-Chao was elected a member of the Executive Committee of the Kuomintang at the first congress of the Kuomintang in 1924.

ANOTHER great service rendered by Li Tai-Chao was the organization of the railwaymen's union which today plays a great role in the revolutionary movement. Previous to 1921 the railwaymen were organized in the "transport association" under the infinence of a reactionary mandarbist clique. Li Tai-Chao utilised his temporary connection with Wu Pei-Fu in order to organize the railwaymen and draw them over to the side of the revolution. The great Tangsan miners' strike and the railway men's strike in 1923 took place under his leadership. Whilst the imperialists regarded him as their irreconcilable enemy, the workers regarded him as their true leader and were passionately attached to him.

AS early as 1919 comrade Li Tai-Chao played a leading role during the student unrests. Together with Comrade Chen Ta-Shu, the present geueral secretary of the Communist Party of China, he was one of the heads of the "free thought" movement. He also rendered valuable assistance to the movement of the Coreas people for emancipation.

COMRADE Li Tai-Chai was a well-known and popular author and professor of the Peking University for Law and National Economy.

HE once contributed a splendid article for the jubilee of a bourgeois newspaper, the "Shanghai Shuh Pao" upon the Paris Commune which drew thousands of Chinese students into the revolutionary movement.

BEFORE the extraordinary court comrade Li Tai-Chao declared proudly and openly that he was a follower of Marx and Lenin and that he would fight for the emancipation of the proletariat with the last breath in his body.

LI TAI-CHAO and the other executed comrades will live forever in the hearts of the Chinese workers and peasants, in the hearts of the international working class. The Chinese revolutionaries and the proletariat of all countries will continue the work of these comrades until the final victory.

British Imperialism—The Mad Dog of Europe.

Great Britain, having failed to secure the expected endorsement for her policy of boycott and war against the Soviet Union at Geneva and in the various foreign offices, has determined to act alone and try to stampede the other nations into following her lead.

There has been no such tension in international circles since 1920 when the Red Army thrust back the Polish offensive. Of all the European capitals Moscow alone remains calm. The Soviet Union foreign office, having told the world for the last year that Great Britain was preparing an offensive against Russia, and having prepared, on the basis of this knowledge, for all possible contingencies, can watch the scurrying in the foreign offices of the imperialist nations certain that they know nothing now that the Soviet foreign office did not know months ago.

But that a madman is loose in Europe must not be forgotten. British imperialist government will decide on more extensive acts of provocation and violence if it succeeds in crushing the British labor movement.

The trade union bill and the character of the fight made against it by British labor becomes therefore of decisive importance.

Dispatches from Shanghai report that British warships loaded with tons of barbed wire and with deckloads of sandbags have sailed up the Yangtze for Hankow. This can be interpreted only as preparation by Great Britain for war on the seat of the People's government—war which will begin the moment that British imperialism believes the time is ripe, first that it will have a certain amount of support from other imperialist nations or second, that they will not interfere openly.

War is in the air.

If Great Britain cannot provoke war her rulers will have suffered a defeat. Their whole maneuver has been to bring about a joint attack on China and the Soviet Union and to give new impetus to drive on the militant sections of the labor movement thruout Europe. In this connection it must not be forgotten that the French government has launched an attack on the Communist Party and the Unity Confederation of Labor and has already jailed many of their leaders.

The whole force of the American working class must be thrown into the struggle to smash this war plot.

We see now that the drive on the Communists and the left wing in the American labor movement has coincided with the international offensive—that like in all the other imperialist nations the reactionaries in America are trying to wipe out all possible centers of resistance to imperialist war.

The slogan of solidarity with the workers and farmers of Great Britain, France, Germany, Japan, China and the Soviet Union against war must be the rallying cry with which to gather into a solid front all sections of the American masses willing to struggle to prevent another blood bath for the world's work'ng class.

The British Labor Party and the Break With the Soviet Union

According to London dispatches the Parliamentary Labor Party will not move for a vote of censure on the tory government for its raid on the headquarters of the Russian Trade Delegation and the breaking off of relations with the government of the Soviet Union. Instead the right wing leaders will put down a mild resolution which expresses the opinion that the termination of diplomatic relations will have a damaging effect on imperial economy, will injure trade and have serious international consequences. The appointment of a select committee is suggested to make an examination of all the relevant documents captured in the raid.

This is not the language of workingclass spokesmen. It is the language of apologists for the tory government and for the system that this gang of second-story workers represents.

Instead of calling attention to the real character of the new Anti-Soviet drive led by Great Britain, those labor imperialists would draw the teeth of the resentment which the attack on the Workers' Republic is certain to arouse among the British workingclass.

The tory drive against the Soviet Union will not be blocked by polite speeches in parliament, except so far as those speeches are calculated to arouse the masses into struggle against the Forgers' Government. In fact, the right wing of the Labor Party is heart and soul with the tories in this conspiracy and there is more than a reasonable doubt that if the government was not assured of the benevolent neutrality of the king's labor fakers, it would never have acted with such disregard for its agreement with the Soviet government.

The workingclass movement of Great Britain is not represented by the right wing labor leaders. The masses are not going to lie down while workers and peasants of the Soviet Union are under attack, by the very government that crushed them during the general strike and leads the capitalist offensive against their already low standard of living. The militant British workers know that the attack on the Soviet Union is also an attack on the revolutionary trade movement at home. The British Communist Party can be depended on to show the workers how to fight and to organize them for the struggle. Should the situation develop as sharply as is now indicated the workers will have little use for the MacDonalds, Clynes and Snowdens. They will follow leaders who are not content with slapping their masters gently on the wrist. They will follow leaders who believe in giving the capitalist system a close shave from the shoulders up.

Socialist Presidential Possibilities.

According to an announcement by Victor L. Berger, the meeting of the national executive committee of the socialist party recently held in Pittsburgh decided that a presidential candidate will be nominated on that ticket for the 1928 elections. The so-

Peasant Reaction.

Any person who has spent some time in the American "backwoods" realizes the important part that this question of Fundamentalism plays in the minds of a large percentage of the population. To many individuals, sometimes even to whole communities, Fundamentalism is the greatest issue of the day before which all other issues sink into insignificance. What is the nature of this issue? What, if any, is its social basis? Why has it taken such a hold at the present moment?

Disregarding all the intricacies of dogma on which the question of Fundamentalism is based, we can generalize the whole matter by saying that Fundamentalism is a reactionary movement, a movement back to the ideas of their grandfathers, a protest against the modern spirit, against the changes in ideas that have come up in the last fifty to a hundred years.

Among the Country Poor.

What social classes are affected by this reaction? Firstly, there is some importance in the fact that the controversy has been fiercest among the Baptists and Methodists; protestant sects of emotional character which have their strongest holds on the poorer classes of the country, the petty bourgeoisie and workers of the small town, the poor farmer, the mass of the Negroes, etc. Secondly, the strength of the Fundamentalist movement is in the small town, on the farms, in parts of the country like the lower South where there is a low standard of living for the masses. The center of the attack of the movement is the large city with its great

The Issue Obscured.

Religion is the opiate of the people. The fundamentalist controversy is a blind deceiving the masses about the true character of the social struggle. The advances of monopolistic capitalism are hidden by the dust of religious controversy. The masses are confused, are made to forget the real issue. Our task is to uncover the eyes of the backward masses, to show them that the direction is not backwards but forwards. Forward by organization of society that will have no place for economic oppression, mortgages, and wage slavery.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

I am a reader of The DAILY WORKER, but not a member of the party. I just want to ask you whether we will ever have a union again here in the stock yards of Chicago, where I work.

We are working just like slaves. We have the bonus system. Oh Boy, and we have to work for that bonus of two dollars a week.

You can't say a word about the union to anyone, because if you do, you are fired, and the men are afraid to talk to one another. They don't need any bosses, they watch themselves.

I don't like what you say about the priests. There is good and bad in all of us. In the last strike we had here, we had a few priests on the picket line every morning. The some others were selling the tickets that if they didn't go back to work they would go to hell.

I wish you would write something about the Yards.—M. W., Chicago.

cialists want to get into the field early so they are to have a nominating convention in January.

To their convention are to be invited delegates of various farmer and labor "radical groups." We Communists are specifically given honorable mention. The socialist national committee does not think we are desirous of "co-operating." If the socialists expect us to accept their leadership and abandon our duty to the working class to warn them against the pitfalls of social-democracy, they are right. Certainly no group with a sense of responsibility to the working class can accept the program of the socialists and follow their leadership. To do so would be to land in the swamp of opportunist reaction.

But if the socialists really want to see a labor ticket behind which all groups in the labor movement who have broken with the capitalist parties can unite, we not only are desirous of cooperating but we will in the future, as we have in the past, do everything within our power to bring about unity of labor's forces behind candidates and a labor program.

In spite of the fact that the socialist national committee has already announced that it will have nothing to do with a united labor ticket and that they will enter the campaign alone, inviting other groups to accept THEIR program, we will still continue to fight for a labor ticket and, if possible, aid in building a labor party in the United States that will endeavor to mobilize the widespread discontent of the workers and farmers to contest every old party candidate in the country.

If the socialists persist in refusing to participate in such a movement we will stigmatize them, as we have in the past, as enemies of the working class who are totally unconderned about the elementary demands of the working class for a united front in face of the terrific capitalist offensive that is raging against labor throughout the world.

If the socialists run a presidential candidate they will only expose to all the working class their weakness. They no longer have Eugene V. Debs to bear their standard and shield with his past record of service to the working class the present perfidy of the socialists who, at least in New York, are travelling the inclined planin of fascism by aiding the most reactionary and vicious elements in an unprecedented campaign of violence and provocation against the militant elements in the labor movement. If they persist in going it alone in this campaign it will be their last stand as a legal political party for they will not receive enough votes in most of the states to again get on the ballot without petitions.

We hope there will be enough class conscious delegates at the January convention of the socialist party to rebuke their national executive committee, repudiate their action and accept the Communist proposal for a united front in the coming elections that will enable labor's forces to stand united on a common program, at the same time permitting each group to put forth its own ultimate program while at the same time supporting the united ticket.

To refuse such a demand will brand the socialist party as a traitor and a disgrace to the working class, deserving of nothing but condemnation.

A fierce diamond clash between the Old Militants and the Young Militants is scheduled to feature the 7th Annual T.U.E.L. picnic at Kelser's Park, this coming Sunday, in Chicago. The old birds may be rather shaky in the underpinnings, but they sure know how to use their noodles, and they hope to outwit their youthful opponents. The young guys are full of pep and go, as all young militants should be, and they have boasted all over the city that the game is as good as theirs. The opposing lineups are as follows:

Old Militants
Maurer, 3rd base—Captain
Loeb, 1st base
Ford, Pitcher
Abern, Catcher
Johnson, Center field
Matheson, Left Field
Wolfe, Short stop
Phillips, Right field
J. Edwards, 2nd base

Young Militants.
Zam, 2nd base
Ellman, 1st base
Angelo, Right field
Yusem, Short stop
Glotzer, Pitcher—Captain
Zallako, Shortstop
Harman, Catcher
Greenberg, Centerfield

The game will be played on the excellent diamond in the center of the grove, and will start at 3 sharp. Sam Ham, famous bookseller, will do the officiating. (Ed. Poor Sam, what did he do to deserve this?)

Gotham Rhymsters Decide to Do Something Useful at Long Last

Dear Comrade Editor:

Intelligent proletarians (that means all of us) omnivorous proletarians, ditto, vegetarian proletarians and even those who dine exclusively on flesh meats are urged to come to Labor Temple Auditorium, 14th Street and Second Avenue on Thursday evening, June 9th, 8 P. M.

Were you ever a poet? If not you don't know what you have missed. The poet's fate forces us into a lot of trouble but we forgive them, darn their hides. Because they are interesting and probably do some good. But doing good is the last thing that occurs to a poet which proves that a poet is neither born nor made.

What a self made poet wants to do, while he is alive is to disturb people. If a person is married and living with his lawfully wedded wife he paints the delights of concubinage for him. And if he is living in sin he explates on the pleasures of conformity. In other words a poet is never in accord with his compeers. That's why poets are so interested.

On the night alluded to a group of poets will poetize for the benefit of The DAILY WORKER. Don't assume that we are ready to die because we accept a straw. We are really out for a jolly good time and our poets are unusual. That is, they don't take themselves seriously. They are not half as conceited as some of our columnists and only a few of them sent self-addressed envelopes with their contributions.

You will hear a good deal more about this phenomenon before the night of June 8. But this is enough for once.

Fraternally yours, the publicity man of nucleus F-4 sub. 1-B. W.P.A. in L. W. T.

Tickets for this affair can be secured at The DAILY WORKER office 33 East First Street; Workers Party Office, 108 East 14th Street; Freiheit Office, Union Square, and 106 University Place.

DRAMA

Lunacharsky, Author of "The Legend of the Bear's Wedding"

Russia's newest contribution to the American dramatic market, "The Legend of the Bear's Wedding," which opens at the Grand Street Playhouse on Second Avenue, this evening, bound to be a big success, is the work of Anatole Lunacharsky, Peoples Commissioner of Education in Soviet Russia. The story, based on a legend of the current harvest season of love, deals with the varied effects of primal influence upon the men of a mountain settlement attached by a bear just prior to his birth. The cast, played on the stream by K. V. Eggert, who is also director of the film, suffers from an overpowering desire to make bear-like attacks on women whenever love burns in his heart. The leading female role in the "Legend of the Bear's Wedding" is played by Vera Malaiovskaya, a Lillian Gish type, who has gained considerable eminence in Russia as a screen actress. Mlle. Malaiovskaya is the daughter in real life of the manager of the Moscow Art Theatre.

The fifty-fifth Street Cinema, where the film is enjoying the American premiere, opened a few days ago with a policy of presenting the most intelligent American and foreign motion picture productions. On the same bill with "The Legend of the Bear's Wedding," is an interesting program of short subjects. The one which has created the most comment, both here and in Germany, where it was produced, is "The Magician of Talao," done entirely in animated silhouettes. Other films on the bill are "Knee Deep in Love," produced by E. Merle Johnson, and a color film, which accompanies the overture, on which the Eastman Film Laboratories in Rochester, spent $250,000 during experiments.

Tickets for this performance are on sale now at the local office of The DAILY WORKER, 108 East 14th Street.

...ency supported a scheme whereby each ...he local transit lines may be rented ...and worked by the city." (N. Y. Times, Oct. 29, 1926.)

...ow these leases would fit Smith ...ns of the political game. In the Democratic Convention of 1924 Nathan L. Miller, now battling for the B. M. T. in the transit hearings, was returned victor. Miller promptly showed his mettle. We do not need to tell Nathan his names. It is sufficient to regard his activities.

He had hardly taken office when Governor Smith instituted a line to have enacted the bill by which the present New York State Transit Commission was established. No publicity was given to the sewer concession and the whole proceeding was carried out almost in secret. The bill provided for a so-called "unification" plan, the essential feature of which was that the old scrap and junk of the traction lines would be passed off on the city at a figure to be established by the newly organized Transit Commission in conjunction with the transit companies.

Business Protests.

When the plan became public it met with some opposition. Accordingly a method was hit upon to silence public disapproval. It was arranged to have a letter sent to the governor in which were to be embodied the existing criticisms of the "legalized" swindle of 1921. This letter, written by one of the republican henchmen, Frederick L. Crawford, chairman of the Transit Committee of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, was made public and duly "answered" by the governor.

Crawford's letter referred to the traction bill and "the apprehension in the minds of the public" as to its outcome. "I believe," the obliging governor wrote in reply, "that the bill which I have just signed paves the way for a just solution of the problem in the public interest. . . . The new act simply prevents mere obstruction (!) It seeks as far as possible to eliminate the opportunity to play politics with a great business, economic and social problem. . . ."

The governor is hardly to be blamed that his prediction did not come true. He did the best he could. But Crawford, the governor's apprehensive fellow citizen, wished to be assured further as to the personnel of the commission to be appointed. To this the governor also replied in terms of father reassurance: "Fear not I know my chestnuts."

Which translated into the language of public criminal justice means: "I have observed even these nothing but the best will be considered in the selection of the commissioners. I will not be unmindful of the trust reposed in me in the matter of the fare. Rest the governor's chestnuts are safe in the fire."

"The considerations to recently hold sway for the consummate regardless of them will be a necessity with us secured fair return in place of one with no guarantee or no service. Necessarily, therefore, the rate of fare will be an important element of any agreement and cannot be determined in advance. Service must be fixed in advance of the deposit by the companies of the necessary amounts to clothe the commission with ample power to put into effect whatever plan may be determined upon.

"The task before the commission is not an easy one. I feel confident that it can be done if approached with resolution, courage and the determination to do exact justice."

The language here is something terrific! But the light of the governor's meaning shines from beneath the bushel fo words in rays of certain hope for the traction barons. The task, he said, would not be an "easy one." But he would appoint men of "fitness."

As chairman of the new Transit Commission, the governor appointed George McAneny! As McAneny's right-hand man he appointed, second on the commission, Leroy T. Harkness. These two had been the chief instruments in the 1913 sell out. As chairman of the Public Service Commission, the governor appointed William A. Pendergast, a position still occupied by this gentleman, whose connection with the 1913 steal has already been related.

There can be little doubt of the "fitness" of these men. How they managed to pile up the hundreds of millions of public losses through the continuance of the rule or ruin policy of the traction ring has already been explained.

This was the gang which held office until April, 1926, about a year ago. Although they were relieved of their positions through the expiration of their terms of office, the work which they so nobly started is being continued quite as effectively by their successors. The details will be given in the next article.

...S STRIKE OF JERSEY FURRIERS

NEWARK, May 31.—Owing to the refusal of the Furriers' Association, Inc., representing the bosses in the art of attempting to break two of the strikes called on March 28, Furriers' Union. The action was definitely followed by the walking of a general strike of the Newark and Jersey City fur shops at a meeting of the local held at Arlington Hall yesterday morning.

When the bosses' association was working in cooperation with the International officials locked out the 600 furriers because they refused to support the strikebreaking crew in its attempt to destroy the union. Yager communicated with Louis Bolfer, vice-president of the local and told him that he "had something important" to tell him.

Bolfer, suspicious, arranged to meet Yager at the Hotel Martinique, New York, bringing Jack Shulman, member of the executive board along as a witness.

Business Proposition.

When they assembled at the New York hotel, Yager, turning to Bolfer said, "There is no need of beating around the bush. We are all willing to make a dollar if we can, and here is your opportunity to do so. All we want you to do is not participate in the struggle and we will be liberal with you."

Egging Yager on, Bolfer made him agree to $10,000 as the tentative amount of money. Yager stated that he would have to get the approval of his associates before handing over the money. Arrangements were made that Yager would telephone Bolfer the decision Wednesday evening, at the union headquarters, 194 Prince Street. When he phoned at 9.30 p. m. Bolfer informed him that there was not enough privacy in the union office, so he would call him back over.

Rushing to Montgomery Hall, where a meeting of the local was going on, Bolfer telephoned Yager, making arrangements for several union members to listen to the conversation on extra phones.

Yager in his telephone conversation said that his associates would not pay $10,000, offering $3,000 as "the top price." After a great deal of bargaining he raised it to $4,000. Bolfer and Yager made arrangements to meet again today to make final arrangements.

As soon as the conversation ended the workers who had been listening to the conversation raced upstairs to the membership meeting and told in detail what they had just heard over the phone. Several of the listeners had been slightly skeptical in the past about the charges made by the left wing, but after what they heard over the telephone they became firmly convinced that the position of the militant elements of the union is entirely correct.

Call Strike.

When the workers at the mass meeting heard of the attempt made by the bosses to demoralize the union they became indignant and voted for the calling of a strike, featured by strong picketing committees.

The bosses with the assistance of the International officials had been unable to furnish more than 12 scabs to take the place of the 400 strikers.

Petro Lucchi, I. Sorkin and Milton Gorbert are leading the scab harding in association with the Oscar Yager, chief of the bosses organization. Morris Langer, business agent of Local 25, is in charge of the strike.

...E FURRIERS IS TO BE DEMANDED

Unanimously adopting a resolution ...ding for the formation of a Preparatory Joint Board "to take any steps or action which they may deem necessary for the purpose of conducting, collecting and insuring the rights to the funds due us," last night's meeting of shop chairmen held at Cooper Union, went on record to fight for the $600,000 of the Unemployment Insurance Fund now in the hands of Morris Sigman, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Resolutions were also passed on the question of reorganization of the cloak shops which the bosses are now trying to put into effect and on the question of contempt of court proceedings brot against the Joint Board by the Dress Contractors' Association on the ground that the union has violated an injunction of the supreme court. The contempt charges will be heard this morning before Judge Erlanger in Part 1, Supreme Court Building.

Founding of Fund.

The resolution instructing the Joint Board to take what action it deems necessary to regain the unemployment money recites in detail what has happened up to the present time. On July 16, 1924 an agreement between the Industrial Council and the union provided that "the Industrial Council shall cooperate with the union in establishing and maintaining an unemployment insurance fund for the benefit of the members of the union. The fund shall be made up by contributions from the manufacturers and the union or individual members of the union. The contribution of the employers to the unemployment insurance fund shall be equal to 2% of the weekly payroll and that of the workers to 1% of their weekly wages.

"The fund shall be administrated jointly under proper rules and provisions to agreed upon by the parties."

The resolution points out that "there is now available a large fund of security and cash on deposit, collected for the purpose of unemployment benefits and whereas, payments out of the foregoing funds will become due and payable June 1, 1927 and whereas the board of trustees have taken action to suspend operation of the unemployment fund.

"Resolved that we the members of the Joint Board, hereby authorize Louis Hyman, Charles S. Zimmerman, Nathan Kaplan, Julius Portnoy, and Joseph Boruchowitz to collect for us and in our behalf the moneys due us and to become due us, from the unemployment insurance fund."

...OMING TO PAINTERS UNION, OFFICIALS ADMIT

An amazing story of speculation in union funds by officials was uncovered yesterday in 57th St. court when President A. J. Fisher and Treasurer Hartley of District Council Nine of Painters were arraigned on charges of embezzlement.

Hartley confessed, it is alleged, that he used tens of thousands of dollars belonging to the District Council's treasury to plunge in Wall Street in a get-rich-quick effort. He and Fisher are members of the reactionary Zeuner clique.

Hartley was trapped on a $1,500 check made out on a union check blank to Dartell and Ludwig, stock brokers located on Broadway just off Wall St. Confronted by the tell-tale check, he admitted that he had been using union funds in efforts to enrich himself but that he was "paying back."

He had paid back $14,000, he declared, but still owed $37,000.

Professional Patriots

This series continues to explain the activities of the 26-odd so-called patriotic organizations functioning in the United States at the present time.

The previous four instalments listed the names of the various groups together with some of their typical financial supporters—notorious union-smashing corporations and "conservative" business men.

The material for "Professional Patriots" was gathered by Sidney Howard, co-author with Robert Dunn of "The Labor Spy" and John Hawley.

Consumers Pay.

Mr. Hichborn calls attention to the fact that all these contributions are passed on in charges to consumers.

As for the American Legion we have certain evidence on the character of its backers in a letter written on the letterhead of Swift and Company, December 26, 1919, and addressed to certain corporations:

"At a meeting held on December 23, 1919, presided over by Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, here were present representatives of the different stock yard interests and it was voted that they contribute $10,000 towards a campaign fund for the American Legion. A national drive is being made for the Legion and the amount raised from Illinois is $100,000, Mr. James B. Forgan, chairman of the First National Bank, being treasurer of the fund for Illinois . . . We are all interested in the Legion, the results it will obtain, and the ultimate effect in helping to offset radicalism. It is important that we assist this worthy work and at the meeting I was asked by the chairman to write to the different stock yard interests for their contribution. In prorating the amount, it was suggested that we use an arbitrary percentage as a basis and the amount you are asked to contribute is $100."

In much the same manner the new American Citizenship Foundation is supported by substantial Chicago capitalists (see page 1091).

Taking the whole group of patriotic societies, both the national and local, the general and the employers', it is clear that they are supported mainly by business interests. The connections of their directing committee members, shown in the list on page 22, makes that evident. In addition, there are of course many citizens paying small amounts who genuinely believe in the disinterestedness of the organization. Of all the organizations the National Security League has the widest basis of support, and is less identified with big business interests than in its early years. Its program is genuine, though of course reactionary, in its insistence on things as they are.

Of course it should be clear that support by interests fearful of change does not mean that they themselves have actively promoted the organizations. Rather the state of fear has produced a situation which could be capitalised to advantage by either skillful promoters or by intense enthusiasts. The officers who run the organizations are clearly one of two types—either promoters out for a good job which gives them also the gratification of public attention—and a salary—or sincere enthusiasts thoroughly alarmed at the menace of radical ideas to property interests and what they conceive to be our "form of government."

Financial Appeals.

Despite the fact that most of the income of these professionally patriotic societies comes from business corporations, and wealthy givers in fairly large amounts, public appeals for membership and funds are made by most of them. What proportion is so raised by circulars and leaflets is not known, but a study of the character of the literature of appeal throws light on the type of patriotism they are most eager to serve. And it shows what they think will bring in the money.

The National Security League, which appeals widely for dollar memberships (and over) heads its appeal:

"For an AMERICAN AMERICA and law and order," or, •

"For a better, safer and more prosperous America."

It pledges that the money will be used to increase "respect for constitutional government and in opposing socialism, communism, and Bolshevism." In one letter it asks:

"Are you willing to help match, for AMERICAN PROPAGANDA, what the Communists are spending for anti-American propaganda?", asserting that "if the Bolsheviki are spending over $30,000 a month in England, it can be safely assumed that they are spending over a $1,000,000 a year here."

Another Security League appeal offers members a chance to save America's soul. It reads:

"Help save America! America is in danger of losing her soul. The National Security League offers you the means of putting forth your individual force to help save it. Will you do this by giving," etc.

A Good Salesman.

In the spring of 1920, Major General R. L. Bullard, President of the National Security League, was asking every man who served in the military and naval forces of the United States during the World War, to become a member because "revolutionary radicalism, having so much money, is so bonsiful of its aims on our side, as well as on the other side of the world."

The Major General points out that the chief purpose of his League is "resistance of revolutionary radicalism" and tells how the League "has been in the past six months especially effective in resisting the efforts of pacifistic and religious extremists to throw military training out of the schools and colleges."

In a letter mailed about the same time to Reserve Officers, he reports that "hundreds of officers of the Army, Navy, and the National Guard have joined us. . . . If these men, realizing the need of our work, can afford from their meager income, to join with us, we believe that you as a citizen and a Reserve Officer, will be glad to help our work in a similar way."

The same appeal to fear of the reds is voiced by the American Defense Society. It argues that:

"The efforts and dollars of loyal citizens must be matched with the forces of the Reds and the large sums at their disposal."

To encourage giving, the leaflet predicts imminent revolution, saying:

"The radicals have not yet declared open warfare. Government officials state that their information is that the revolution has been planned to follow the Presidential election. This winter (1920) will be the decisive time for the success or defeat of the Reds," etc. "Make your check payable to Robert Appleton, Treas."

Heroic Work.

An appeal to business men telling them frankly what the Society claimed to do in the prosecution of Communists for their political opinions is contained in the following paragraphs addressed on the letterhead of the American Defense Society, April 9, 1924:

"It is not too much to say that the Prosecuting Attorneys were greatly assisted in their successful conduct of the trial of Foster and Rathenberg, leaders of the Communist Party, by the American Defense Society. We have a letter to this effect from the Prosecuting Attorneys.

Schaefer's "Twelve" and the Freiheit Singing Society

By DAVID SAPIRO

It was unfortunate that the first performance of Schaefer's "Twelve" in Madison Square Garden on April 2nd, was given under such unfavorable conditions, and those who heard it could not get a fair impression of this remarkable work. The bad acoustics of the vast auditorium of the Garden, the lateness of the hour when the "Twelve" was sung, the tiredness of the chorus, orchestra and audience, all contributed to a poor rendition and reception of this work, which, under more favorable conditions, would have aroused the audience to great enthusiasm.

The "Twelve" will be performed again on Saturday evening, May 28th, in Carnegie Hall, on the occasion of the fourth anniversary of the Freiheit Singing Society. Then it will be heard under the most favorable conditions. The hall is ideally suited for musical performance, and the concert will start early so that the chorus and orchestra will be fresh for its performance.

The poem by Alexander Blok, gives us an episode of the Bolshevik Revolution of twelve Red guardsmen marching through the streets and bullying the bourgeoisie in the first days of the Bolshevist triumph of 1917. It is an extremely vivid picture, full of bold and crude realism. It gives one an unforgetable picture of those early days of that tremendous upheaval of 1917. It seems to me that Schaefer has caught the spirit of the poem, with all its stark realism, in his musical setting. All the discordant elements of such an episode are well reflected in the music. There are moments of great harshness of sound, which is a true translation in musical terms of the necessary harshness of a revolution, as expressed by Blok. There are also moments of great beauty of melody and harmony, reflecting momentary romantic and tender episodes to perform it.

The march of the guardsmen is expressed by very grim music. It is not stirring martial music, like some of our cheap military marches. There is no element of triumphant exultation expressed in it. In the march of revolution there are serious, grim, even unpleasant duties to perform. That is what Schaefer tried to express in his music.

The work as a whole is characterised by realistic melodies and harmonies, strong rhythms and colorful orchestration. I consider it the finest thing he has done so far. It is worthy of being produced by the Friends of Music or any other of our best professional choruses. But its revolutionary character would probably prevent its performance by them. So it remains for our working class chorus. The Freiheit Singing Society,

It would be a fine thing to have this particular passage of the "Twelve" sung at all mass-meetings, for it has the real revolutionary spirit, and might help in arousing the masses to "turn the world upside down." The world is in need of it. In another part of the work Schaefer makes fine use of a beautiful melody in the Russian Folk-Song style, with a very interesting orchestral accompaniment.

Debunking a "Times" Inventor

Since American industrialists started to do a good business with Soviet Russia, the lies about the terrible fate which used to appear regularly in the American capitalist press were considerably reduced in number.

Sunday's New York Times, however, shows that we may at any time expect hunk about the Soviet Union to be hailed out among the news there's fit to print.

A cable from Berlin transmits the profound observations of a Mr. Herman Norden, "explorer, traveler and writer" during a brief visit to Baku and Tiflis. Mr. Norden presents a dark, if not very orginal, picture. A lot of old hokum is rehashed. It seems that as soon as he hit Soviet territory he was trailed by the Red police. In Tiflis two men, who said they were reporters, interviewed him. Later he discovered that they were the "Chiefs of the Soviet Cheka."

It happens to be that the Cheka has been abolished, and the Gay Pay Uoo (State Political Department) put in its place, but why should a little fact ilke that bother an explorer, traveller and writer? It also happens to be that the chiefs of the Gay Pay Uoo are in Moscow and not in Tiflis; Mr. Norden should worry about such little matters.

Genuine Reporters.

I have just returned from an extended visit to the Soviet Union, during which I visited Baku and Tiflis twice. I was also interviewed by two reporters, probably the same young men who came to see Mr. Norden. I found on investigation that they really were reporters; there are really reporters in the Soviet Union. Isn't that strange?

A Tabloid Imagination.

However, Mr. Norden got be sudden enthusiastic. He has the imagination of a tabloid editor, or of Mr. Joynson Hicks himself. He saw people being arrested in the streets and he knows that these people are shot and "piercing screams rend the air." During the month I spent in the Caucasus I neither saw nor heard anything of the kind, though there is nothing the matter with my eyes and ears. But then I am not an explorer, etc.

Mr. Norden discovered some other Bolshevik atrocities. There are no white collars in Tiflis "because of the Soviet policy to reduce laundering!" The Caucasian costume, with its soft collared shirt, is centuries old, and was worn by the most dashing officers of the Czar's army. No doubt in those dear, old days, which Kerensky is now lamenting in the Times, Mr. Norden was telling the world how "picturesque" they are. As a matter of fact, they are—and much more comfortable than white collars at that.

During his Tiflis explorations Mr. Norden found no restaurants. He ascribes this to the Soviet decree that everybody must eat in public kitchens. There happens to be no such decree on the Soviet statute books; no doubt that decree is the missing document for which Joynson Hicks is looking. Anybody who is not interested in lying about Soviet Russia (at three cents a word), I would suggest that there are at least two good restaurants on almost every block of the Prospect Rustaveli, the main street of Tiflis; and a number of good ones in all parts of the city. The Georgians are celebrated for their cooking and for their wine and cheese.

Why does the Times call Mr. Norden an "explorer" anway? I should say the correct term is "inventor."

MAY DAY DAWNS IN RED CAPITAL OF SOVIET UNION

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.
(Special to The DAILY WORKER)

MOSCOW, U.S.S.R., May 1. (By Mail)—May Day dawns in Moscow! We catch the first gleam of red as our train reaches the outermost cottages in the suburbs. Then entering the city, the seat of power of the world social revolution, every building—sprinkling of scarlet gradually becomes a veritable sea of crimson—the revolutionary crimson of International May Day. No building anywhere, large or small, without its revolutionary banner.

Ten o'clock last night we left Ossry, textile center, on the southern brink of Moscow Province.

By midnight we had reached Kolomna, where we had to change trains, factory-bedecked Kolomna, a branch line. Since we had left Kolomna in the afternoon, the railroad stations had been decorated with Red Flags and a mass of evergreens.

The station was crowded. Tomorrow would be May Day. No one cared to sleep. Everyone sat about, drinking tea, discussing. Comrade Gerish and I joined in.

The express came thru for Odessa, and then our express for Moscow arrived from the opposite direction at 1:20 o'clock to the second. It was nearly five o'clock and breaking daylight as our train came to a stop in the Kazan Station in Kalantcherskaya Place, Moscow. Here the trains came in from Kazan and the Urals.

On the opposite side of the square stands the October Station, formerly the Nicholas Station. Once named for a czar, it now recalls the October (Our time, Nov. 1, 1917) Revolution. Its trains depart for Leningrad, Reval and Helsingfors, over what is said to be the best railroad in the Soviet Union.

In the same square is the Yaroslav Station, next to the October Station, from which trains depart for Yaroslav and Archangel in North Russia.

Thus, toward three points of the compass, trains from this square depart.

CONVICT DAILY WORKER EDITOR, MANAGER; HELD WITHOUT BAIL FOR SENTENCE FRIDAY

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE conviction of William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER and Bert Miller, business manager, for the appearance of a poem in the paper that offended the sensibilities of several groups of paid patriots is part of the campaign now conducted on an international scale against the working-class movement. At this particular moment nothing would give greater satisfaction to the open enemies of the workers and their hirelings among the bureaucracy of the trade union movement in this country to see The DAILY WORKER go under.

ACCORDING to information gained from those who attended the trial it was a farcical proceeding. Only the most cursory attention was paid to the charge or to the testimony. It bore on its face all the evidence of being pre-arranged. The convicted comrades were locked up in the Tombs to be held there for one week without bail. Had they been bucketshop operators, real estate swindlers or defrauders of the masses different consideration would be shown them.

• • • •

DUNNE and Miller may be sent to jail for long terms. It may be the beginning of a new attack on the Communist movement in the United States. Already Matthew Woll, the political bell-hop of the National Civic Federation urges a government investigation of the Communist movement here, following the raid of the British government on the Soviet Trade Delegation. He did not succeed to his satisfaction in wrecking the needle trades unions. He wants more government assistance.

• • • •

AT the present time, when the columns of the capitalist press are echoing lies spun by the officials of the Forgers' Government of England against the Soviet Union it is vitally necessary that we have a daily paper that will keep the workers correctly informed and show them how to meet this lying offensive. The DAILY WORKER is the most effective weapon in the possession of the militant working classes. The sacrifice necessary to maintain it will be heavy. Money is sorely needed right now. It is up to the readers of The DAILY WORKER to say whether it shall survive or die.

• • • •

LLOYD GEORGE made a stronger protest against the action of the British government in breaking off diplomatic and commercial relations with the Soviet Union, than did John R. Clynes, the spokesman for the Labor Party. Clynes claimed that his faction of the Labor Party, the right wing, were the greatest sufferers from Communist propaganda. He practically admitted that the government was right in principle but held that it should go thru the formality of a trial. He did not raise the class issue for a moment, the issue of the Workers' Government versus the Employers' Government. He weakly protested the loss of trade that would follow the rupture, the pica of a peanut peddler.

• • • •

LLOYD GEORGE, the liberal leader and one of the most unscrupulous tricksters in British politics took advantage of the occasion to push himself back on the political map with an aggressive and cynical speech that literally left Austen Chamberlain, the sanctimonious foreign secretary without a leg to stand on. The government's conduct espionage on each other, he said. He tanned the government on what improvement they expected in the Russian situation. Did they expect the return of the Romanoffs? He mentioned the names of the various leaders in the Soviet government and suggested that all were equally unsatisfactory. Not that Lloyd George was not prepared to take steps against the Union government but he would do it in a way that would cause the least possible dislocation of trade and in a way that would preserve the dignity of the British government.

• • • •

THERE is hardly a word appearing in the capitalist papers of how the masses of the workers have taken the break with the Soviet Union. To the class conscious workers the Soviet Union is not merely a government that should be recognized because appropriate diplomatic relations tends to spur commerce between countries and orders from the Soviet Union would keep thousands of British workers in employment. To them the Soviet Union is the nucleus of the New Society, of the Workers State which will take the place of the Capitalist State that now dominates this world. For this kind of a revolt against the order and misery any price is justified and the kitchen for all

Acting Department Heads Selected During Crisis Facing the Daily Worker

In the critical situation in which The DAILY WORKER finds itself we will with the support of our comrades and sympathizers continue to publish the paper and carry on the fight as determindedly as ever. During the imprisonment of Comrades Dunne and Miller, the editorial and management committees have placed Comrade H. M. Wicks in charge of the editorial department and Comrade Alexander Trachtenberg in charge of the business office.

In spite of the attacks upon us the paper will go on if our supporters do their part.

Three Fatal Blasts Within Two Days at Woodward Colliery

WILKESBARRE, Pa., May 27.—For two days now, explosion after explosion has shattered the Woodward Colliery of the Glen Alden Coal Company at Kingston, near here. At least seven men have been killed, and twenty-three injured. A "squeeze" yesterday noon killed two men, and may have killed five more. It was accompanied by an explosion. As rescue crews were entering the plant, a second explosion wrecked the fan house and killed two men, making almost certain that the five missing at the time of the first blast were also killed. Then later, with poisonous and inflamable gas streaming from the pit mouth, a third explosion rocked the entire vicinity.

Company Culpable.

The disaster was caused by coal dust, and is of the type which the U. S. Bureau of Mines has often stated could be prevented by a small outlay on the part of the company, and reasonable diligence by company officials to see that rock-dusting was properly carried on.

Union Fights For Safety.

The miners of District 1 of the United Mine Workers of America, in which this mine is situated, have been carrying on an uphill struggle for months now to compel the companies to adhere to the miserably loose and disadvantageous contract which their district president, Cappelini signed for them. Unheeded mine are reported after them non-union mines, but only when the union actively organizes the miners to enforce the safety pro-

Rally to Save the Daily Worker for the Labor Movement

Emergency Call to All Comrades and Sympathizers:

Blow after blow has been levelled against The DAILY WORKER during the past few days. Never have we faced such a critical situation. Never before have we been faced with a situation where we were ACTUALLY SUSPENDED. Yet that was precisely the condition of our paper on Wednesday when we were closed for two hours. In the midst of our efforts to rally our supporters and secure a new lease of life, efforts that were rewarded temporarily and enabled us to survive the crisis for two days three judges of the superior court found our comrades, William Dunne, editor, and Bert Miller, manager of The DAILY WORKER, guilty of the charges that have been pending against them since the combination of patriotic societies, right wing reaction, police and courts united to stifle the voice of the militant labor press, and sent them to jail, without bail, to wait until next Friday when sentence will be passed upon them.

Comrades, this drive against us comes at a time when The WORKER is needed as never before, because the world situation, the situation of the national labor movement and the condition of the local labor movement has never before been so grave.

The drive of the imperialist powers against the colonials and semi-colonials, in China, in Nicaragua, in Mexico; the crusade against labor in France; the vicious attempts to smash the British labor movement through the anti-strike bill; the raid on the Russian trading corporation in London and the breaking of trade and diplomatic relations after a whole series of the most monstrous provocations by the government of forgery; the preparation for war against the Soviet Union; all these are evidences of the world-wide character of the conspiracy to weaken and, if possible, destroy the labor movement internationally in order that the imperialist butchers may be able to launch the most frightful slaughter of the masses the world has ever seen. The DAILY WORKER alone has ripped the mask of hypocricy from the faces of the war mongers and exposed them for what they are. Alone we have reached thousands upon thousands of workers who have sworn that they will not be cannon fodder for another world slaughter to decide which imperialist nations shall pillage the rest of the world.

Nationally, while the workers in the mines and mills have been fighting against the combination of employers and right-wing labor leaders The DAILY WORKER relentlessly exposed the treachery against labor and became the spokesman for the honest, militant elements struggling for the elementary demands of the rank and file.

Locally, in New York City, we, of all the English dailies, alone fought the battles of the embattled cloakmakers and furriers and again exposed the corrupt combination of labor lieutenants of capitalism united with the employers, the police and courts in an effort to railroad to jail the leaders of these struggles.

At this moment we are on the eve of another furriers' strike and the silencing of the voice of our paper at this time would be a terrific blow to that movement even before it is under way.

The DAILY WORKER has come to be recognized as the gauge of the militant labor movement as well as of the Communist movement in this country. Its loss will not only mean the loss of all the long years of work and sacrifice on the part of thousands of workers who have stood by us in all the dark days through which we have passed, but its moral effect cannot be measured.

We have fought so hard in order that the workers engaged in elementary struggles, in Passaic, in the mines, in the needle trades, might win their victories that we have not always considered our own welfare as we might have done. We have helped every worker in every struggle in this country during our existence. Now is the time for those we have helped to come to our aid in our fight for life.

The jailing of our editor and business manager is part of the general campaign. They were tried yesterday morning before three judges, amidst surroundings charged with prejudice, in a hostile atmosphere, where every motion by our attorney in favor of our comrades was instantly denied, indicating that all had been decided in advance.

The enemies of labor thought they could take advantage of our present financial difficulties to definitely silence us by jailing our editor and manager, but as far as we are concerned we will fight on against these conspirators and in spite of them. But in order to be able to fight, you must everyone do your part—nay, more than your part by immediately coming to our aid.

We must have several thousand dollars within the next forty-eight hours or the conspiracy of the enemy will succeed

During the next two days, while you are enjoying the holidays, set aside something for The WORKER. Devote some of your time to raising money that you can instantly send in to us so that when you go back to work you can be sure that The DAILY WORKER is still living and fighting your battles and the battles of the oppressed everywhere.

Do not rely on the ordinary mail channels to send in money. It may come too late. Send in all that you can get together by wire, special delivery or, if possible, come in person so that you may become more acquainted with the gravity of the situation.

Send wires and special delivery letters to 33 East First St., New York City. Comrades and sympathizers in New York may call at the local DAILY WORKER office at 108 East 14th Street with donations. Act, comrades, before it is too late!

WILLIAM F. DUNNE AND BERT MILLER FACE THREE-YEAR SENTENCE HERE AS COURT OVERRULES DEFENSE MOTIONS

Professional Patrioteers on Hand as Judges Railroad Defense Attempts to Postpone Case

Part of General Campaign on Part of Reaction to Throttle The DAILY WORKER

William F. Dunne, editor, and Bert Miller, business manager of The DAILY WORKER are in the Tombs prison today.

They were found guilty yesterday by Justices Featherstone, Murphy and Kelly, sitting in Special Sessions, of violating section 219 of the criminal code. Sentence will be pronounced Friday.

Poem Charge a Pretext.

A poem entitled "America," by David Gordon was the pretext used by high salaried professional patriots and the organizations for which they work to "get" The DAILY WORKER by railroading the editors and business manager to prison and robbing it of its mailing privileges.

Court is Brisk.

Convicted in less than 45 minutes after the court had listlessly denied all motions made by defense attorney, Joseph R. Brodsky, including postponement of the case, Dunne and Miller now face a maximum term of three years in the New York State Penitentiary.

In spite of the fact that the case against the paper was last on the calendar, the court curtly refused Brodsky's motion to postpone it.

WORKERS PARTY SCORES FRIVOLOUS PRETEXT OF BRITISH WAR MAKERS

"Where is the Plot?" Asks Central Executive Committee About Addresses Tories "Find"

(By The Central Executive Committee of the Workers [Communist] Party.)

Exposure of the Reds! Red conspiracy unearthed! Red this—and Red that!

And what is it all about? A list of addresses is alleged to have been found in the possession of one Anton Miller, who in turn was found on the premises of Arcos, Ltd., in London by Scotland Yard raiders.

We have neither the desire nor the means of ascertaining whether all of these addresses are genuine. But let us assume that they are. Where is the deep and bloody conspiracy? Where is the plot? All we know is that it is alleged that American addresses were found in possession of a person in Europe, presumably a Russian. We hope that those sinister Americans who have thus been found out, who permitted their names to be in the possession of a Russian in London, who, perhaps (darkest crime of all) even received mail, letters, circulars, statements, information, etc., from this Russian, will be visited with a punishment commensurate with the awfulness of their crime.

Provokes War.

At the same time, however, we wish to point to the frivolousness with which the capitalist government of Great Britain is attempting to provoke a new world war. Violating international decency, police agents of the British government burglarized the offices of the Arcos, Ltd., and the Soviet Commercial Mission in London. And on the day when this gentlemanly government of Great Britain breaks off diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union, on the day when the honorable Baldwin government makes a step designed to plunge the world into a new bloody conflict, it has nothing else to offer to the world as an excuse for its treachery, it has nothing else to show as a base for its wrecking diplomacy than the fact that American addresses were found in the possession of one Anton Miller, who in turn was found on the premises of Arcos, Ltd., of London.

FREEZE THEM HELP THE DAILY

This series of ten articles, of which this is the sixth, deals with the operations of the industrial espionage agent and methods to combat the evils of weekly payment life insurance. This series is the result of numerous requests to publicize the details of the swindle and fraud to which the agent is subject in common with the policyholder.

Article VI.

By CHARLES YALE HARRISON.

Wall Street—The National Civic Federation—Matthew Woll—The Insurance Trust—the imperialistic, labor baiting oligarchy—the Hundred Percenters, all wheeled into action yesterday.

The Daily Worker's effective exposure of the looting practices of finance capital is bearing fruit. The fat boys have been goaded into action. Militant labor's lance-thrust has stabbed Wall Street and its yappers into action.

This puppet's aggressive of the National Civic Federation, of the Insurance Swindle, of the Traction Grab, its fight against the right wing reactionary, hierarchy, the fight against militarism, imperialism, invasion of China and Latin America, as well as other issues to which the workers are concerned, has stirred up the bitter rancor of these profiteers.

A False Issue.

They dared not bring action in court challenging the truth of the Worker's exactions. They knew that as long as the pitiless searchlight of The Worker's publicity beat upon them the danger to their position became more and more intensified.

A pretext was seized upon. A so-called unpatriotic poem was printed in a recent issue of the paper. This was made the issue for garnetting the only fighting labor daily in New York City.

The issue must not be befogged. The reason that Dunne and Miller find themselves in the Tombs today is because of the fearless, fighting attitude which their paper has taken in all matters which vitally affect the American worker.

The DAILY WORKER has been waging a fight on behalf of the defrauded policeholders of the "Big Four" plunderbund. It has called for the organization of the underpaid, overworked industrial insurance agent.

It is the only paper in America which has dared to pit its strength against the billions of the "Big Four." It is the only paper in America which dared to challenge the right of the insurance looters to swindle and defraud 40 million worker-policyholders.

Letters have been coming into the offices of the paper praising it for its stand in this and similar matters.

But letters of praise are not enough.

Ranged against The WORKER stands the massed strength of Wall Street and its satellites.

Now is the time for the rooters for The DAILY WORKER to come to its aid.

Victims Should Aid.

I make a direct appeal to the policyholders and agents of the "Big Four" to dig down and send us every dollar they can spare to aid us in the defense of our paper.

If the WORKER is downed, the right wingers and labor baiters will take on new lease of life. The old, dreadful days of Palmer and Burleson will surely return.

We know that this attack on The WORKER will prove abortive. Dunne and Miller may go to jail, but in their places thousands of vengeful workers will spring to the colors.

Dig down, "faithful" sons of Mother Metropolitan and Daddy Pru and come across for the only paper which has ever dared to champion your rights.

Do it now!

Registered members of the 11th Executive International convention in Memphis, Tenn., June 4-9, will be presided over by Caleb A. Emerson, of Scranton, Pa., international president.

Fleishhank and Klenetsky

Thirty-two workers of the Fleishhank and Klenetsky Dress Shop, of 42 W. 22nd St., donate a half day's pay to the Defense thru Abraham Stein, shop chairman. Other members of the committee active in the collection were Sam Skulnick, Abe Saitz, Jack Schneider, Isay Troot, Annie Schwartz and Clara. This is a continuation of the good work being done by this shop which was the first to contribute to the defense with a collection of one hundred dollars. Stein promises another collection in a short time and he is now working to spread the shop collection habit throughout the section in which he works.

A Concert by the Sea

Summer is coming. It is becoming warmer. Imagine what will happen when the actual hot summer days arrive. Every worker will wish to leave his factory for a few hours for a breath of fresh air. The bourgeoisie has long since left the hot city. Only the vast mass of workers cannot spend the summer in the country. They are condemned to sweat in the factories broken at intervals by a trip to the beach where they are crowded even when in the water, but for one evening at least where one is assured of a good time. The Joint Defense & Relief Committee has arranged a monster concert to be held in the Coney Island Stadium for July 16th. Here the workers will be assured of a splendid entertainment and every body is cordially invited.

A Victim of Sigman Helps Defense

The following letter was received from Mendal A. Krusse. "I am myself a victim of the Sigman pogrom on our unions. I have been out of work six months due to the fact that I was driven out by the Sigman gangsters. I feel that something must be done to save our arrested brothers and once for all exterminate the Sigman gang from our union. My wife and I collected $7 which I am sending to you. I hope to collect more.

Number of Jobless on Increase in Baltimore

BALTIMORE, (FP) May 27.—Unemployment is becoming noticeable in Baltimore. This is especially true in the building industry. Large numbers of men are out of work, according to reports by trade union secretaries. Jobs in factories and at common labor outdoors are more scarce than at any time in five years, in the opinion of discouraged applicants.

Negroes "Belong" to Plantation Owners

(Federated Press)

Negro peonage in the Mississippi flood area is exposed in a report made by Walter White, national secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. White has just returned to New York from a tour including Memphis, Arkansas, Vicksburg, New Orleans and other points in the flooded region.

"In many refugee camps," says White, "negroes are released only to 'their' landlords and are sent back to the plantation from which they came. This fact was confirmed to me by General Curtis T. Green, commanding officer at Vicksburg of the Mississippi National Guard troops who are keeping order in the area covering registration from parts of Sunflower, Bolivar, Tunno, Warren and Holmes counties, and all of Issaquena, Sharkey, Washington and Humphreys counties.

"General Green told me that plantation owners came to the camps to pick out 'their Negroes' and that labor agents are kept out from the camps 'no man being permitted to talk to any other but his own Negroes'.

Slavery Again

"At a number of camps I was told of Negroes eluding guards and escaping, preferring to forage food, clothing, shelter and medical attention rather than go back to the plantations from which the flood waters had driven them. At some of the camps Negroes were being taken out by industrial firms, being checked out of the camps and checked in again when their labors were finished.

"Most of these men had no objection to working, even though not paid, but they objected to the beating, cursing and kicking they had to endure. There are also numerous instances of brutality in the treatment of Negroes forced to work on the levees under the guns of soldiers and even white civilians.

Swept to Death

"In many places, notably Greenville and Step's Landing, Negroes were thus conscripted, among them being an insurance agent, and they were kept at work when it was plain the levee would break. When the break came, this insurance agent told me he saw some 40 or 50 Negroes swept away by the waters, presumably to death. He managed to fight his way back to the levee. He is a graduate of Tuskegee, married, with a child, and entirely trustworthy."

White has a clipping from the Vicksburg Evening Post, of May 5th, that is revealing. It tells how a Citizens' Relief Committee met at Cleveland, Miss., and discussed the matter of permitting families to leave the refuge camps. A certain V. W. Thomas was put in charge of arrangements.

"Mr. Thomas," says the newspaper, "was instructed by the Committee not to release any family or persons from the camp except on written consent of the landlord from whose plantation the laborers came, or on the personal request or authorization of the landlords."

Slavery of Negro plantation workers in the Mississippi delta is shown also in an illuminating statement from Dr. William R. Redden, reported by White. Dr. Redden, Chief Medical Officer for the Red Cross in the flood area said:

"Some of the Negroes did not know that their own bodies belonged to them. When we sought to vaccinate them they said it could be done only after their plantation bosses gave their permission. When some of these plantation owners objected we had to tell them 'Either you will permit vaccination or we will stop relief.'"

Powers in Wall St Clash in Struggle For U. S. Industries

A vigorous onward swing of railroad and specialty stock prices yesterday was accepted as evidence of the clash of powerful financial interests in a number of the important transportation and manufacturing enterprises of the country.

Reports, rumors and "official denials" flew thick and fast in the financial district as efforts were made to disclose the nature of the buying demand for Western Maryland and Wabash railroads, Pittsburgh Coal Company, International Nickel Company and other companies. Filing of notices with the Interstate Commerce Commission by various roads which ask the right to appear in important rate hearings was generally accepted as evidence of the stock market activity of the representatives of Pennsylvania Railroad, Pittsburgh & West Virginia, Baltimore and Ohio, etc.

GREENVILLE, S. C., May 27.—"It is a pitiful cause" was the only statement made today by Dr. Fred Williams, Columbia, S. C., superintendent of the Sauth Carolina Hospital for the Insane, after three hours spent in the room with Earl Carroll at the Greenville City Hospital.

Machinist Council Forced to Cut Into Polishers' Strike

CHICAGO, May 27.—The strike of the Metal Polishers Local No. 6 against the Flexible Shaft Co., 5600 West Roosevelt Road continues with the company refusing to deal with the union, and still employing a score of plug-ugllies furnished by the metal trades association and with Thompson's police force being paid by the company to help the finks break the strike, the support given the Mayor by the labor leaders notwithstanding.

The Chicago Flexible Shaft Co. has dealt with the union the last 11 years, but through the pressure from the Metal Trades Association now refuses even to deal with the Metal Trades Council or the Chicago Federation of Labor when the officers of these organizations attempt to bring about a settlement.

Scabs, Police Fraternize.

The scabs are sharing their meals with the policemen and private gunmen who are always at hand when any struggle occurs in the metal industry. The men effected by the walkout are all highly skilled mechanics and some of them have been there 16 years or more, consequently the company is having a hard time to keep up any real production with scabs and is only succeeding in bluffing the outside by having the machinery run.

Other Crafts Not Unionized.

Unfortunately the other crafts are not organized; the majority of the workers being eligible to the machinists' union and very little effort is being made to have all the united forces mobilized against the company. The latest effort of the progressive forces in the machinists' district council a resolution was adopted instructing the machinists' officers to immediately begin to begin an organization campaign, bringing all the specialists, machinists and tool and diemakers into the union. The only difficulty in carrying this policy into effect is the sabotage of these officials, who have adopted a theory that "it is of no use trying to fight the metal trades association."

With the pressure from the rank and filo in the machinists' union they can be forced to carry on a united struggle with the result this victory of the metal polishers' union and force the company to deal with the union again.

The Flexible Shaft Company manufactures the Sunbeam electric iron and electric toaster, also the Cooper & Steward sheep shears and clippers.

CENTRAL AMERICA RAPS U. S. POLICY AS PEACE BREAK

WASHINGTON, (FP)—May 27.—Central American legations in Washington have been officially notified by their governments that a resolution adopted by the United States violated the Central American stability treaty of 1923 when it recognized Adolfo Diaz as president of Nicaragua, was adopted at a meeting of the foreign ministers of Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica, in San Salvador on May 24. The spokesmen for Honduras and Salvador protested to consider steps for withdrawing the recognition given by their governments to Diaz after Secretary Kellogg had declared Diaz the constitutional president of Nicaragua.

Guatamala and Costa Rica have refused to recognize Diaz. They have sympathized with the attempt of the elected government led by Sacasa to restore its authority which was overthrown by the Chamorro military coup of 1925. Fonseca Minister Guerra of Salvador told the meeting that he felt that he should bring the matter before the League of Nations, since Diaz was the beneficiary of the Chamorro coup. The treaty of 1923 bound the Central American countries to refuse recognition to any regime set up as the result of unconstitutional action.

Secretary Kellogg's reply to this Central American communication is a renewal of his claim that Diaz had nothing to do with Chamorro's note. He ignores the long years of close political partnership between the two men beginning when American troops put Diaz in power in 1910.

Start Tour Immediately For Intl. Labor Defense

CHICAGO, May 27.—Paul Crouch, the rebel soldier who was imprisoned at Alcatraz prison for his revolutionary activity in opposing the sending of U. S. troops to Nicaragua, and on Hawaii, is due to be released on June 1, after having served his three years sentence, it was announced by International Labor Defense today.

Upon Organization.

The case of Crouch, who, together with his colleagues, Walter Trumbull, were the leaders of the Hawaiian Communist League composed of U. S. soldiers, aroused interest throughout the country, it being one of the most sensational cases on record in the United States, except in the fact that an open Communist organization had for the first time been formed in American military forces for the purpose of obtaining the allegiance of the soldiers to the labor movement and the working class.

Crouch, Trumbull, and a number of other members of the League were arrested on the information of a spy in the organization. They were charged with the violation of a Hawaiian law prohibiting the formation of such organizations if they were illegal. The defendants, whose case was taken over by International Labor Defense through its attorney there, proved conclusively that the organization was not an illegal one, but had been functioning openly all the time, holding open meetings and even having its stationery printed at the army's printing plant.

Savage Sentence

The two soldiers, who had never made a secret of their position and their sympathy for the bitterly exploited Hawaiian workers and peasants, had appealed to the American soldiers to have fraternal relations with the latter. The military court decreed that they should serve terms respectively of 40 and 56 years in prison. This savage sentence was reduced only after a national protest organized by International Labor Defense so that Crouch was given three years and Trumbull one year of imprisonment.

Upon Trumbull's release a nationwide tour which attracted widespread interest was organized by the I. L. D. Thousands flocked to hear the story of the case told by the first of the rebel soldiers to be freed. The I. L. D. is now arranging for a similar tour for Paul Crouch, the leader of the Hawaiian Communist League, and it is expected that an even greater interest will be expressed by workers everywhere in the meetings that are being arranged.

Dates of Tour

Tentative dates in the schedule of the Crouch tour are as follows:

Portland, Oregon, June 27; Astoria, Oregon, June 28; Tacoma, Wash., June 30; Seattle, Wash., July 1; Mt. Vernon, Wash., July 2; Spokane, Wash., July 4; Great Falls, Mont., July 5; Plentywood, Mont., July 8.

Other sections of the U. S. are also urged to send in their requests for dates immediately so that all arrangements may be completed immediately and in the best organized manner. Picnics, indoor mass meetings and banquets are among the methods of giving a rousing welcome to Crouch that have been suggested.

Church Immorality Is Thrashed Out in Two Separate Trial Courts

ST. JOSEPH, Mich., May 27.—Ecclesiastical immorality is on the upgrade as evidenced from news dispatches from all parts of the country.

Mrs. Hansel testifying as the state's star witness in its suit to dissolve the House of David as an immoral and fraudulent institution, declared that "King Ben," while posing as Jehovah "cast devils" out of her when she was sick.

She further testified that when she was 14 years of age she was assaulted by the "messiah" under the guise of the rites of the covenant.

News arrives from New Haven that leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church met in secret session to hear the appeal of Guy L. Holmes of New Bedford for reinstatement as a minister of the church.

Holmes was disbarred as a minister by the New England South Conference in 1926. Holmes was recently the defendant in an action brought by Miss Antoinette Fortin, a waitress, on charges of immorality.

It is known that in San Francisco the Presbyterians are engaged in hot discussion on heresy and purging the church of modernist tendencies.

Dr. Machen, the central figure in the controversy, is being charged by his opponents with "failure to encourage young men in their preparation for the ministry."

The news of the massacre spread rapidly thruout China. Hundreds of thousands of workers struck in Shanghai and when on June 23rd, British marines poured volleys of "dum-dum" hullets (debarred from "civilized" warfare) into a crowd of demonstrators, mostly students at Shameen, strikes spread like wildfire thruout southern China.

May 30th symbolizes for the Chinese people the savage brutality with which the imperialist powers have exploited her. According to reports received by The DAILY WORKER, workers and peasants thruout the Yangtze Valley will commemorate the Shanghai massacre. If workers and peasants above the Yangtze do not commemorate May 30th they will only be prevented from doing so by Chang Tso-lin, supported by the imperialist powers.

Japanese armed forces will not be sent into China, however, unless the Shantungites are defeated at Hsuchow.

CONVICT DAILY WORKER EDITOR AND MANAGER; HOLD THEM WITHOUT BAIL FOR SENTENCE FRIDAY

out in full force, and the air of assurance evident in the court room indicated that the case against the editors of the only national labor newspaper in the United States was "in the bag."

Ignore Defense.

In requesting the court for adjournment of the case, Joseph R. Brodsky, defense attorney, pointed out that two of the defendants named, J. Louis Engdahl, co-editor of The DAILY WORKER and Robert Dunne, author of the alleged unpatriotic poem were not included in the present hearing.

The court waved Brodsky hrusquely aside, and shouted, "This case is ready!" This despite the fact that the case against the paper was 29th on the crowded calendar.

Innocent, Says Brodsky.

The defense attorney argued that Dunne and Miller were not directly accountable for the publication of the poem, the statute stating clearly, he said, that mere editorship of a publication does not in itself constitute personal responsibility.

Brodsky furthermore insisted that the poem did not come within the meaning of the New York statute which is aimed at the publication of "lewd, lascivious and disgusting matter."

Jury Trial Denied.

Once again the "discretionary" privilege of the courts was exercised when the right of a jury trial was denied to the defendants.

Prominent local lawyers characterized as shameful the procedure of the court in holding Dunne and Miller without bail, a right which is accorded to those charged with crimes of the most serious nature.

"Patriots" Lead Attack.

The same group of representatives of professional patriotic organizations, including George L. Darte of the Military Order of the World War and George Seitz, of the Koymen of America, who were responsible for the original complaints against The DAILY WORKER were again in court yesterday. They did not take the stand, however.

Darte, admitted on examination at a previous hearing of the case that he is the paid "adjutant general" of the Military Order of the World War, that the organization is incorporated, is composed entirely of ex-army officers, has its headquarters in Washington, D. C., and that he had personally notified the postmaster-general of the publication of the poem "America" on which the charge is based.

Darte who parades the title of "captain" in addition to "adjutant general," declared that he had read The DAILY WORKER "religiously" for the past 18 months.

Spies on Radicals.

Seitz, who described himself as "a research worker," for the Koymen of America, testified that his job was to furnish information—he did not say about what or to whom.

That the Military Order and the Koymen, together with the representatives of some other "patriotic" organizations had joined in a conspiracy to crush The DAILY WORKER by getting its editors jailed and depriving the paper of the large privileges it has now become quite clear.

In backing their case against the paper, the two paid stool-pigeons of the labor-baiting organizations parading under the guise of patriotic societies had submitted as "evidence" copies of the issue containing the poem "America," the wrappers in which they were mailed, the address labels, etc.

Aim to Crush Paper.

The Military Order of the World War has been taking the lead in the attempt to throttle The DAILY WORKER. This organization has been engaged for the past few years in attacking liberals, liberals, and humanitarians like Jane Addams, charging that they were guilty of "radicalism."

BISHOP HAILS COMMUNISM AS ENDER OF WAR

Noted Heretic Discusses Chinese Situation

"The Chinese situation is the greatest crisis in ages," said Bishop William Montgomery Brown yesterday afternoon in an interview with newspapermen before leaving for Webster Hall to speak at the meeting arranged for the relief of the cloakmakers.

"When one discusses the Chinese question," he said, "the shadow of another world war rises before you, and that is something horrible to think about.

"The war on China is to keep down the price of labor in that country."

When asked by a reporter what he that could be done about it, Bishop Brown replied that "we Communists want a better world, but we can never have it while we have classes. One class has to give away. The unnecessary class, the capitalists should be put out of business."

The bishop told how it has been his task in the past to promise the workers mansions in heaven when they die, "Pie in the sky," was the way he termed it.

"I have done nothing useful for the last 50 years," he continued, "yet the money rolls in. All of it comes from workers, with no worrying on my part."

The bishop told briefly his ideas on a religion that is based upon nature. "A fact is a doing of nature," he said. "There are no facts except as a result of nature. We are a part of nature, and we should make the most of it."

...TACKS ... WITH FRIENDS OF TRACTION FIRMS

By [illegible]

The Mayoralty campaign has begun in earnest in the city of New York. The [illegible] of the city [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] of the traction [illegible] and [illegible] the traction swindle.

The chairman of the city Board of Estimate who sanctioned the steal and George McAneny, later appointed by the new Transit Commission as the new Transit Commissioner, are Nathan L. Miller. Another who was on this board was William A. Prendergast, later appointed to the position of chamberlain of this city. Both Miller and Prendergast still hold. Now he is being used as the mouthpiece of the traction interests in their bickering squabble with Al. Smith, who in 1920 was casting quite peacefully out of their hands.

The part played by Leroy T. Harkness, assistant counsel, for the New York Public Service Commission in 1913 has already been indicated. That he was not alone in his betrayal of his sworn trust is proved by the fact that Travis H. Whitney, now vice president of the B.-M. T., was then the chairman of the Public Service Commission.

Legalize Steal.

To make the infamous 1913 steal "legal" it was necessary to pass legislation authorizing the plunder. A bill was accordingly put through the New York State legislature, known as the Wagner bill.

The author of this bill is Robert F. Wagner, then state senator, later justice, now U. S. Senator Wagner, but the same Tammany grafter throughout these several transformations. Wagner it will be remembered, was the running mate of Al. Smith in the recent democratic landslide by which this precious pair were hurdled into office.

Did Senator Wagner get his reward for the part he played in the deal? No doubt! Among other evidences, there is the fact of his having advanced in public favor and of his having risen in public office—and no one, let it be known, rises in the empire State except through having come to a complete "understanding" with the traction czars. This is the writing on the wall which the somewhat perplexed Al. Smith is reading with no little worry.

Al. Smith has already had one experience in attempting to buck the traction powers that be. In 1920 Al. was still the tried and true "friend" of the gullible people. As such his mission was to defend the fair public and to contend with the dragon of traction even as other heroes had invariably been called upon to do before him. What did Al. say then?

Brave Words!

"The traction question must be settled by municipal ownership. We have tried every other means and every other method but the time is now at hand when it will be just as ridiculous to think that private companies can operate transit facilities sufficient for the people of the state as it would be for us to believe that we could ever go back to the time when the little private water company supplied a certain district with the fresh water that they had to drink and wash with" (N. Y. Times, October 25, 1920).

For these brave words Al. Smith was quite properly chastised by the powers behind the political scene. In the November returns, Governor Nathan L. Miller, now batting for the B.-M. T. in the transit hearings, was returned victor. Miller promptly showed his mettle. We do not need to call Nathan vile names. It is sufficient to record his activities!

He had hardly taken office when measures were instituted to have enacted the bill by which the present New York State Transit Commission was established. No publicity was given to the new enactment and the whole proceeding was carried out almost in secret. The bill provided for a so-called "unification" plan, the essential feature of which was that the old scrap and junk of the traction lines would be passed off on the city as a figure to be established by the newly organized Transit Commission in conjunction with the transit companies.

Business Protests.

When the plan became public it met with some opposition. Accordingly a method was hit upon to silence public disapproval. It was arranged to have a letter sent to the Governor in which were to be embodied the existing criticisms of the [illegible] and "the suggestion in the minds of the people" as to the solution. "I believe," the obliging governor wrote in reply, "that the bill which I have just signed paves the way for a fair solution of the problem in the public interest. . . . The law as it simply prevents more obstruction (1) It seeks as far as possible to eliminate the opportunity to play politics with the great business, economic and social problem. . . ."

The governor is hardly to be blamed that his prediction did not come true. He did have the best in mind. But Crawford, the governor's apprehensive fellow citizen, wished to be assured further as to the personnel of the commission to be appointed. To this the governor also replied in terms of father reassurance: "Fear not I know my chestnuts."

Which translated into the language of proper political jargon reads: "I can assure you that nothing but fitness will be considered in the selection of the commissioner." But it was in reply to the Brooklyn fearful one in the matter of the fare, that the governor's diplomacy quite outdid itself:

"The consideration to security holders for the concessions required of them will be a security with an assured fair return in place of one with uncertain or no return. Necessarily, therefore, the rate of fare will be an important element of any settlement and cannot be determined in advance thereof, certainly not in advance of the deposit by the companies of the necessary consents to clothe the commission with ample power to put into effect whatever plan may be determined upon.

"The task before the commission is not an easy one. I feel confident that it can be done if approached with resolution, courage and the determination to do exact justice."

The language here is something terrific! But the gist of the governor's meaning shines from beneath the bushel fo words in rays of certain hope for the traction barons. The fare at 4.36 per 1000 as against 4.79 in 1924. The estimate shows 4.79 per 1000 fulltime workers killed in bituminous mines and 3.87 per 1000 killed in anthracite mines.

The bureau's figures showing the number of coal miners employed (reduced to the equivalent 300-day a year workers), the number killed and the accident death rate per 1000 employed since 1906 are:

Coal mine fatalities	No. employed 300-day basis
1906-1910 (av.)	484,434
1911-1915 (av.)	541,489
1916-1920 (av.)	599,781
1921	474,529
1922	405,056
1923	560,644
1924	499,896
1925	512,960

Miners killed	Deaths per 1000 employed
2,658	5.49
2,416	4.03
1,994	4.20
2,458	4.38

Converting the number of miners employed to the 300-day basis is necessary to allow for the extreme irregularity of employment. In the 5 years 1906-1910 an average of 675,067 miners worked an average of 215 days a year to produce an average of 451,112,584 tons. In 1922, 844,807 miners averaged only 144 days producing 476,951,121 tons. In 1924 the last year for which full figures are available, 779,618 miners worked on average of 192 days to produce 571,613,400 tons.

The figures show a steady reduction in the hazard of the industry during the 15 years 1906-1920 in which the United Mine Workers was extending its influence. In the years 1916-1920, when the power of the union reached a peak, there were only 4.03 deaths per 1000 employed, compared with 5.49 in the 1906-1910 period. But in the years 1921-1925, in which the operators were extending openshop operation, the death rate rose to an average of 4.52 per 1000 fulltime workers.

The sentence was from six months to three years but the union, of which the three prisoners were good and loyal members, had been trying the utmost to effect commutation for the men.

A special meeting of the executive board was held Tuesday at which a hearty reception was given to the brothers. It was decided to arrange a dance and package party at which all members and friends of the union will welcome the three brothers into the ranks of the union. The affair will take place in the second week of June, date to be announced later.

Workers Make Arrangements for Picnic, Sunday

In spite of floods, hail or have the Chicago waterworks will gather at Kelso's Electric Park at the Seventy-fifth street branch of the Chicago Federation of Labor will undoubtedly be challenged as the most successful of the United Mine Workers' annual picnics, which has been held for the past seven years.

This development seemed a certainty Saturday as compared to the feeble turnout during the morning hours.

Green's appearance at a Federation luncheon at the exclusive Bankers' Club here on the same platform with Walter Lippmann Merritt, legal authority on the open shop and counsel for the League for Industrial Freedom. The League is a union-smashing gathering composed chiefly of publishers whose chief business is the publication of virulent views attacks on the American Federation of Labor.

Also present at the luncheon in New York's exclusive club were Matthew Woll, leader of the union-disrupting forces at work in the needle trades here, Gilbert H. Montague of the New York Industrial Conference Board, an economic research agency kept by big employing interests; Marcus M. Marks, wealthy merchant and republican politician and Arthur Williams, vice president of the New York Edison Co., probably one of the most bitter anti-union firms in the city.

Green criticised the recent supreme court decision on the Bedford cut stone case, forcing union men to work on non-union cut stone against their will. Merritt upheld the decision.

Green Furious at Labor Delegation Planned for USSR

WASHINGTON, May 27. (FP)—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor announces that if it is true, as reported, that nine well-known trade union officials are going to visit Russia and other European countries in the near future, with a staff of economists, they will not go as representatives of the American Federation of Labor. He is going so to notify the organizations of labor in Europe.

"Brought to the Attention"

"It has been brought to the attention of the officers of the A. F. of L.," he said, "that plans to organize a group to be classified as a 'Labor Delegation' for the purpose of visiting Russia and other countries in Europe this summer, are being formulated by Albert Coyle, editor of the Locomotive Engineers Journal, and others. Plans of a similar character were drafted last summer but were not carried out.

"It is stated that nine well-known trade union officials have already arranged with their organizations for leave of absence and will be ready to start early this summer, and that a staff of expert economists will accompany the delegation.

A. F. L. Won't Investigate

"For the purpose of relieving any wrong public impression which may prevail, the officers of the A. F. of L. wish it to be understood that this delegation . . . is not clothed with authority to speak for American labor or for the A. F. of L. The last convention of the A. F. of L. declared that 'The A. F. of L. cannot join in any mission to investigate conditions in Russia but deems any such mission wholly unnecessary.' It further declared that no trade unionist should permit himself to participate in any such adventure.' This declaration was meant to apply to officers and members affiliated with the A. F. of L., and is expressive of the mature and deliberate opinion of the representatives of the A. F. of L. in convention assembled.

"We concede that individual members of organized labor and the representatives of labor organizations not affiliated with the A. F. of L. have a perfect right to visit Russia or any other country for the purpose of making an investigation of economic and political conditions. In doing so, however, they can speak only for themselves or for those groups which confer upon them authority to represent them. . . . But the A. F. of L. officers draw the line of distinction between a delegation speaking only for themselves or for special groups, and a delegation classified as an 'American Labor Delegation' speaking for American labor.

"It will be the purpose of the A. F. of L. to notify the officially organized labor organizations in European countries, in case Mr. Coyle and his associates consummate their plans to visit Russia, that they cannot be regarded as a labor delegation in the true sense of the word, clothed with authority to speak for American labor and for the A. F. of L."

When this matter was debated in the convention of the A. F. of L. at Detroit last October, Timothy Healy, president of the Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen and Oilers, refused to promise, when publicly challenged by President Green, that he would abide by the decision of the convention as to the trip. He might go on this trip of his own.

U. S. GOVERNMENT SAYS 49,000 DIE IN COAL MINING

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press)

CHICAGO, May 27.—More than 49,000 miners have sacrificed their lives in the production of coal in the last 20 years, according to the U. S. bureau of mines. This means an average of nearly 2500 miners killed each year. In the 10 years 1916 to 1925 coal mine accidents have taken the lives of 23,147 men.

The bulletin shows 2230 miners killed in 1925 compared with 2306 in 1924. The improvement is due largely to a reduction from 453 to 261 in the number killed in major disasters. By major disasters the bureau means accidents in which 5 or more persons are killed. Most deaths in the coal mines are caused by falls of roof or face. In 1925 such accidents took 1078 lives.

The bureau has not yet obtained all the figures necessary to compute the number of workers killed per 1000 fulltime workers employed. But assuming the same daily output per man as in 1924 it estimates the figure at 4.36 per 1000 as against 4.79 in 1924. The estimate shows 4.79 per 1000 fulltime workers killed in bituminous mines and 3.87 per 1000 killed in anthracite mines.

The bureau's figures showing the number of coal miners employed (reduced to the equivalent 300-day a year workers), the number killed and the accident death rate per 1000 employed since 1906 are:

Coal mine fatalities	No. employed 300-day basis
1906-1910 (av.)	484,434
1911-1915 (av.)	541,489
1916-1920 (av.)	599,781
1921	474,529
1922	405,056
1923	560,644
1924	499,896
1925	512,960

2,658	5.49
2,416	4.03
1,994	4.20
2,458	4.38

Converting the number of miners employed to the 300-day basis is necessary to allow for the extreme irregularity of employment. In the 5 years 1906-1910 an average of 675,067 miners worked an average of 215 days a year to produce an average of 451,112,584 tons. In 1922, 844,807 miners averaged only 144 days producing 476,951,121 tons. In 1924 the last year for which full figures are available, 779,618 miners worked on average of 192 days to produce 571,613,400 tons.

The figures show a steady reduction in the hazard of the industry during the 15 years 1906-1920 in which the United Mine Workers was extending its influence. In the years 1916-1920, when the power of the union reached a peak, there were only 4.03 deaths per 1000 employed, compared with 5.49 in the 1906-1910 period. But in the years 1921-1925, in which the operators were extending openshop operation, the death rate rose to an average of 4.52 per 1000 fulltime workers.

OFFER OF BRIBE BRINGS STRIKE OF JERSEY FURRIERS

NEWARK, May 27.—Oscar Yager, president of the Consolidated Rabbit Dressers' Association, Inc., was exposed yesterday in the act of attempting to bribe two of the militant officials of Local 25, Furriers' Union. The exposure was quickly followed by the calling of a general strike of the Newark and Jersey City fur shops at a meeting of the local held at Montgomery Hall yesterday evening.

When the bosses' association working in cooperation with the International officials locked out the 400 furriers because they refused to support the strikebreaking crew in its attempt to destroy the union, Yager communicated with Louis Bolfer, vice-president of the local and told him that he "had something important" to tell him.

Bolfer, suspicious, arranged to meet Yager at the Hotel Martinique, New York, bringing Jack Shulman, member of the executive board along as a witness.

Business Proposition.

When they assembled at the New York hotel, Yager, turning to Bolfer said, "There is no need of beating around the bush. We are all willing to make a dollar if we can, and here is your opportunity to do so. All we want you to do is not participate in the struggle and we will be liberal with you."

Egging Yager on, Bolfer made him agree to $10,000 as the initiative payment of money. Yager stated that he would have to get the approval of his associates before handing over the money. Arrangements were made that Yager would advise Bolfer the decision Wednesday evening, at the union headquarters, 194 Prince Street. When he phoned at 9.30 p. m. he was informed him that there was not enough privacy in the union office, so he would call him back.

Rushing to Montgomery Hall where a meeting of the local was going on, Bolfer telephoned Yager, making arrangements for several union members to listen to the conversation on extra phones.

Yager in his telephone conversation said that his associates would not pay $10,000, offering $8,000 as "the very price." After a great deal of bargaining he raised it to $4,000. Bolfer and Yager made arrangements to meet again today to make final arrangements.

As soon as the conversation ended the workers who had been listening to the conversation raced upstairs to the membership meeting and told in detail what they had just heard over the phone. Several of the listeners had been slightly skeptical in the past about the charges made by the left wing, but after what they heard over the telephone they became firmly convinced that the position of the militant elements of the union is entirely correct.

Call Strike.

When the workers at the mass meeting heard of the attempt made by the bosses to demoralize the union they became indignant and voted for the calling of a strike, featured by strong picketing committees.

The bosses with the assistance of the International officials had been unable to furnish more than 12 scabs to take the place of the 400 strikers.

Petro Lucchi, I. Borkin and Milton Corbett are leading the scab herding in association with the Oscar Yager, chief of the bosses organization. Morris Langer, business agent of Local 25, is in charge of the strike.

JOB PEACE MONEY $37,000 DUE; FURRIERS IS TO BE DEMANDED

Unanimously passing a resolution instructing officials of the Cloak and Dressmakers' Union to take immediate any steps or action which they may deem necessary for the purpose of compelling the association of contractors to "live up to their agreement" Thursday night's meeting of shop chairmen held at Cooper Union, went on record to fight for the $50,000 of the Unemployment Insurance Fund now in the hands of Morris Sigman, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Resolutions were also passed on the question of representation of the cloak shops which the bosses are now trying to put into effect and on the question of contempt of court proceedings here against the Joint Board by the Dress Contractors' Association on the ground that the union has violated an injunction of the supreme court. The contempt charges will be heard this morning before Judge Erlanger in Part 1, Supreme Court Building.

Founding of Fund.

The resolution instructing the Joint Board to take what action it deems necessary to regain the unemployment money recites in detail what has happened up to the present time. On July 16, 1924 an agreement between the Industrial Council and the union provided that "the Industrial Council shall cooperate with the union in establishing and maintaining an unemployment insurance fund for the benefit of the members of the union. The fund shall be made up by contributions from the manufacturers and the union or individual members of the union. The contribution of the employers to the unemployment insurance fund shall be equal to 2% of the weekly payroll and that of the workers to 1% of their weekly wages.

"The fund shall be administrated jointly under proper rules and provisions to agreed upon by the parties."

The resolution points out that "there is now available a large fund of security and cash on deposit, collected for the purpose of unemployment benefits and whereas, payments out of the foregoing funds will become due and payable June 1, 1927 and whereas the board of trustees have taken action to suspend operation of the unemployment fund.

"Resolved that we the members of the Joint Board, hereby authorize Louis Hyman, Charles S. Zimmerman, Nathan Kaplan, Julius Portnoy, and Joseph Boruchowitz to collect for us and in our behalf the moneys due us and to become due us, from the unemployment insurance fund."

PAINTERS UNION, OFFICIALS ADMIT

An amazing story of speculation with funds of the District Council of Painters was revealed Tuesday in 17th St. court when President A. J. Fisher and Treasurer Hartley of District Council Nine of Painters were arraigned on charges of embezzlement.

Hartley confessed, it is alleged, that he used tens of thousands of dollars belonging to the District Council's treasury to plunge in Wall Street in a get-rich-quick effort. He and Fisher are members of the reactionary Zausner clique.

Hartley was trapped on a $1,500 check made out on a union check blank to Darnell and Ludwig, stock brokers located on Broadway just off Wall St. Confronted by the tell-tale check, he admitted that he had been using union funds in efforts to enrich himself but that he was "paying back."

He had paid back $14,000, he declared, but still owed $37,000.

Elect Delegates to Int'l. Convention

Nomination of delegates to the convention of the International Fur Workers' Union to be held at Washington, D. C., was on the order of business at four well attended meetings of the Furriers' Union.

The meetings went on record in favor of the general strike to be called soon by the Joint Board to advance the working standard of the furriers, that have been beaten down to a low level as a result of the united front between the bosses and the A. F. of L. bureaucracy.

Mussolini's Prospects for Gigantic Army

News dispatches from Rome report a speech by Mussolini before the Italian chamber of deputies in which he prophesies a revival of Italy as a dominant world power between 1935 and 1940, when she will have a strong navy, a huge air force and be able to mobilize 5,000,000 men.

With his customary low-bombast the blackguard despot reaffirmed his contempt for all forms of democracy and warned his fascist hooligans of what he termed the "inefficacy of the spirit of Locarno." His reference to the bankruptcy of Locarno only affirms what everyone knows—that the Locarno "security" conference of 1925 was only an attempted realignment of European and world states in preparation for the next war. The Italian government is joint guarantor with England of the Franco-German boundary line. Mussolini's speech shows how lightly he regards his so-called solemn pledges to endeavor to maintain peace in Europe.

But all his war talk at this time has but one object in view. That is an effort to detract the minds of the Italian masses from their miserable condition and the constantly lowered standard of living, recently made much worse by the enforced ten per cent wage reduction in all lines of labor. The Italian masses are seething with discontent. The Communist Party is the one section of the population that is carrying on agitation against the tyrant, hence the discontent is being directed into revolutionary channels.

Mussolini's talk about an army of five million is meaningless, for he will not dare attempt to build such an army as it would require arming of most of the adult male population. No despot dare arm his enemies. He maintains his power through imposing upon the nation organized bands of armed hoodlums, the very scum of the earth, that can only exist as bribed tools of reaction. If he dares place arms in the hands of one million Italian men, say nothing of five million, his fascist state will be swept to destruction before the armed uprising of the masses under the leadership of workers' and soldiers' councils that will supplant the present monstrous regime with a new form of government; a government that will not stifle the voice of the masses but will, for the first time in Italy, bring them into active political life as builders of a workers' government.

The Second Anniversary of the Shanghai Massacre

The workers of China, in the midst of the drive against the rapacious imperialist powers and their agents, will observe on Monday the second anniversary of the Shanghai massacre.

That unprovoked slaughter of defenseless men, women and children peacefully attending a strike meeting, by the gunmen of imperialism wearing uniforms of the British, Japanese and American forces, was the culmination of a series of outrages perpetrated against the Chinese strikers in order to drive them back into the slave pens and thus ensure an uninterrupted flow of super-profits into the hands of the bankers and industrialists of these predatory countries.

While commemorating that event two sides will be emphasized. The first of the heroism of the workers who died before the barrages of the invading enemy. This grim side of the massacre still burns in the minds of millions of Chinese workers and peasants. The Shanghai massacre lives in history as the symbol of imperialist despotism. The observation of that day will aid in implanting still deeper in the masses of the Chinese an undying hatred of imperialism and all its works. But Shanghai is not merely a date for mourning. Its second, and brighter side is the fact that the Shanghai massacre was the starting point for that development of militant nationalism, the beginning of the decisive swing of the liberation movement to the left and the beginning of the rise of Communist prestige among the masses.

Before the general strike of 1925 the Communist movement was small and had but slight influence upon the movement. In the course of that struggle they proved that they alone were the most determined and self-sacrificing fighters in the interest of the masses.

That date also marks the beginning of the victorious drive against the northern bandits that was only temporarily halted by the betrayal to the imperialists of Chiang Kai-shek and is now rapidly being overcome before the onward sweep of the nationalist armies.

One of the mile-posts on the long, blood-soaked trail of the struggle against imperialist despotism, its lessons will be emphasized on the second anniversary and the revolution will march forward to greater victories until the imperialists are scourged from the country.

Seamen's Center to Benefit by Festival

A spring festival and dance will be given by the Yonth Center of Brownsville for the benefit of the International Seamen's Club, Saturday, at the Workers Center, 63 Liberty Ave. in the Liberty Theatre Building.

The aim of the International Seamen's club is to provide all progressive and radical seamen with a congenial meeting place where they can meet and discuss all issues. Especially is it devoted to those issues involving their freedom from the tyranny of the master class without the restriction of the churches and missionaries for which the seamen have had to turn before the establishment of this workers' center.

THE SOVIET UNION has not a friend among the capitalist governments of the world. Even those that may for the moment express a certain diplomatic friendliness to it, hate it and fear it because they know that it is only a question of time until the conflict between the two social orders takes place on an international scale and the Soviet Union is a base of operations in the struggle of the workers and peasants to remove capitalism from the earth. The strength of the Soviet Union comes from its allies among the workers in the capitalistically developed countries and from the oppressed colonial and semi-colonial peoples.

Harvest—A Story of Farm Life

By KENNETH S. BARNHILL

GUS was plowing. Spring had come early and the straw-colored, winter-bared fields seemed to cry for a fresh, warm breath. The snows and rains had scrubbed the roughness from the ground, broken by the fulmination of the past summers' efforts. April's warm sun had dried the earth to a pleasing, mellow brown. And the weeds, the stubble and remnants of the previous year's growth were ready to slink back to dust, awaiting but the caress of the heavy-handed plow. Gus smelled spring in the air. Where the plow cut, rich, fertile earth rolled away close to the ground, pungently sweet; where the fresh green things were plowed up there the clogged massive mats of last Fall's growing. Spring's odors came. Even the plowman's grunting was an aura that meant to the ground a willingness to mother new life again. The moisture spread on the fields early in the past March water, gave the appearance of a blond, dirty-brushed beard against each other; swerving the plow and pulling unevenly. The collars, around which Gus' hands clenched and the tree jerked taut, bruised Gus' neck. Patiently Gus would stand the load but kindly, but this morning he pulled the broad visage with the buckled ends of the long reins. The drafts steadied into a strong pull, the rich black earth turned back from the share rumbling, rolling over and settling into wholesomeness for another hot Summer. Presently the earth came back, burying the leavings of stubble and manure.

Farmer Frederick and Henry were on their way to the field when they heard them. It was very late. One thought of his religious training. Took a lot of work to be a christian. He admired the pastor. The pastor talked so easily and could say the Good Book words bright. That made Gus uncomfortable, made him feel conspicuous and he knew would grow red, he would shuffle his feet and his throat would seem swollen to immobility. He would not talk to the pastor. He couldn't talk to anyone when they spoke of his farm or his family. That was the pastor because he talked so well. The boys liked Herr Pastor too; their father wished that they would talk with him like he overheard them talking.

Gus looked up to the road that passed his field and barn. His face held no expression; only his eyes seemed animated; they moved with quick accuracy to see what they were examining. That one was in bad again. She would cause him the heavy labor of the year before. The doctor had been out Thursday. When he left, Gus heard him say that he would have to break pleurisy, maybe in the morning. Young man. Ernest, the bert-headed son of the grocery store in town had inherited the place doctor to Gus. The farmer liked the boy. He never drank his whiskey. He made it a habit to drink a glass of the choicest at cold water. He was a Bohemian—Gus liked the way he smiled when his face covered, heavy Prince Albert—he liked the way he drank his whiskey. Gus never drank his whiskey. He didn't like it—he always gagged it down and made water stream from his eye. Lager beer straight and old sour wine was good. Gus did like the doctor well, he spoke so easily, he could talk to him too.

Late in the morning the doctor drove up. Gus had stopped looking for him hours before. His mind was occupied with the plowing; as up and down the field he walked, following the plow and guiding it with a strong grip on the handles. Doc and Prince had long since ceased any playfulness and were concerned only with hauling the plow back and forth with a strong, easy pull. Doc and Prince were fine horses, that's right. Gus knew a good workhorse when he saw one. The team was among the best in the township. They looked pretty, too. Heavy, but not clumsy, their long hair billowing down over their hoofs. Gus combed their coats every morning. Their forelegs were short and full; their hindlegs rounded smoothly. He liked to watch them as they took the plow thru the surface of the resting soil.

The doctor had a fast roan colt. Liking the doctor, Gus had let him be served. The doctor's roan was the only stallion in the carriage horse 5 minute drove. He drove his head from side to side as though to say the bit that he might gallop away with the heavy horse-drawn, shiny buggy. The doctor seemed to sense what Gus knew when he drove into the lane and the other lifted a heavy hand in return. In a moment he checked to Doc and Prince and together the team moved on once more—moved on after the doctor's greeting to the roan colt. At noon Gus noticed that the doctor had not gone. So, after watering Doc and Prince and turning them into the stables for their fork of hay, he unhitched the roan colt; watered and fed him and then smoothed his sleek coat with heavy curry-comb and brush.

Gus did not go up to the house at noon. He wasn't hungry and he spent the hour arranging the harness on the hooks of the harness room. Some of it needed oiling, well, he'd tend to that Sunday. In the carriage shed he saw that the mower was in front of the planter. He grasped the tongue, swung the mower out dragged the planter from the shed. He'd be needing it in a few days if the warm weather kept up.

The sun was lowering over the woods as Gus turned the tired team into the barn. They'd worked hard enough for one day. The doctor's carriage was where it had been left in the morning. After giving the roan colt a can of oats he fed the team and bedded them down with fresh, clean straw for the coming night. When that was done he walked slowly to the back door of the house. No one was in the kitchen—he went on to the bedroom he and Minnie used. The young doctor heard him coming and met him at the door. Slapping him across the back, he said, "Well, Gus, we've found an eight pound baby girl for you." Gus pushed by him without a word and looking down at Minnie, muttered, "Monday ve build das farrowing ben. You be up cook for poys. Yah. Ve haf some nice shoats next Fall." Minnie nodded her head and Gus left the room—he might as well go into town with the doctor. Ernest had a good bar back of his grocery.

Gus, Minnie and Hildegarde were leaning on the fence bounding the covered barn yard watching Bess when the neighbor's boy led the bull to the pen. He led the bull by a pole hooked to a ring which passed thru the nose of the animal. Hildegarde was eighteen and a big girl looking down at Minnie, muttered, "Monday ve build das farrowing ben. You be up cook for poys. Yah. Ve haf some nice shoats next Fall." Minnie nodded her head and Gus left the room—he might as well go into town with the doctor. Ernest had a good bar back of his grocery.

Gus decided to breed Bess to a good bull this time. Well, the neighbor had a good bull and Gus didn't see why she shouldn't have the best. Bess had one pair of calves already. She was a good mother. Her calves were pretty good too, Gus got good money for them.

The neighbor boy unsnapped the pole and flicking the bull over the buttock with a short whip drove him into the enclosure with Bess. Inside the pen the bull paused as the door swung shut behind him. He looked at the cow—a low rumble came from his throat. Bess turned to him. From the other side of the fence Gus, Minnie, Hildegarde and the neighbor boy watched the proceedings with interest.

The old farmer turned to his wife and a smile broke the stubborn old heavy German face. He poked her in the breast with his thumb and muttering an "Ach Minnie," moved towards the house. Minnie's eyes nearly closed and turning she slowly followed her husband on the path that led away from the pen. . . . . The neighbor looked down at Hildegarde, and she, tilting back her head, looked up at him. . . . . In a little while the bull and Bess were alone—but they didn't care—they were in love.

Yesterday Hildegarde and the neighbor boy were married. And after the wedding the baby was christened, Gustave Adolph. Old Gus sat in the parlor. The room always smelled musty, due to its mustiness and smelling of no human occupation. He was sitting in the best chair; red plush with all sorts of gingerbread monstrosities carved in the heavy, black walnut frame. A lamp was burning on the center, marble covered table. Gus had been on the back eighty when the first ones had come yesterday morning. There was a crew on the line that was needed a little going over and besides could not Minnie talk to the people better than an old Dutch farmer? He had stayed there, walking along the fence, until Frederick called him with a drawn out, "Oh, papa, komm ma' hirr." He had walked slowly in, head down and uttering as few greetings as possible. Once in the room he had gone thru his part of the ceremony in a trance; carried along by Herr Pastor; carried along because he liked the way the pastor talked. He had held the two-months old baby in his arms and pride bouyed him thru with his service. Then the old women had taken the boy away from him. Pinched his cheek and in low guttural phrases cooed over him, like a bunch of animals.

Gus saw the doctor's son. He liked the youth well, why shouldn't he?—he liked his father. But the doctor was getting older. And now that the heavy beard was gone, lines of tiredness scratched his face. Funny, how Gus could talk to the doctor's boy. Young Doc was a quiet lad and he liked to listen to the old German. Gus talked of the way the corn was coming along. He took the young man out and showed him the cattle. He grinned when the young doctor called the straw stack, where the cows had eaten deep around the edge, a blond flapper's head. Gus thought the stack knew as much as a woman—maybe more. In the stables he let the boy look at the new work team. Yah, he called them Doc and Prince.

And the doctor's son had danced with Hildegarde. No one told him to signal for the orchestra to stop playing. He had danced for an hour before Gus called him over and told him to wave his hand at the leader. The boy gave the leader a dollar. Gus thought that was fine; they only caught the doctor's boy once. He laughed then, just a little. He liked the boy, for he was so quiet and he listened.

Minnie had gone to the kitchen and Gus had arisen to go to the barn when Hildegarde told him the baby was coming. She told him with her pretty, proud head hanging down, ever so slightly. He had wanted to put his arm around her shoulders and pat her head—tell her that all was well with him. Instead his throat had filled and slowly he turned from her and walked, heart heavy, to the stables. He slipped into the stall beside Prince and drew the horse's head against his side. Prince placed his muzzle against Gus' cheek. He could pat Prince; Prince couldn't talk.

But the doctor's son liked to hear Gus talk. He had taken a drink that the boy had given him and that made him feel better. Everyone seemed to want to speak with him. Why, even old Wilhelm, the state senator, said the farmers thought Gus should run for county commissioner. Anyone who has a farm and family like he, would make a good man to spend the county's money. Yes, that was nice. Gus liked to have them talk to him—strange, he liked to talk to them, too.

Ach Gott, the day was over now. Everyone was there but Harmon. Gus sloped a drink of wine from the pitcher on the table. Mist came over his eyes. Harmon had been a good boy. He used to talk to old Gus. But he had been killed in the war. Harmon had gone to Germany in 1916 and two years later the French had killed him. Gus kept the letters Harmon had written him. He liked to read the letters—with the help of Herr Pastor. Henry and Frederick never came over much now. They had families of their own. Gus had given them a hundred acres each of the land he and Minnie had worked so hard to clear and drain. The work was getting pretty hard, but now there was Hildegarde's man. He was a steady boy. Strong—a good worker, Gus knew.

Gus tipped the pitcher back again and the sour wine trickled around the edges and down his chin. He wiped it off with the back of a thick, brown hand. They all liked him at the wedding. He had thought they would not. The League of American Patriots had streaked his barn with blaring, yellow paint during the war—just because Gus would not buy Liberty bonds. Gus couldn't buy the bonds—the money might have been used to kill Harmon. But Harmon was dead now. One of the men who helped paint the barn had sold his ten thousand dollar bonds to Gus for eighty five hundred, after the war. He still had them. They were worth more than ten thousand today. He smiled again. They did like him; he had talked nice with the doctor's boy.

Minnie was in bed. She had gone upstairs. Hildegarde and her man were in the room where Gus and Minnie had slept. Hildegarde said it was easier for her to take care of the baby down there. She stayed in bed for two weeks after little Gustave was born. Gus thought of Minnie and her childbearing. The baby whimpered in the next room. Gus sat still and listened to hear whether Hildegarde would get up. There was no sound but the baby's soft cry. Oh well, Hildegarde was tired. She had been up for two days—dancing and entertaining the wedding guests. She probably had a little too much to drink. Gus chuckled. Quietly he arose from the best chair and picking up the light went into the bedroom. Little Gus became quiet when he stooped over the crib. Minnie never had a crib for her babies. Old Gus liked the crib. The young Doc said it was a fine thing to have. With hesitancy he poked a finger into the baby's stomach. Little Gus clasped the solid finger in two fat hands and looked up at the old man. Gus picked the little one up and went back to his chair, awkwardly holding the child in his arm. The baby again grasped the heavy finger and old Gus let his head fall to the back of the chair as he rocked slowly.

The baby was asleep when old Gus looked down at him again. The finger held fast in the tiny, fat hands. A happy lob shook his big frame and leaning close to the grandson's head, he whispered, "Ach himmel. Anyhow, Gus Adolph, ve had a goot vedding."

THE END.

Struggle of Czecho-Slovian Miners

By G. BEICHEK

FOR long past feelings have been running high in the Czecho-Slovakian mining industry. This has been due to the general marketing crisis experienced by the whole Czecho-Slovakian industry, owing to the contracted internal market and the ever-growing difficulties in the field of export. During the past 5 years coal production decreased and this resulted in 40% of the miners being permanently unemployed.

During these 5 years there were temporary flourishes in the coal industry (during the Ruhr occupation of 1923, and during the two British miners' strikes of 1921 and 1926), but it was clearly observed that after each short-lived boom, caused exclusively by objective conditions, the Czecho-Slovakian coal-industry fell still deeper in the mire of the marketing crisis. During these 5 years the position of the Czecho-Slovakian miners became steadily worse. Wages fell, productivity rose, and the mineowners reaped their profits of hundreds of millions of Czecho-Slovakian crowns. However, with every new slump the coal owners commenced their attack on the miners, driving at lowering their standards.

This move of the mineowners was especially marked during the British miners' strike of 1926.

The strikebreaking possibilities during that year enabled the mineowners to enhance their profits by many millions on increased productivity of labor alone, not taking into consideration the profits reaped on increased prices of coal. Directly the slump set in, the coal-owners immediately came out in a united front against the miners, who demanded a 20% wage-increase.

The treachery of the Czecho-Slovakian reformists cannot be passed over. During the trade boom they did not support the struggle of the revolutionary trade unions to increase wages. They thereby aided the coal-owners to make full use of the strikebreaking possibilities that were presented.

Very characteristic of the reformists are the excuses they give for rejecting the struggle for increased wages. As one excuse for their treachery, they claimed the unemployed miners had been starving for long past, that the miners needed a breathing space, if only by working temporary work and, therefore, no struggle for increased wages should be undertaken during the favorable marketing period that had set in.

This unparalleled and insipid argument of the reformists not only renounced international working class solidarity in respect to the British miners, but was the worst kind of demagogy. It was known to everybody and no less to the reformists that the mineowners got increased output not by engaging more labor, but almost exclusively by increasing the productivity of the men employed.

Thanks to the treachery of the reformists, the miners let a very favorable moment slip by. When the British miners' strike was lost, the mine-owners, despite the united front that had been formed of all miners' unions, categorically rejected not only the demand for a 20% wage-increase, but bluntly refused to pay the high cost of living bonus. After the insolent reply of the coal-owners, the reformists again commenced to suppress the revolutionary fervor of the miners and took all possible action to undermine the struggle for increased wages which was then commencing.

Utilizing the treacherous activities of the reformists in dividing the ranks of the miners, the coal-owners and the government prepared a new attack on the miners.

This time the government and the owners concentrated their attack on miners' insurance. In Czecho-Slovakia, the old system of miners' independent insurance dates from the year 1854. Under the Fraternal Insurance Fund the wives and children of the miners are also insured, the widows and orphans having the right to receive pensions. This insurance fund, (at the present time 33 Czech crowns monthly are paid for insurance against convalescence and old age, and 16 crowns for insurance against illness) contributed to monthly by both employers and miners alike, experienced a difficult financial situation. It has a monthly deficit of 3 millions and has no reserve funds to cover relief issued to working miners.

The financial crisis of this institute has its root-cause in the war when the number of persons receiving relief greatly increased. To save the Institute a subsidy of about 3 billion Czech crowns were necessary. The government, encouraged by the victory of the mineowners, now intend to completely abolish this Institute and transfer the miners to the general insurance system. This intention of the government aroused a storm of indignation among the widest masses of miners: at present 150,000 miners, 40,000 miners' families receiving relief, 20,000 widows and 12,000 orphans are affected.

On the initiative of the Miners' Section of One Big Union, affiliated to R. I. L. U., mass meetings of protest were organized throughout the coal districts and under pressure of the masses the reformists were forced to convene a joint meeting of all miners' trade union organizations including also the O. B. U. Miners' Section, which passed a decision to defend the miners' insurance. Revolutionary trade unions at this meeting stated clearly that the institute of miners' insurance must be re-established wholly at the expense of the government and the coalowners.

The executive of the O. B. U. drew up a project of reviving the Institute of Miners' Insurance. The following demands were made. 1) That independence of miners' insurance be maintained until general social insurance is improved to such an extent as to guarantee the miners the same amount of relief permitted by independent miners' insurance; 2) That the existing rules and amount of relief be preserved also for miners at work; 3) That miners' insurance be improved at expense of the employers and the state.

These demands met with wide sympathy among the masses. The miners understand that the proposals of the O. B. U. are fully justified as the mineowners have shown in their yearly balance-sheets tremendous profits. At the same time the government improved its financial situation at the expense of the mining industry by the increased amount of taxes on coal. The coal tax received by the government during 1920 was 918,408,094 Czech crowns; 1921 was 1,099,137,646 Czech crowns; 1922 was 1,510,141,187 Czech crowns; 1923 was 534,925,605 Czech crowns; 1924 was 329,877,191 Czech crowns; 1925 was 815,228,160 Czech crowns; 1926 was 248,324,200 Czech crowns.

Only under pressure of the masses were the reformists forced to side up with this movement and obviously with the intention of betraying it at the first convenient moment.

Revolutionary trade unions and the Communist Party of Czecho-Slovakia demand that a congress of mine committees be called to ascertain the feeling and militancy among the masses and to work out a program of action for the co-ordinated struggle of the miners not only to preserve miners' insurance, but to increase wages also.

The reformists are again evading the issue. They are endeavoring to "head the movement only to behead it later." This is an old and well tried policy of the reformists. However, the militant spirit of the miners forced the reformists to temporarily discard their usual tactics and they duly announced a one day strike of protest for the 24th of March. This 24-hour strike was completely successful. More than 100,000 miners participated.

THE GLASS

By LEBARBE.

THE Glass was a drab soured thing, familiar—used by everyone in Mrs. O'Rourke's rooming house: TRANSIENT—BY THE WEEK, MONTH OR YEAR. Used by everyone in the rooming house: 4 anyhow, 5 maybe, for she was never quite sure about the back room. Sometimes there were 2 voices in the back room, men's. Sometimes only one man's cough. Sometimes one man's voice and the thin snuggling laugh of a woman.

The old woman in the front room used The Glass more than anyone else. The old woman with indigestion. So it often had a chemical crystallized on its clouded sides and tasted of soda (for the old woman's indigestion). No amount of hot water could ever quite clean out the taste of soda and toothpastes and what have you. She had tried and failed.

The Glass was always to be found in the rusted wire container hung on the wall in the bathroom, on the left side of the wash basin next to the hot water spigot. (To make the spigot work you had to push the thing you turn the water on with, tight against the fixture).

She hated The Glass. It was the mark of her station—the badge of her necessity—the altar on which she had to bow to the bosses. It had the taste of many mouths in it: the taste of degredation, hopelessness, standardization. Well, why didn't she buy one for herself then? Well, that meant 10 cents and they were always getting broken. And her landlady would think she was getting snooty—too good for her house. It was a good house, wasn't it? No kids. No dogs. Hot water usually. Clean linen every 10 days. That sort of thing. . .

She was afraid of this Glass. The old woman's indigestion. Yes, and always the chance of something viler from the indiscriminate mouthings of the other roomers. You never can tell. They are always changing, the roomers. Usually about the first of the month.

So she scalded The Glass out often. Tried to keep it clean. But she didn't have any luck.

The Glass began to haunt her. She began to dream of it. Always the sodden brown taste of tobacco, soda for the old woman, many lips. One night she looked into it and saw many years ahead. Years ahead of slaving for this boss or that boss. Years of stale tastes and soda tastes in The Glass. Along the rim the taste of mouths. The Glass was an admittance thing. She decided to go without drinking of-tener.

(And so one night when the flat voice of a woman giggled and snuggled in the back room and the old woman belched in the front room, she made up her mind. . .Then she went out and bought some deep purple iodine crystals. . .Then she locked herself in the bathroom. . .Took a look in the mirror . . .Straightened her hair with tired pats on the right, on the left, and a lifting caress in the back . . .Then she scalded The Glass till it looked clean when the cold water was turned in full force. . . Turned a little warm water into it now. . .Added a couple of the purple crystals and watched the color spread. . .Waited till the water turned grape purple—And drank the grape of her release. . .

(But before she lost consciousness, she replaced The Glass in Its wire container, went to her room and lay down on her bed where there would be clean linen in 3 days more. . .)

Mosc. Kum. R. C. P."

By A. ERVEY

This article is timely because of the recent raid on the Soviet Trade Delegation headquarters in London and the breaking off of diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union because of alleged interference in the domestic affairs of Great Britain. The picture of the fake Pravda, official organ of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, that accompanies this story should not at root any doubts our readers may have that the British government does not descend to the despicable level of forgery in framing up on its opponents. People of truly Byronic or Tolstoian moral stature are dedicated to the service of the British working class will have no difficulty in believing anything no matter how despicable about the British government. We doubt an will have a deluge of forged documents in the capitalist press from now on, aimed to have been captured in the Arcos raid.

The post-war years in very truth can be called the period when the doubtful art of preparing forgeries of every kind blossomed forth in all its glory. And without doubt the palm for supremacy in this respect — if not for quality, then for quantity — should be given to England, famous for the celebrated "Zinoviev letter," which guaranteed the entry to power in 1925 of the present Conservative Government with Baldwin at the head.

In connection with the 15th anniversary of "Pravda" and the recent Peking forgeries, it will not be superfluous to pay a little attention to the Scotland Yard "double" of our "Pravda," about which the reading public has doubtless already managed to forget. And, by the way, on February 28th, 1921, it was practically impossible to obtain a copy of the "Daily Herald," which denounced the whole business of the SCOTLAND YARD FAKED "PRAVADA." The "Daily Herald" wrote up in detail the "technique" of the production "of the forged Pravda." The publication of this "newspaper" had been started by Russian White Guards living in London in 1920. The "Editorial Collegium" was situated in the "old Russian embassy," and the financial side was run by the "old Russian consulate." The "paper" was printed once in two weeks, and was taken straight from the printers to Scotland Yard.

In England there is a law that on every printed publication the name of the editor, the publisher and the printer should appear. A close examination of the faked "Pravda" revealed a few English words at the bottom, written in tiny print. These words, run: "Editor—Pushnow, Publisher—Free Society, Printed by Williams, Lea & Co., Ltd., E. C."

It is absolutely obvious that the "Pravda" indicated was printed in a London printing shop, little suited to the purposes of these "Tsarist Russians." And this is where the official English police institution—Scotland Yard—came on the scene, zealously fighting against the "interference of the Bolsheviks in the internal affairs of other countries."

The copies of the faked "Pravda" brought to Scotland Yard were sent to the guillotining machine and, UNDER THE SUPERVISION OF BRITISH CIVIL SERVANTS, the "compromising" signature was cut clean off. The "newspaper" was now ready for dispatch. But the kind help of Scotland Yard was not limited to the work of the guillotine. The doctored copies of the faked "Pravda" were packed and delivered by an English police agent to certain English officials in Helsingfors. The "Daily Herald" not without sarcasm commented, that the expense of the dispatch of the papers was borne by none other than the British taxpayers, who pay also for the upkeep of Scotland Yard.

Why and for whom was it necessary that the Russian White Guards and their "mighty defenders" from the Foreign Office should print forged copies of "Pravda" in London in 1920? The answer to this question will be clear, if we remember that it was in Autumn 1920 that the Lloyd George Government threatened to break off the Anglo-Soviet trade agreement on the pretext of "Bolshevik propaganda in England"; that in the same year Wrangel was ultimately defeated and the "Russian" conference in Paris decided to begin a new "agitation campaign" against Soviet Russia on a broad scale. The British foreign office was at that time in need of material to prove this "Bolshevik agitation in England"; can one stop at the preparation of false documents in the attainment of such "great aims"? The British police institutions did not let that hinder them in 1920, or later in 1924, when the "Zinoviev letter" appeared as the crowning glory of their endeavors.

* The actual title of "Pravda" translated into English runs: "Organ Cen. Com. and the Mosc. Com. of the RCP (b)," which means: "Organ of the Central Committee and the Moscow Committee of the Russian (now All-Union) Communist Party (Bolsherik)." The sub-title of the London fabrication has nothing in common not only with the present-day sub-title of "Pravda," but with the Russian language.

Democracy in Union Square

By I. LAZAROVITZ (Worker Correspondent.)

Union Square—afternoon. The benches were, as usual, taken. The visitors were mostly members of the army of unemployed, who, despite prosperity in their daily struggle for existence. They sat there and discussed politics.

Suddenly the tune of the Star Spangled Banner sounded.

A few of these Union Square visitors, among them myself, rushed to the place where the tune emanated. We saw a hurriedly built wooden platform with a big top sign which read:

"Department of New York Veterans of Foreign Wars."

A small fellow with a belly as big as the wooden platform on which he was standing, made the address. This fellow looked as though he had never seen the inside of a factory in his life.

Did he speak about the terrible conditions of the workers in this country? Did he speak about the danger of a new war with all its miseries? Or about the thousands of unemployed who are subjected to the worst kind of starvation in this highly developed country?

Quite the contrary. He spoke about the prosperous time we have. The phrase "American democracy" came into his speech often.

While he was speaking about democracy I noticed that the crowd began to run somewhere toward the east side of Union Square. Running after the crowd I saw two big fat policemen holding a fellow. One policeman kept a bunch of leaflets which he had taken from the fellow.

"What kind of leaflets are those?" I asked the policeman.

"Oh, these damn Bolsheviks, wherever you go you meet them."

"May I have one of the leaflets?" I asked the policeman.

"Who are you, anyhow?" the policeman replied in a voice that nearly made me deaf.

I told him I represented a certain newspaper and am interested to know what it's all about.

"O, well, there is one," he said in a more decent voice.

I took one of the leaflets and immediately understood why the policeman was so excited. The leaflet was a statement of the central executive committee of the Workers (Communist) Party. It began: "Hands Off China—Not one dollar, not one man for the Imperialists."

"Where are you going to take this fellow?" I asked the policeman, but he didn't reply.

Ya don't believe in Democracy? I'll bust ya in the nose ya dama Red! That's how Democratic I am!

The New Open Shop Drive

By JOSEPH ZACK

THE miners' strike, organized wage cuts, drive against the left Wing, lock-out of the plumbers in New York, the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the stone cutters' case which tends to prohibit strikes, the latest decision by the same court upholding the anti-syndicalist laws as made in the Whitney case, which tends to outlaw the party, lock-out of the carpenters in Chicago, the imperialist drive to maintain control of foreign markets and gain new ones, (China, Nicaragua, etc.)—what does it all mean? Have these two reaction at home, imperialism abroad) any connection with each other? Are they indissoluble parts of the post-war imperialistic era of American Capitalism? Industrialization of the South and West, the later numbers of child, youth, and woman labor being inducted into industry, the replacement of skilled labor by semi-skilled and unskilled, thru efficiency schemes sectionalizing, new machinery, the terrific drive to increase the output at reduced costs. What has all this to do with the post-war imperialism of the U. S. A.?

The tremendous swing to the right of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy, the tremendous loss of membership of the A. F. of L., the agricultural crisis, the crisis in several big industries. What has this to do with American imperialism?

The recuperation of European industry as a competitor for the world markets, the industrial development of semi-colonial and colonial nations and its effects upon the American capitalist system and imperialist rivalries?

Here are a few questions to be solved by us. What are the effects of American world imperialism upon the various sections of population, workers, farmers, petty bourgeoisie, middle class, independent manufacturers, industrial capital, degree of trustification, international monopoly, finance capital? Without a correct answer to these questions we can have no program, politically or industrially, we cannot see clearly enough the present divisions amongst the bourgeoisie, we cannot formulate an agricultural program. We are just groping in the dark, on the defensive, merely defending ourselves against blows that come our way. Surely, we can not play a leading, role in pointing the way and leading struggles against American capitalism. Thus far no such analysis with specific American application has yet been made by our party. To speak of imperialism as a Chinese or Nicaraguan proposition as is the popular way, is like seeing merely the surface manifestations of a profound transformation of the entire system. It would be merely like seeing the advance strokes of the oncoming open shop drive without understanding the why and wherefore of the forces and conditions that produce it. It would be like blaming it on the capricious greed and mischief of individual capitalists in control of important industries.

It would be beyond the scope of these two articles* to go beyond a few indications of what the problem is and where it lies. Surely the best minds of our movement and all our resources must be used to go into this in a really thoroughgoing manner.

Bourgeois propagandists and theoreticians have been psychologizing the labor movement with the contention that the American worker is enjoying unexampled prosperity. The social democrats have picked it up and the miracle of high wages, short hours, etc., under capitalism, "American Democracy Brand," is being dangled before the eyes of the "humble and meek" all over the world. Communisms, official and unofficial, coming to investigate the miracle of our proletarian prosperity under capitalism. Even many Left Wingers, yes even Communists, have been caught by this contagious propaganda. It reminds us of Woodrow Wilson's war propaganda that carried our Social-Democrats off their feet. All the theories of the labor movement moving to the right, the abandonment of militant slogans, the excuse for abandoning class struggle policies, working with the bureaucracy within the orbit of class collaboration, all the class collaboration tendencies and theories can be excused on that basis.

The commissions that come to investigate our proletarian prosperity in the U. S. A. never went to the Massachusetts and Connecticut textile towns, to the coal towns in the bituminous fields, down the South and West with their new industries and cheap labor, into the needle and shoe industries in the East. They never examined how many skilled mechanics have been replaced by cheaper semi-skilled and unskilled labor and machinery. They never looked into the earnings of our unorganized semi-skilled and unskilled in the great industries. They never looked into the fact that the surface prosperity of many proletarian families is there only because the children, women and youngsters are now in the factory, mill, store or mine, thus increasing the total income of the family.

The number of skilled mechanics bribed by this prosperity are most probably a minority even amongst the surviving skilled mechanics, not to speak of the semi-skilled and the unskilled who make up the huge army of the American proletariat and who have been either the losers or profited very little by this prosperity. Yes, there is a section of the skilled mechanics that have been petty-bourgeoisified. Even the semi-skilled and unskilled in sub-trades of only well organized industries like the building trades and printing have had a corrupting share of prosperity for these industries. The bosses have been willing to yield a part of their huge surplus profits to the workers in the form of wage increases and there only was class collaboration successful to the extent of wage increases without a sharp struggle. But to conclude from that that the labor movement is moving to the right, means to leave out of sight at least 90% of the proletariat and to deliberately ignore the million of workers skilled, semi-skilled and unskilled in industries that are going thru a crisis and where the income has been reduced as the result of this very imperialism.

It is not true that the labor bureaucracy has gone to the right because of the corruptive effects of imperialist prosperity upon the skilled mechanics, organized within the A. F. of L. altho this did bolster up its position. The needle trades and mining unions, etc. which are in a crisis, and where the tendency is to the Left, have as many skilled mechanics as the building trades and printers. The bureaucracy has gone to the right because it has itself surrendered to the might of corporate and imperialist capital in control of government and the principal industries and has gone in business thru banks, insurance companies, etc. to profit financially by this very prosperity and for this very reason will keep on moving to the right even when the skilled mechanics in these preferred trades, as it is particularly likely in the building industry, will move to the Left. No serious action on behalf of the workers is to be expected as far as the A. F. of L. leadership is concerned. Their activity will, in the main, be to prevent us from leading the workers into effective counteraction against the employers.

The Party and the Left Wing is at the cross-roads. If we keep as our chief orientation to operate within the A. F. of L., as it is today, we must move to the right and work within the orbit of class collaboration, with democratization of the unions, elimination of corruption, amalgamation as the chief slogans. It means the gradual abandonment of real militancy, particularly in the industries passing thru a crisis—like mining and the needle trades—in order to avoid headon collisions with the A. F. of L. bureaucracy. It means the progressive abandonment of the unorganized, semi-skilled and unskilled masses that make up over 70% of the American proletariat as any attempt to organize them will bring us into violent conflict. It means a considerable surrender to the A. F. of L. bureaucracy all along the line and a probable degeneration of the Left Wing movement, if not of our Party itself. Such an orientation is out of the question.

A revaluation of the role of the A. F. of L. leadership under imperialism is absolutely essential. So is a revaluation of class relations and stratification amongst the working class under imperialism necessary and if we make the correct analysis we will come to the conclusion that our chief orientation must be on the basis of the unorganized, semi-skilled and unskilled, who in the main are outside of the A. F. of L. The organization of the unorganized must be our central task. We must undertake to lead and organize these workers thru international unions affiliated to the A. F. of L. wherever it can be done effectively and outside the A. F. of L. wherever necessary.

Our concentration would be on the basis of industries most favorably situated for organization and most unfavorably affected by American imperialism such as the automobile, marine transport, textile, food, amongst the unorganized in the miners, needle trades and amongst the relatively organized inside the A. F. of L. Which does not mean an abandonment of our extensive activities particularly among the railroad workers, nor building trades or printers who are relatively favorably affected by imperialist capitalism. With a policy of this kind, the A. F. of L. bureaucracy would be under what might properly be called an enfilading fire by opening up of the vast field among the unorganized and concentration of our main energies in that direction; and by the continuation of our activities inside, particularly in industries going thru a crisis, we can still maintain our slogans of affiliation to the A. F. of L. but application on the basis of fighting unionism. If the new unions are accepted on that basis, and those we control stay on the inside very well. If not, it will be up to the bureaucracy to expel us. But we maintain a policy of organizing the unorganized and struggle for better conditions and use and defense of the strike weapon. Whether, as a result of that a progressive new labor movement will gradually develop outside the A. F. of L., will largely depend abandonment of the expulsion policy by the A. F. of L. bureaucracy.

There are vast forces in the U. S. whose interests are diametrically opposed to the interests of imperialist capital at this time. Among them are the farmers, large sections of the petty-bourgeoisie and even part of the middle classes and independent manufacturers. In proportion to the pressure exerted upon them, they will separate politically and otherwise from the dominant imperialist group and in opposition inside and outside the old political parties and social and fraternal organizations. The uncompromising attitude of the employers toward labor, which will come sharp to the front in a new open shop drive, will defeat the class-collaboration policy of the A. F. of L. leadership and will break loose the lower layers of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy thus reconstituting to some extent the alliance between the progressives and the Left Wing. The division even among the upper layers of the bureaucracy will be more pronounced and while we cannot orientate ourselves on this possibility, we can take advantage of this most probable development as it occurs.

The workers in vast industries unfavorably affected by imperialism, these are the elements that can be brought into united fronts politically and otherwise on various issues arising out of the conflict against imperialist capital, and large sections of which will in large degree co-operate against the imperialist group in control of the U. S. government and the A. F. of L. leadership allied with it as it was even demonstrated in Passaic.

These dissident groups among the bourgeoisie, particularly the agricultural group need allies in the industrial states in the East. They must extend their influence politically, principally in the ranks of Labor in these states, and since they cannot do it thru the leadership of the A. F. of L., they will go a great way to do it thru the opposition in the ranks of Labor inside and outside the A. F. of L. The Left Wing, especially in its work among the unorganized, needs all the political protection and support it can get. It needs a political movement mainly directed against imperialist capital and the old parties. Now, before the 1928 presidential elections, is the time to formulate a clear program, and lay the base for this mass movement. Now, that the politicians must be candid more than usual, is the time to concentrate upon a certain industry and start a movement much greater than Passaic and altho no Labor Party can be expected for 1928, a big movement amongst the unorganized and a united labor picket for the 1928 presidential election will go a great way in mobilizing the masses against the new open shop offensive and the building up of a mass movement politically and industrially in the U. S. A.

DRAMA

The Neighborhood Playhouse Says Farewell

By EVELYN BENNETT

Will play an important part in the new Richard Hayndon Reves "Merry-Go-Round" which opens at the Klaw Theatre Tuesday night.

...his natural growth and frequent temptations to depart from its original purpose. The Playhouse began as a protest, for contact with social forces through the Henry Street Settlement, and its development as "theatre" was the outcome of a deep rooted conviction on the part of its sponsors, that art was to life, and that the theatre is an aesthetic reaction to the great human drama.

If, in time, the theatre began to attract the notice of a few interested theatregoers and professional critics from other parts, it was because it offered incontestable evidence that a new life was about to be born in the American theatre. Once this fact was discovered the Playhouse was loosed from its parochial function and found, in spite of itself, to recognize a responsibility that had been thrust upon it as an important factor in the development of a new expression in the theatre. It was its consistently growing importance, culminating with the production of "The Dybbuk," that brought about the end of The Neighborhood Playhouse. For it had reached a point where it could go on no longer. Its main purpose had been achieved. It had outgrown its environment. Arrived at that point the inevitable thing, the artistic thing, was to stop. And that is what has happened. Whether it goes on again in some other form or not is beside the point: only its physical self can cease; the idea, the spiritual entity, remains.

Editor's Notes

By ALEX BITTELMAN

A new political term is coming into vogue. It spells: Third Termism. The other day the Chicago Tribune carried a news item headlined: Third Termism The 1928 Issue, Edwards Says.

WELL, it looks to us a convenient sort of a phrase for the political purposes of capitalist politicians who are opposed to Coolidge running for a third term. But the issue involved in Coolidge's third term for the presidency of the United States is much bigger than the phrase itself would indicate.

SENATOR Edward J. Edward, democrat of New Jersey, is quite definitely opposed to a third presidential term for Coolidge. And for very good reasons. He wants his own party in the saddle. He says:

"Any attempt on the part of President Coolidge to dictate the destiny of these United States for more than eight years will be met with a just and proper rebuke."

NOW, we maintain that it is not really President Coolidge who dictates the destiny of these United States, but the big capitalists. They are doing all the dictating that there is to be done in order to maintain the present capitalist system. Coolidge and the republican party are the political executors of the will of big capital. We further maintain that the election of a democratic president, which would undoubtedly please Senator Edwards, would make very little difference in the situation. Big capital operates through the democratic party almost as good as through the republican party, and in some respects even better.

IS it to be concluded from this that the American working class and the poor farming classes are to be indifferent to what has been designated as Third Termism? No, not all. Only the working masses must realize the full implications of what Third Termism means, whether it be for Coolidge or some other capitalist politician.

IT is to be observed that big capitalist interests quite generally view with sympathy the idea of Third Termism. It kind of appeals to them. And why? The answer to this question is to be found in the general change of the state of mind of big capital with respect to the traditional requirements of the so-called democratic system of government of the United States. Big capital, and also medium capital, is becoming ever more distrustful of the efficacy of its own methods of government from the point of view of keeping the toiling masses in subjection. Ever so often the magnates of finance and industry in the United States are casting glances across the Atlantic, to the seat of Italian, Bulgarian and Polish fascism, sighing and hoping that some day American capitalism may find its own Mussolini to administer the affairs of state.

IT is no secret that the big capitalists of the United States are very favorably inclined, to say the least, towards the fascist governments of Europe, particularly towards Mussolini. We have yet to find the American big banker, or industrialist, or merchant, who upon his return from Italy failed to praise the "greatness" of Mussolini. They all like the hangman and oppressor of the Italian workers and farmers. And why? It is the manifestation of a repressed complex for a similar dictatorship in the United States.

THE Morgans and Garys, who wax so eloquent on the achievements of the fascist regime in Italy, can already see the day when American imperialism, powerful and still growing as it is today, will enter the path of decline. These captains of finance and industry, who are now amassing tremendous fortunes at the expense of the sweat and blood of the toiling masses of America and the world over, are quite in a position to visualize slackening production, growing unemployment, unrest and resentment of millions of American workers whom the trade union reactionaries will no longer be able to keep in check. Hence, the question arises in the minds of the present day rulers of the United States: Do the present methods of government offer sufficient guarantees against this coming upsurge of class assertion by the American working class? Will the capitalist dictatorship in the government, masked at present with intricate methods of democratic form, be able to withstand the onrush of working class awakening which is bound to come?

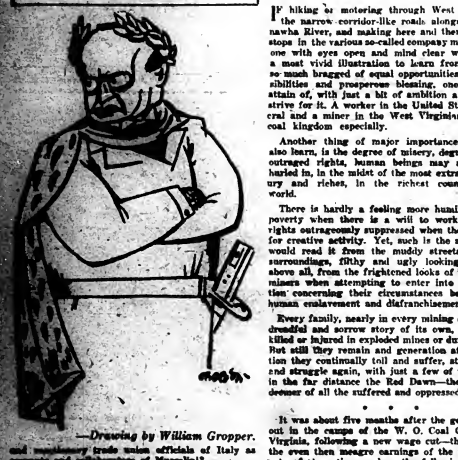
AND the point of view which is gaining ever more favor in the eyes of big capital is to gradually free itself of the mask and camouflage of "democracy" and to institute as much as is expedient the methods of open dictatorship. This trend is quite evident in the political development of American capitalism; away from capitalist democracy and toward capitalist fascism. The system of government is the same in both instances—a capitalist system—but the practical methods and means of government are different, the fascist methods being more adapted to the maintenance of capitalist rule in time of sharpened class struggles.

IN the light of these considerations, the issue of third termism, as far as the working masses are concerned, becomes an issue of struggle against the autocracy and dictatorship of big capital in the American government. The efforts of certain sections of big capital to retain Coolidge in the presidency for a third term becomes even more menacing just because of this trend of American capital towards open dictatorship and the use of fascist methods. To be sure, this is not precisely the way Senator Edwards looks at it, but just the same, this is the only way in which the working masses must view it. And seeing it that way, they must awaken to the situation and prepare to fight.

DANIEL J. TOBIN, treasurer of the American Federation of Labor and president of the Teamsters' and Chauffeurs' Union, sees a great menace to the American workers in the national wage cut which Mussolini is now enforcing upon Italian labor. Tobin happens to be right, this time. But what is he doing to help American labor to meet this menace in an effective way?

Here is what Tobin has to say on Mussolini's charter of labor:

"If this plan succeeds in Italy it is not illogical to suppose that other nations will be drawn into competition on similar basis—a sort of worldwide race to see who can live on the least. Any economist can see what this means to the present industrial system."



THE question that every American worker should ask himself is this: What are the Italian trade unions doing to resist this nationwide wage cutting measure of the fascist dictators? The answer is that the Italian trade union movement has been outlawed and crushed as a preparatory measure to cut the wages and further enslave the Italian workers. Strikes too have been outlawed. And the most conscientious collaborators of Mussolini in the destruction of the Italian trade union movement were no other than the conservative and reactionary officials of the trade unions of Italy.

WHY does not Daniel J. Tobin discuss this angle of the situation? Is it because it hits directly home? Is it because it shows up the conservative and reactionary trade union officials of Italy as servants and collaborators of Mussolini?

If you think I mean what he says, namely, that Lewis' trade union measure is a menace to labor, then you are wrong. He does not like the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor because it opposes it. Why does it oppose it? Why does Green fight against the treachery of the Lewis-Mellon-Coolidge combine?

WHERE we should not be asking these questions. If Lewis' bill were what he says, namely, that the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, of which Tobin is treasurer, and Green as well as the Italian collaborators, Matthew Woll and William Green were trying to block the strike of the fur workers because they were afraid of the militancy of the rank and file, which they, the left wing leaders, with their party associated to undermine and split up the union. And in doing so, they are helping the bosses as little better than Green and Woll. Which, then, is the true face of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, either from Mussolini and his agents or from Lewis' measure?

I may be wrong to touch another fact in the situation. Lewis' bill has not yet met on his desk. But it is going to receive the fullest trade unions, including trade union heads, support. Green and records, mobilizing the power of the united "defiance" of the International of Labor Unions against the Italian trade union reactionaries and Mussolini as a whole the Executive Council is trying to protect the right of the Italian trade unions to a legal existence. A majority of general secretary of the International of Labor Unions, as the Executive Council of Labor Unions, has declared that it would take energetic steps to protect the Italian trade unions. Green and Woll, by passively permitting Mussolini's agents to control the Italian trade unions, are helping the bosses to the destruction of the unions, and, by passively permitting Mussolini's agents to control the Italian trade unions, are helping the bosses to the destruction of the unions.

SYDNEY, Australia. (FP).—One of the tricks which the bosses have to learn Britain the hard way is to keep their hands off the workers' unions. Not that they have any personal fondness for the unions, but they have learned from bitter experience that it is dangerous. In Australia, things are not so far advanced as in the old country. In the state of New South Wales, for instance, there are 97 unions with 14,468 members, and there are less than 14,468 employers. Now, if the workers would get the sense, they could run the country without any of them. But they haven't got the sense, and the employers are responsible for immigrants, who come to Australia in the hope that there is work to be had there. Unfortunately, it also explains why there are so many employers who come to Australia, transfer and go to the bread line.

In West Virginia

By MAURICE GOMBERG

If hiking or motoring through West Virginia on the narrow corridor-like roads alongside the Kanawha River, and making here and there occasional stops in the various so-called company mining camps, one with eyes open and mind clear would find it a most vivid illustration to learn from about the so much bragged of equal opportunities, great possibilities and prosperous blessing, one is able to attain of, with just a bit of ambition and desire to strive for it. A worker in the United States in general and a miner in the West Virginian open-shop coal kingdom especially.

Another thing of major importance one would also learn, is the degree of misery, degradation and outraged rights, human beings may allow to be hurled in, in the midst of the most extravagant luxury and riches, in the richest country in the world.

There is hardly a feeling more humiliating than poverty when there is a will to work, or human rights outrageously suppressed when there is a will for creative activity. Yet, such is the story as one would read it from the muddy streets and dirty surroundings, filthy and ugly looking huts, and above all, from the frightened looks of some of the miners when attempting to enter into a conversation concerning their circumstances betraying inhuman enslavement and disfranchisement.

Every family, nearly in every mining camp, has a dreadful and sorrow story of its own, of relatives killed or injured in organized mines or during strikes. But still they remain and generation after generation they continually toil and suffer, struggle, lose and struggle again, with just a few of them seeing in the far distance the Red Dawn—the Great Redeemer of all the suffered and oppressed.

It was about five months after the general walkout in the camps of the W. O. Coal Co. of West Virginia, following a new wage cut—thus reducing the even then meagre earnings of the miners to a rate of starvation—and on the following day after the work in the mines, being forced by poverty, terror and disorganization, was resumed under conditions as dictated by the coal operators, when James Anderson, a young miner, suddenly realized that all his hopes and aspirations to work himself up to a higher position in life, whatever his conceptions were, but relatively to a position somewhat higher than the one of a "common ordinary miner" he occupied at present, these peted dreams, he suddenly realized are nothing else but inaccessible, self deceiving and naive illusions incompatible with reality.

If asked by someone, it is very doubtful if James could intelligibly explain the source and cause of his new found consciousness, just as well as he could not probably explain the inspiring factors of his former aspirations, now dead. Nevertheless, there, deep in his heart he felt and knew that it is now that he is on the right path, wondering only, how could he not see it before, and his former self-deceiving illusions which were wrong and misleading.

James was young, in fact very young. And though born and raised in surroundings very far from luxury—in mining workers' surroundings—his knowledge and conception of life were such, as of a sweet and banal novelette where everything is so noble and magnificent. But starting in the mine at seventeen with the hard and brute routine of "education," he made him hostilely inclined towards any modern though or ideal contradictory to his conceptions of life or ambitious aspirations, he was now completing his fifth year of very much discouraging hard labor in the mine entirely disillusioned, his "education" completely evaporated.

Life—black and rough as a pile of coal; those brutal facts of life's reality, contradictory to all the phantasies he had been taught beginning from the time his cradle up to the time of his first walk to the mine; life—the most efficient and eloquent agitator, with hammering facts of truth and reality have spoken to James' ears in words more conceivable and convincing than all the pamphlets he occasionally read, mercilessly smashing his shattery beliefs into dust and oblivion.

The inevitable followed. Overwhelmed by the complexities of contradictions, bewildered and disenchanted, James conceded.

Days, dark and desperate, were these to young James, Anderson, days of torturous and painful vexatiousness, reminding those days of five years ago after that disastrous gas explosion in the same mine he is working now, when with a score of others his father, was also found dead, and he, James, then a school boy, picking up his father's lunch-kit —the only witness of his death—stgried his walks to the coal pits, becoming the main supporter of the family.

"Why!" For the first time did he ask. "Why!"

Never before did young James Anderson ask any proof or hesitate in the soundness of what he was trained to believe in and obey. "Everything is as it is—he was taught—because it cannot and should not be any different. Only reds and radicals, who are foreigners and outcasts, dare to hesitate in the justness of our American principles and question the good will of our institutions." James obeyed as all "good American patriots" did. He did not understand. It did not concern him. But now . . . now, there was a lost strike in which he himself participated—There was a wage cut he considered unjustified—And then—the most of everything—there were hopes and aspirations he pestled so caressingly through all his darkest years in the coal pits, dreams, he now regarded as mythical as fairy tales can only be. So now, there was a James entirely different than the one of five years ago. James, who already learned how not to care a damn, whatever, whoever is going to think of him or of his action, and over and over again was he asking what he was so anxious to know. "Why?" "Why?"

Since the last defeated strike in W. O. mining camps, several years passed away into eternity without any extraordinary occurrences. With the wage cut, the row of "total income" in the books of the W. O. Coal Company of West Virginia began to grow longer and longer by every month, while on the part of the miners, the growing objects were the loose belt ends, which were also growing longer and longer by every month while keeping track of the ever hungry and shrinking bodies of the underpaid miners.

And although superficially, as one unacquainted with the situation would conceive it, the pace of life in the camps continued to make its normal daily rounds, obviously smooth with no signs of anxiety or disturbance, the more penetrative observer would reveal under this camouflaged quietness a boiling volcano of discontent, whose furious vapors if concentrated and released, would exterminate in a single blow all the barriers of their enemy oppressors and exploiters forever and without return. And one of those amongst them, fully aware of this powerful weapon of "concentration," stimulating and propagating it, is now young James Anderson.

Broken and a thing of the past is now that charmed circle of "whys" he had been clampered in, in those early days of his awakening. And not only became it clear now to young Anderson, why that hypocritical "equal opportunity" boknm, invented by the capitalist ruiers and exploiters to delude the minds of the exploited masses, is equivalent to the same "equal opportunities" every miner's lunch kit has to be rebuilt into a radio set, but he also learned and knew how to combat such delusions, to the cause of which he entirely and wholeheartedly devoted himself since the day of his awakening.

To organize, to educate and to "concentrate" that boiling volcano of discontent for the final battle and victory of his class, became his life ambition and aspiration.

Young James Anderson, just recently a deluded and blind enemy of the struggles and aspirations of his own class, by accepting and critically analyzing the facts which life itself presented to him, became a class conscious and militant worker, and one of those struggling few in West Virginia who sees in the far distance a New Dawn—the Red Redeemer of all the suffered and oppressed.

If passing through West Virginia alongside the Kanawha River and making occasional stops at the various so-called company mining camps one may find some of these struggling few, energetic and self sacrificing Americans, in almost every camp.

Not everything is bad that comes from West Virginia. The near future will prove it.

May, 1927, Charleston, W. Va.

SYDNEY, Australia.—At a trades union congress, held at Sydney during the last week of February, the present trouble in China was discussed. It was ordered that fraternal greetings be sent to the Chinese Nationalist party, and the hope expressed that the advancing Nationalist armies on Shanghai meet with success, and that out of the present trouble there would arise the great eastern Soviet of Chinese workers.

It was decided to send a delegation of trade union representatives to attend the T. U. Congress at Canton (China) in May, and that the delegates sent to Canton then visit Soviet Russia to observe conditions there and report back to the Australian working class.

Congress also carried the following resolution: "That this T. U. Congress affirms its solidarity with the workers of the world. We recognise the awakening of the revolutionary spirit of the Eastern workers and the importance of united working class action to prevent the threatening blood-bath in the Pacific."

SOUTHERN FARMERS RUINED

During the last few weeks due to heavy rainfalls the banks of the Mississippi River overflowed, flooding more than one fifth of the area of the state of Louisiana. More than 750,000 country people were forced to leave their homes and live in tents to save their lives. Most of them lost everything they had. Over 400 of them were drowned.

Whose Fault?

Whose fault is it? Who is to blame? Why didn't the American government control the Mississippi River as other governments control their rivers. Is it because they don't care what happens to poor farmers? We think so. .

What Now?

And what now? Are they helping these farmers to start all over again? No, they are not. Many thousands of dollars are given to build battleships and aeroplanes to kill the workers of other countries, but there's not a cent for the poor ruined farmers of the south. Instead, Coolidge has appointed Herbert Hoover as the Master of the Flood Funds. Herbert Hoover is a capitalist, a friend of the bosses and not the workers. He will NOT give money, but lend it, mortgaging the already mortgaged farmers of the south.

SOME MORE BUNK TAUGHT

Dear Comrades: I go to the Everittstown school and our teacher's name is Mrs. Thorp. She is a very religious woman. Friday she said, "The brains we have is a wonderful thing that God gave us." Then she said that if we didn't use our brains, God would take away even what we had. This shows what religious bunk our teacher teaches us.

THE CRUEL BOSSES

By HELEN DOHANYOS.

The bosses are so cruel to the poor workingmen that they even punish the worker when he is innocent. They make the workers do all the work, while they smoke their cigars in their offices and have many servants at home. And the poor workers don't have enough money for food not to talk of spending it on cigars and things like that. The bosses are punishing us now and laughing at us, but the day will come when we'll punish them and laugh at them. And we'll ask them why they feel when someone laughs in their faces. Then the workers will be the happy men and there will be no more bosses!

JUST LIKE A BOSS

By CAROLINE SOMOGYI.

Worker to a friend who is a Boss: "What are you thinking of?"

Boss who loves money: "I am thinking how I can make the workers slave more hours and for less money so I can have more profit. What are you thinking of?"

Worker, sad-hearted: "I am thinking how I could get a little bit more wages so that I could have enough to support my family so they should not starve!"

BUNKHOUSE FABLES

By L. Laukkonen

The above picture shows a big fat capitalist trying to bribe a Pioneer. Swell chance! This is a bunkhouse fable because the capitalist knows better than to ask a Pioneer to help him. He goes to the Boy Scouts when he needs help.

RICH AND POOR

By GEORGE YAKIM—Akron Pioneer Group.

One night Bill, my friend, came home from the school crying. When his father, a worker in the Goodyear rubber shop, asked him, he said that the teacher whipped him. Why? Because Bill dared to complain for a low mark he received for the same work for which another fellow, a rich boy, got a good mark. Yes, the teacher gives "A"-s and "B"-s for the rich kids' work and "F"-s and even "F"-s for the poor ones. Yes, it also happens that some kids don't know their lessons. Then one of our boys was asked why does he not study. He said that his father cannot afford to buy all the books. "Well, the teacher said, go to work, and then you'll have the money to buy the books." She said the same thing to a boy who was hungry after leaving home without breakfast. She said to the boy after punishing him that "you can work in the rubber shop." The boy said that he would kill himself in the shop, although he would be glad to go to work. When the boy got home, he asked his father whether he got any money. "No, his father said, and I won't have for a long time." Then he told to Bill that he was fired from the shop.

There are many other differences between rich and poor. The workers' children are the poor ones, the bosses' children are the rich.

Of course, we workers' children do not want to live all the time the way we do now. Neither do we want to be fired from the shops when we grow up.

We shall organize and build up a world where there is no hunger, where every worker's child will be happy, where the workers will decide what they shall get.

Join the Young Pioneers of America. This is the organization of the children of the workers. The Pioneers are ALWAYS READY to fight for the happiness of all the children. JOIN!

From FAIRY TALES FOR WORKERS' CHILDREN

The bland man became red with anger and his eyes sparkled. This made the dog happy. "He is really a good man," thot he, "for only good people are angered by the sufferings of other people." When he was thru speaking, the man said, "Bring your little friend here quickly. My home has rested enough. We will ride off immediately so that no one can capture Benjamin."

How happy the little grey dog was! In spite of his weariness, he danced with joy, wagging his tail, and started toward the bushes where Benjamin was hidden. Then he saw something dreadful. A man came over the meadow with a dog, which ran straight towards the bushes. The grey dog howled with fright. The bland man looked up, jumped forward and called to the dog, "Keep the man back just a moment, and all will be well." At that the dog ran toward the man. The man had reached the bush, with one bound the dog leaped at his throat, bit hard, did not loosen his hold in spite of cuts and blows.

In the meantime the northerner had taken little Benjamin in his arms, ran hastily toward the wagon, jumped in, and called to the dog. "Follow us, we will wait for you in a safe place." Then he cracked his whip, started on the road, the brown horse galloped ahead for it knew everything that was going on.

The grey dog still gripped the man's throat, thinking every moment that if he could only finish the man, it would be of advantage to the good man and little boy, and would save his friend. But the man, tired of wrestling, took a large knife from his pocket and plunged it deep into the breast of the faithful dog. The dog whimpered piteously and fell heavily on the ground. His clouded eyes still saw, far off in the distance, a tiny spot that kept growing smaller and smaller; that was the wagon which was carrying little Benajmin to freedom.

Great joy filled the dog's heart. He wagged his bushy tail once more. Then he died.

The bland man and little Benjamin waited a long time in vain for the grey dog. Benjamin wept bitterly, and his new friend comforted him: "The brave dog will come running back. All is well with him."

But the Benjamin was safe, he was always and when he thought of his friend. But he did not know that the little grey dog had died for him, paying his debt of gratitude to Benjamin with his life.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THERE are labor fakers in all capitalist countries but in no other country in the world could one of this fraternity afford to openly ally himself with the stoolpigeons of the capitalist system and get away with it. It is true that in England, Havelock Wilson, head of the seamens' union is an accomplished fink but even the British trade union bureaucracy are forced to hold their noses when the name of this odoriferous gentleman is mentioned. In the United States the labor stoolpigeon—provided he works on a salary basis and not on commission—is accorded the respect that prosperity usually carries in its train.

THE particular faker that I am referring to just now is Matthew Woll, president of the Photo Engravers' Union, a vice president of the American Federation of Labor, head of the insurance company founded by the A. F of L. and acting president of the National Civic Federation, an open shop patriotic aggregation of capitalists and flunkeys from the higher circles of the trade union bureaucracy. Mr. Woll has made himself notorious among intelligent workers by his willingness to scab on the underpaid stoolpigeons who stay up late at night writing the illegible reports of their day's work to their employers.

OWING to the amount of space used up by the capitalist press these days in interpreting the young lad Lindbergh to their readers it is somewhat difficult for a cheap skate like Woll to make the first page. But beggars cannot be choosers. Even a position next to the "money to loan" advertisements is preferable to no space at all. So in the New York Times of Monday, May 30, we find Woll in a corner on page five demanding that the United States government condnct an investigation of Soviet activities in the United States with a view to deporting the Russian trade officials now operating in this country.

WHAT Mr. Woll is chiefly concerned with is his own personal interests. This parasite has lived on the American workingclass since he was old enough to realize that a fellow with a glib tongue, an elastic conscience could get along working the workers and gulling them with the idea that their best interest would be served by being loyal to their masters and paying toll to some legitimate grafter who played the role of middleman.

SO long as the workers parked their brains and allowed a few frauds to do their thinking for them fellows like Woll were safe. Their graft was secure. But when the radicals, not only told the workers that they must do their own thinking but attempted to organize them so that they would be prepared to secure for themselves the maximum benefit from the product of their labor, Woll and his tribe of leeches became panic stricken and had to resort to the government and its policemen to help them retain their seats on the backs of the workers.

WOLL'S patriotism is as sensative as his pocket book. His kind, sold the national domain to the oil magnates and almost got away with it. They love this country because it can stand a lot of grafting. It is rich. But would they die for it? Yes—by accident. They hate the radicals because they know that sooner or later the workers will be obliged to listen to what the radicals have to say and to follow their advice. This will be the day of doom for gentlemen of the Woll type.

THERE is no essential difference between the part played by Matthew Woll and his kind in the American class struggle and the part played by the Hindoo princes in India. England's policy—and the policy of all imperialist powers is similar circumstances—has been to divide the conquered. England picked on the nobility and put them on her payroll—the money being extracted from the hell of the conquered. The noble hirelings became the native overseers and slavedrivers for the conquered.

IN the labor movement the capitalists first fought the labor leaders and then bought them. Sometimes there is no direct transfer of cash. Indeed it would have to be credited to the originality of the capitalists if they were unable to devise methods that would not leave footprints on the sands in such delicate bartering. While the original crop of labor leaders were young and incorruptible the capitalists put them in cold and damp cells. When their political

ANTI-IMPERIALIST HOLIDAY IN CHINA

Col. Stimson May Get a New Soft Berth For Hiz Job on the Nicaraguans

MEXICO CITY, May 30.—Probably for his indiscretion in permitting the nature of U. S. state departments to become known, Ambassador Sheffield will soon, it is reported, be relieved of his job. Letters from Secretary Kellogg, ordering him to start a revolt in Mexico and get President Calles out, were taken from his office and given to Calles.

Sheffield refused either to deny or affirm the report but let it be known that he is "in good health."

Col. Henry L. Stimson is being urged for the post as a reward for his good services in bringing about "peace" in Nicaragua—by ordering the forcible disarming of soldiers in the Liberal army and by threatening attacks by U. S. marines if they offered resistance.

BRITISH WAR ON WORLD WORKERS ASSERTS PRAVDA

Rupture Hides Di-Hard Defeat in China

(Special To Daily Worker.)

MOSCOW, May 30.—The Pravda points out that Chamberlain's note as well as his whole foreign policy is directed not only against the Soviet Union but is a challenge to all of the toiling masses of the world. Chamberlain, the Pravda says, is preparing a war against the Soviet Government.

The Tory Government is not only employing against the working class of its own country methods of violence, but what is no less dangerous it is systematically innoculating the masses with chauvinist propaganda and with pacifist illusions.

The most valuable service to capitalism is rendered in this respect by the international social democracy. The untiring exposure of pacifist illusions is the first premise in the effective organization of toilers against war and in support of the Soviet Union.

Workers and peasants of the world must clearly realize that war is energetically being prepared and the prattle about peace is an unpremeditated falsehood. The capitalists are gaining conviction that their stake in bourgeois regeneration is being threatened by the Soviet Union from without and the powerful growth of socialist elements from within. Therefrom follow their stake in the class war.

World reaction will meet with the resistance by the world proletariat.

USSR Note to Britisb.

MOSCOW, May 30.—The Soviet Union has long known that the British Conservative Government was preparing for a ruptnre, said Maxim Litvinoff, acting Commissar of Foreign Affairs in a note handed to the British Charge yesterday.

The cause of the rupture, the note said, is the defeat of British imperialist policy in China and an attempt to mask that defeat by an attack on the Soviet Union.

British Tories Rush Battleships to Egypt To Crush Independence

LONDON, May 30.—The die-hard Government has ordered three battleships from Malta to Egypt to crush the wide-spread protest against British domination. A crisis is reported to have arisen in Egypt over the powers of the Sirdar (the British Commander-in-Chief of the Egyptian Army).

A committee of the Egyptian Parliament has recommended that the Sirdar be deprived of his powers, which have been employed to further the interests of the British imperialists at the expense of Egypt.

There is widespread unrest in Egypt against unofficial British rule and anti-British demonstrations it is reported, are being held throout the country.

Do Not Permit the Enemies of Labor to Gloat Over the Death of the Daily Worker

To All Comrades and Sympathizers:

In spite of the heavy blows that have been delivered against us we still publish The DAILY WORKER. But the crisis is not yet overcome. We want to be perfectly frank with our readers about our position. We still face the future with misgivings. We do not know what tomorrow will bring forth. Although many comrades and supporters have responded to our appeals we are still far short of the amount necessary to assure our publication even for one week.

Comrades Dunne and Miller are still in jail and even their jailers carry on the persecution started by the three judges who refused them bail. Visitors who tried to bring them the little things that prisoners need in the filthy jails of capitalism were denied admission and the jailers would not permit even food to be sent to them. Visitors were told that on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays no one could visit or send provisions to prisoners.

Next Friday they will again be taken into court to find out how long they will have to serve because of their services to the paper and to the revolutionary movement.

Comrades, no one can deny that the decision of the three judges was a class decision. No member of the ruling class is ever sent to prison to await sentence because of a misdemeanor—a small crime. But our comrades were thrown into jail and bail denied them because the powers that prey knew The DAILY WORKER was having a hard struggle to exist and they hoped by this action to silence us so that nowhere in the United States would there appear a daily paper in the English language that fights the battles of the workers.

Comrades, do not let the conspirators succeed in their drive to kill your paper. Do not let a day go by that you do not get someone to contribute to our emergency fund in order that we may keep alive and get a chance to prepare for the future by overcoming our financial difficulties.

You have acted thus far and we are still alive, but you must stay on the job. Our fate is in your hands.

MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE, DAILY WORKER.

BOSTON FURRIERS WATCH SCHLISSEL EXPOSE HIMSELF

Right Wingers Justify Use of Gangsters

BOSTON, May 30.—Winick and H. Schlissel, self-appointed leaders of the Furriers International, gave an exhibition of themselves before the members of local 30, Boston furriers the impression they made was the opposite intended.

The Boston furriers are very much aroused at the kind of leaders the International wants to impose. Local 30 has its own troubles here, For months the local officialdom did not call any meeting. They removed the executive board and the treasurer and they conducted the local through the dictatorship of the chairman, the business agent and self-appointed committees.

The membership expected at this meeting to ask the reasons for it and also demand that the financial committee be allowed to give a report and to restore to the membership the right to speak at meetings and not being molested by gangsters.

These questions were not allowed to be discussed. Winick and Schlissel came to the meeting accompanied by strong arm men who tried first to prevent in good standing members from entering the hall and tried to put some members out of the hall. They did not succeed due to the protest of the membership. Winick openly stated that he would do his utmost to put Ben Gold behind the bars. Schlissel complained that he and his associates are being called names and accused of acts which they are not guilty of. When questioned about Winick's statement, Schlissel said that he does not share his opinions but justified the presence of gangsters as a means of protection for himself.

The Boston furriers after listening to these two gentlemen were more than ever determined to fight for the right of the membership to select their own leaders.

Woll Hot for Action by Department of Justice Against Radicals Here

Matthew Woll, vice-president of the A. F. of L., when he isn't occupied with his duties as acting president of the open-shop National Civic Federation, has gone into the red-halting business in a serious way.

During a holiday lull in the attack against the left wing in the labor movement, Woll after giving his enthusiastic approval to the raids on Arcos, Ltd., by Scotland Yard, calls for an "investigation" of Communist organizations in the United States.

Woll pointed out that the department of justice and the intelligence bureau of the war department has made no investigation during the past three years, and asks, "Are we as Americans helpless in such a situation?"

MUSSOLINI HANDS PRISON TERMS TO 10 C. P. EDITORS

ROME, May 14. (By mail.)—A few days ago a process took place in Rome before the Exceptional Court against a group of Communist journalists, one-time editors of the "Unita" ("Unity") and the "Stato Operaio" ("The Workers State"), for conspiracy and incitement to class hatred through the press.

The process dealt with the activity of the accused up to September, 1926, when they were arrested and handed over to the civil authorities. The occasion of the arrests was the distribution of a leaflet in the streets of Rome dealing with the appointment of the Italian Crown Prince as a Senator. The police accused the members of the editorial staff of the "Unita" in Rome of having prepared the leaflet in question and of having formed an insurrectionary association. The files of the process produced no proof whatever for the guilt of the accused who were performing a perfectly legal activity, i. e. the correspondence service of a newspaper which is published in accordance with all the legal requirements.

Arrest Editors.

After having raided the offices of the "Unita" in Rome under orders from higher up, the police charged ten Communists, despite the fact that there was no material against them whatever. The ten are: Ottavio Pastore, the parliamentary editor of the "Unita"; Giuseppe di Vittorio, one-time member of parliament and editor

PITTSBURGH COAL RATE CUT MINOR FACTOR FOR U.M.W.

Progressives Hold West Virginia Essential

PITTSBURGH, May 30.—Influence of the cut in freight rates on soft coal from western Pennsylvania to the lakes on the miners' strike was variously estimated yesterday by operators and miners.

C. E. Lesher, vice-president of the anti-union Pittsburgh Coal Co. declared that the reduction of 20 cents a ton, while improving the operators' position, would not lead to an agreement with the union. The Pittsburgh field coal owners have complained long and loud that the freight rate structure favored West Virginia against the union districts of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio.

The reactionary officials of the Miners' Union, led by Philip Murray, international vice-president, have long placed reliance on the readjustment of the freight rate basis by the Interstate Commerce Commission as a means of preserving the union.

The cut of only 20 cents a ton, the operators held, would not affect the strike or the miners, except in stimulating Pittsburgh miners to somewhat higher production.

Progressive leaders point out however, that the failure of the union to keep northern West Virginia organized, and to unionize the southern part is the main reason for the advancing inroads of the open-shop in the Pittsburgh field, a close competitor with West Virginia. The freight rate structure is incidental to the main factor of non-unionism in West Virginia in affecting the condition of the union in the 2Pittsburgh field, they declare.

Judge Kerr, Fishwick Machine Legal Shark, Dies at Springfield, Ill.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 30. —A. W. Kerr, chief counsel for the United Mine Workers of America, died here today.

Judge Kerr was a staunch adherent of the Fishwick machine in District No. 12 (Illinois) of the U. M. W. of A. He headed the corps of assistant prosecutors which the reactionary Farrington-Fiswick group sent to assist the state in the frameup of the Ziegler miners, militant union men convicted of murder as a result of a fight in a union hall with a group of reactionaries, during which members of the K. K. K. shot progressives, and each other.

HOOVER DEAF TO NEGRO SLAVERY FACTS IN FLOOD

Washington Engineers Feel Levees Unpopular

WASHINGTON, May 30.—As the flood gradually subsides in the Mississippi Valley, the flood of intrigue and financial politics increases in Washington. Secretary Hoover has announced that he is prepared to place before the president the final outline of his program of "credit organizations" to properly take advantage of the business opportunities afforded by the ruin of vast acreages of cotton and sugar cane. The planters will have to borrow money to re-establish themselves, and put in the next crop, and this means that huge quantities of capital can be invested by bankers wise enough to get on the inside. That there is good profit for those managing the "credit corporations" goes without saying.

Negro Slavery.

All government agencies from the Department of the Interior and the Department of Commerce on down decry and fear the revelations last week by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, that the relief machinery, under Hoover's direct control, has vigorously repressed any attempt by the Negro peons to escape from their bondage.

The N.A.A.C.P. points in a public press release to numerous cases in which Negroes who have fled for refuge to the levees, or have been simply conscripted by relief officers and put to work at the point of a gun, have been held prisoners until claimed by their masters and taken

PEKING PROTESTS NEW INVASION BY JAPANESE TROOPS

Big Shanghai Meeting Denounce Shootings

PEKING, May 30.—The Peking government today was preparing to lodge a protest with the foreign government against the dispatch of 2,000 Japanese troops from Manchuria to the Shantung area.

The American Legation denied reports that it was intended to send United States marines into the Peking and Tientsin area immedately, although the vist of General Smedley Butler to Peking indicates that United States marines may be rushed to Peking and Tientsin in the very near future in preparation for the Nationalist drive north.

Observers declare that Japanese bid for Chiang Kai-shek has led Chang Tso-lin, who has hitherto enjoyed Japanese support, to send the protest.

Anti-Imperialist Protest.

SHANGHAI, May 30.—The series of anti-British and anti-Japanese mass-meetings scheduled for today, which had alarmed the authorities of the international settlement and French concession who feared anti-imperialist demonstrations, passed off quietly without serious disorders. The mass meetings, vigorously anti-British and anti-Japanese, were held in the Chinese city, and the crowds made no attempt to enter the concessions. Such Chinese as did enter the settlements were searched by police.

The demonstrations were held to commemorate the murder of peaceful unarmed students by British police on May 30, 1925. The shooting took place ten seconds after police inspector had ordered the students to disperse. His command was given in English which few of the demonstrators understood.

Hundreds of thousands of workers struck in protest against the brutal murder of the marching of the boys and girls. A nation-wide boycott against English goods was also instituted as a result of the massacre.

No news has yet been received of the huge demonstrations which are scheduled to be held in Hankow and the other Wuhan cities.

HERRICK ATTACKS USSR; HAS WAR NOTE IN SPEECH

Ambassador to France Follows British Lead

PARIS, May 30.—Using a Memorial Day speech as a pretext, Ambassador Myron T. Herrick launched into a vicious attack on the Soviet Union this morning, calling upn "the Americans who fought a seven years' war against a mighty empire" not to sit by "while a band of men who have made themselves the masters of a kindly and talented race, attempt with fiendish ingenuity to inject a fatal poison into our ethisens and to undermine the institutions which have brought comfort and happiness to our continent."

Hysterically referring to Bolshevism as a "scourge," "a disease," "a poison," a "sinister movement," "malidious menace," "a tyrannical and oppressive despotism," Ambassador Herrick praised the men who died in the Revolutionary War (forgetting that they were "the scourge" etc., of their day.)

Ambassador Herrick's speech coming on the heels of the British abrogation of diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union is regarded as the indication of an unofficial war on the part of all imperialist nations against the Soviet Union.

...ETER FRAUDS EXPOSED

This series of ten articles, of which this is the seventh, deals with the exploitation of the industrial insurance agent and methods to combat the evils of weekly payment life insurance. This series is the result of numerous requests to publicize the details of the outside and fraud to which the agent is subject in common with the policyholder.

Article VII.

By CHARLES YALE HARRISON.

When the "Big Four" swindling gang—they play no favorites. The defrauded dollar of an agent is just as sweet as the swindled dollar taken from a policyholder.

The insurance trust makes tens of millions through overcharging and millions on an inflated policies. It also makes tens of millions on "lapse charges" charged to underpaid field workers. Everyone loses except the polished gentlemen who direct the looting.

Ghastly Reports.

And now comes the 1926 annual report of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company with its figures running into billions of dollars to lend hand to the mulcted customer and the oppressed and goaded agent.

It is a base fact that half of the agents of these billion dollar corporations are in the hands of loan sharks. Such philanthropic institutions as the Morris Plan and other "industrial" bankers have thousands of "industrial" agents on their books. These "banking" organizations operate in such a manner that when one becomes a customer one remains a customer. "Industrial" banking for "industrial" agents!

"Of the People."

Let the agent whose pay is mortgaged to these loan leeches take pride in his company's annual report. It is a thing to be proud of.

The legend at the head of the report reads, "The Company of the People, by the People, for the People." That has a familiar ring. I think I have heard vote-seeking politicians use that same shibboleth before, fat, oily corporation-serving Big Business politicians who have the dollar ax to grind. "People" indeed.

"From the People."

Last year the "Big Four" made 50 million dollars on lapsed policies. This enormous sum of money went directly into the pockets of the companies who indulge in such maudlin bluffs as "the company of the people" and similar tripe.

Last year the "Big Four" stole 32 million dollars from the pockets of their agents in "lapse charges." The legend should read, "From the People."

Lapse Rate Still High.

The report reads: "Paid for life insurance issued, increased and revived in 1926, $3,011,775,180." But the report fails to mention the important fact that of this amount only $1,401,734,835 of it remained in force. That more than half of the insurance "issued, increased and revived" lapsed before the year was out. Only of the amount thus terminated only 1 per cent was paid as matured endowment and less than 9 per cent was paid as death claims. The balance of terminations represented a loss in one form or another to the millions of policyholders who could not keep the pace with the inhuman conditions imposed upon them by the "Big Four."

Same Directors.

The report listed the companies' assets, but on the report no words appear to show that half of these assets are accumulated through forfeitures made on lapsed policies and through "lapse charges" taken from the agent's payroll.

Take the list of newly elected directors. The same old gang. Schwab, Fisher, Olphenhoyne, Houghton, Wigrin Noyes, et al. The Metropolitan is a "mutual" company—of, by and for the people. Scan the list of Wall Street directors and see if you see any of the "people" present, see if there is a name thereon who takes an interest in the rights of the policyholders or the agents.

"Unite."

As long as the existing gang sit in control of this billion dollar machine the fraud which is being perpetuated on policyholder and agent alike will continue.

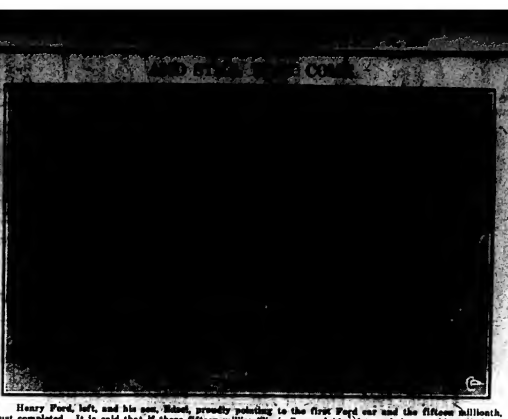
The machinery exists for the taking over of these corporations by those who really contribute to their greatness.

The interests of Schwab & Co. are diametrically opposed to those of the customers and workers of the "Big Four."

The first duty of the agent is to ally himself with the defrauded policyholder. They are in the same boat. The directors and officials of the insurance trust fleece the agent with the same lack of compunction as is used in robbing the policyholder.

Propaganda Machine.

Every week 60,000 "Big Four" agents walk into 10 millions homes of industrial policyholders. In those homes the agent is the insurance company. He can show these defrauded policyholders that it is in their interests to elect and vote for representatives who will guard their insurance interests on the directorates of these companies.



Good Example.

In England the 70,000 industrial field workers are organized into two powerful trade unions which jealously guard the rights not only of the worker, but the policyholder. Arrests

...sit on the boards of directors and aid in the administration of these strong English companies.

The lot of the insurance field worker in America will become endurable when he wakes up and exhibits the same initiative exhibited by his English brother.

Hands across the sea means many things.

Henry Ford, left, and his son, Edsel, proudly pointing to the first Ford car and the fifteen millionth, just completed. It is said that if these fifteen million "lizzies" were laid end to end they would reach from Detroit all the way around the world and back to the Two Billion Dollar offer which Ford, Sr., refused from New York bankers.

Coolidge Decries Jane As Time for Fake Naval Reduction Dispatches

GENEVA, May 30.—The United States legation at Berne today advised the League of Nations secretariat here by letter that the Three-Power Naval Conference will be convoked at Geneva in June.

The Hoover network of trade delegations and the regular embassy staffs in Europe have been actively threatening the debtor nations with dire punishment unless they send their representatives, and Italy and France, who almost contemptuously rejected what they consider a British-American plot against them are now ready to send at least "observers."

Trimmer Elected as Printers' President For Another Term

Leon Rouse, 12-year czar of Big Six, the newspaper local of the Typographical Union here, has been re-elected president. By playing to both the Progressive and Wahnetа (reactionary administration) forces, Rouse has fastened his hold on the New York Printers Union, the largest in the country with 10,000 members.

Rouse got 4,650 votes to 2,470 for D'Arcy Doc Milliken, the Progressive candidate and 1,277 for William Powers, the "black flag" reactionary.

Crusader Wheeler Yelps On Trail of Wet Hopes

WASHINGTON, May 30.—An attack upon the presidential ambitions of Governor Al Smith of New York was made today before the general assembly of the United Presbyterian Church by Wayne P. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League.

"The issue at the next election will not be whether a Protestant or a Catholic is to be elected president but whether the forces of corruptionists and nullificationists can place a liquor president in the White House," Wheeler said.

"The church made prohibition possible. It must now recall to the fight those members who demobilized themselves too soon. It must revive its teachings on the evils of alcohol."

There's Law Against Poison Gin.

CHICAGO, May 30.—Matt McAnany, drugstore proprietor and three of his clerks, were booked today on charges of murder, conspiracy to murder and violation of the Prohibition Act, in connection with the death of Asa John Dixon Harper, 21 year old University of Chicago student, by poisoned gin.

back to their regular plantation slavery. Many of them had hoped to escape during the confusion of the flood, but the relief machinery was too much for them.

Hoover refuses to be bothered by any complaints from the negroes or any of their friends.

Levees System Attacked.

Unwelcome news arrives at this capital, in which all interested parties are firmly convinced that any change from the system of levees which has this year proved so disastrous, will interfere with the huge graft of private contractors and water power companies. These tidings of danger come from both ends of the flooded valley, and is to the effect that the New Orleans business interests, who can not be entirely disregarded, are sick and tired of the levee fraud, and want their back country protected by reservoirs and spillways, as rivers abroad are handled. Also, some time this week in Chicago, there will be a hastily called meeting of experts, presided over by Mayor Thompson, which will discuss flood prevention and in which it is known there will be advocates of the reservoir system. The army's engineer corps has ordered a survey of the whole valley, in order to gather evidence for the levee propagandists.

Coolidge Gives Subsidy To Shipbuilding Trust Thru Juggling of Bids

WASHINGTON, May 30 (FP).—How private shipbuilding yards on the Atlantic coast are given a government subsidy in fact, without legal warrant for any subsidy, is disclosed in connection with the award of contracts for construction of four new cruisers to private yards in this territory.

Navy yards at Vallejo, Calif., and Bremerton, Wash., each secured the contract to build one cruiser when they submitted bids which were nearly $2,000,000 below the average price at which contracts were let to private yards in the east. The navy yards on the Atlantic coast submitted estimates of cost which were low, but they failed to submit formal competitive bids. When reasons were sought for the failure of the commandants of these eastern navy yards to submit bids, the lint was given that the Coolidge administration and Secretary Wilbur did not want to drive the private yards into bankruptcy through lack of orders. Business was slack and if the government did not come to their aid their organizations might have to be scrapped.

The result was the award of construction of four cruisers at a subsidized price to the private yards, and the leaving of the eastern navy yards to carry an excessive overhead charge on what repair work they are permitted to handle. Trade union protests were not heeded.

Mussolini Hands Prison Terms to Ten Editors of the "Unita"; Romano Cocchi, editor of the "Unita"; Felice Platone, editor of the "Unita" and of the "Stato Operaio"; Edmondo Peluso, correspondent of the "Pravda" and editor of the "Unita"; Vincenzo Baccalà, manager of the "Unita" offices in Rome; Bruno Ricci, employee of the publishing house SEUM; Filippo D'Agostino, the manager of the same publishing house and of the "Stato Operaio"; Giovanni Fornari, technical student, and Salvatore Celona, employee of a private firm.

The ten accused were arrested on the 20th of September. The legal authorities in Rome, who were being urged by the political authorities and who had no material against the accused, passed them on to the Milan courts by declaring that the case was in connection with a process taking place in Milan against Terracini, Bibolotti and others. The legal authorities in Milan did not know what to do with the ten accused, so they washed their hands of the whole matter and sent the accused back to the prison in Rome, declaring themselves not competent in the affair. Finally the Court of Appeal in Rome was compelled to give a verdict in the matter, which it did, acquitting the accused on the charge of conspiracy, but handing them over to the court for deilnquencies in connection with the press laws. After eight months of arrest for enquiries, the accused were released.

Long Sentences.

But after the attempt of November 1926, the process was handed over to the exceptional court which declared the previous verdict of the Court of Appeal to be null and void and found the prisoners guilty of conspiracy and sentenced them as follows: D'Agostino received 4 years hard labor and 3 years under special surveillance; Fornari received 7 years and 9 months hard labor and a fine of 1,500 Lire; Pastore, Di Vittorio, Platone, Cocci, Peluso and Baccalà each received 12 years hard labor.

Once Again Communists have been sentenced to over a hundred years hard labor. In the process against the Communists of Toscana the court passed sentences amounting to over 200 years hard labor.

The $100,000 Roll Call Drive.

During the Bazaar the $100,000 Drive was nearly forgotten. This is a reminder that many hundreds of workers have not forgotten and are sending in their dollars daily. There is still time and place for every sympathizer with the cause of the imprisoned cloakmakers and furriers to add his name to the list. Send your dollar to the Joint Defense and Relief Committee, 41 Union Square, Room 714, New York City.

Pennsylvania Labor Endorses Negro As Faithful to Union

PHILADELPHIA, May 30. — The Pennsylvania Federation of Labor in convention recently adopted a resolution against barring the Negro from certain unions. The resolution lauded the colored worker as a loyal union man when he is given the opportunity.

Continuing, the resolution read in part, "If we bar the Negro from our unions, he will work as a non-union man, for he must make a living, and the employers are hiring him."

Mexican Miners Strike When 36 Discharged

MEXICO CITY, May 30.—Work was suspended today in the Real Del Monte mines near Pachuca, when all the miners went on strike. The men said they struck because of the discharge of 36 laborers; but the mine management said the walkout was the result of a refusal to meet the miners' demand for higher wages.

Sinclair Writes Letter Of Sarcasm to Governor About Whitney Sentence

LOS ANGELES, Cal., May 30.—Upon Sinclair has written the governor of California a letter full of sharp irony over his purported dilemma about the Whitney case. Many women's clubs and liberal organizations have protested against the actual inflection upon one of the most popular women in the state, of the sentence of "from one to fourteen years in the penitentiary" which the Supreme Court of the United States has decreed she must suffer because of conviction under the iniquitous criminal syndicalism law of California. Anita Whitney was convicted like all the other victims of that law, on frame-up evidence of professional labor spies and detectives.

Sinclair's letter is as follows:

Opponent in Election.

Governor C. C. Young, Sacramento, California.

My Dear Governor Young:—As one of your opponents in the recent election, I am sure you will welcome my advice upon the conduct of your office, and so I write to add my name to the list of law-abiding and patriotic citizens who are asking you to allow Anita Whitney to go to jail. It seems to me a most dangerous thing to enforce a law against the poor and fail to enforce it against the rich, and if you pardon Anita Whitney, how can you fail to respond to her challenge, and let out the workingmen who are now in jail for the same offense? It seems to me this is a time, if ever, to prove that justice is blind, and shut our eyes and go straight ahead, regardless of any turns in the road.

Law Nearly Dead.

Moreover, what is the good of having a law, unless we get some use out of it? At present this criminal syndicalism law is practically a dead letter, and forgotten. It isn't frightening the "reds," they are going right on doing what they were doing before the law was passed. But if Anita Whitney goes to San Quentin, then everybody will be set to talking about the law, and we will all be reminded that we have it, and some one may obey it.

Then too, California needs advertising, and this is a way to make people talk about us. There are ten or twenty million organized workers all over the world who will begin to repeat the formula, "California, land of Orange-Groves and Jails." It is a principle, explained in all schools of advertising, that "every knock is a boost." Everybody who hears the slogan will remember the orange groves and forget the jails—just as our own people do.

She Might Write.

As a literary man, I am naturally led to reflect, what an interesting book Anita Whitney will be able to write after she has served her term. One of the great books of all time might come out of that experience. And it seems to me it will be a tragedy not to let it be written. Many great books have had such an origin—Oscar Wilde's "Ballad of Reading Gaol," and Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and Tollar's "Massemensch," and Ralph Chaplin's "Bars and Shadows."

Also, if you should ever decide to clean up those nests of cruelty and graft, our state prisons, think what a help it will be to you to have Anita Whitney telling all the world about them from inside knowledge! As you no doubt remember, suffrage was brought to the women of the United States by those who went to jail in our national capital. Who can tell what moral and political earthquake might come from the fact that one of the gentlest and finest ladies of our state is shut up with common criminals and political prisoners whom nobody cares anything about?

Capt. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

LINDBERGH'S DAD OPPOSED MORGAN WAR HYSTERIA

Capitalist Press Now Suppresses Facts

(By a Staff Correspondent).

WASHINGTON, May 30. — The world is acclaiming Charles Lindbergh for his daring feat in flying from New York to Paris, but only a few years ago his father's name was anathema and the youth and his mother were very lonely and unhappy.

The father now dead had committed the great crime of being opposed to American entrance in the World War. He was a representative, representing a progressive district in Minnesota. Although elected as a republican he was a follower of the insurgent La Follette and in his years of service in Washington refused to play the game as it is done here. This was bad enough, but in 1917 when the holy Mr. Wilson began to force the United States into the European conflict, and the aviator's father attacked the government's policy he immediately brought down upon himself the fury of the war lords and munition magnates.

Denounced by Patriots.

It is a matter of record, to be found on the pages of the Congressional Record, that the father of this 25-year-old youth, while a member of congress, was assailed on the floor of the house as a "sinister and dangerous influence." The papers now frenziedly heralding the son, only a few years back bitterly berated the father denouncing him as a traitor and a spy.

Just before Wilson consummated the war deal the elder Lindbergh published a book detailing the deception, the criminal fraud, and corruption that had been perpetrated in foreing the country into the maelstrom. The volume was proscribed by the government and it was Lindbergh's position as a member of congress that alone saved him from prosecution.

Ran for Governor.

Embittered by the persecution and ferocious attacks upon him he returned to Minnesota and ran for governor on the then rapidly growing Non-Partisan League ticket. He was defeated and two years later opposed Secretary of State Kellogg who was then up for re-election as a United States senator. Kellogg on the strength of the war phobia won out, but the next time he went down before the candidate of the Farmer-Labor party.

The elder Lindbergh was a close friend of A. C. Townley, of North Dakota, who started the famous farmer revolt, the Non-Partisan League. He took an active part in organising the league in Minnesota and was preparing to re-enter politics when he died early in 1925.

Facts Now Suppressed.

These facts about the father's tragic experience have not been very carefully withheld by the press of the country. The DAILY WORKER'S correspondent knows for a fact that the correspondents of several large New York papers, among them The New York Times, prepared stories detailing these facts but their editors ordered the articles suppressed on the ground that "they were not desirable at this time."

ON SACCO CASE

Gloom Among Friends of Workers Grows

BOSTON, May 30.—A deep gloom is spreading among friends of workers this week, following the hopefulness of recent weeks.

With Governor Fuller fully launched on his secret investigation, with Defense Counsel William G. Thompson seriously perturbed over recent developments and with the growing conviction that enemies of Sacco and Vanzetti have succeeded in poisoning the governor's mind, defense controlled not only the defense committee's headquarters, but also friends of the condemned men in the Workers Party, International Labor Defense and advanced liberal circles.

Among visitors at the State House executive chambers have been several foes of Sacco and Vanzetti. They have been closeted with him for hours. The long tale of perjury, circumstantial evidence and downright falsehood which the state used to railroad two radicals to the electric chair is being reinforced by these determined enemies.

The heavy weight of conservative Boston business is also pressing against the governor, telling him that the sanctity of the courts must not be exposed as a sham by reversing the verdict in this case. Standing instinctively on class-determined grounds, the hoary-parched hitherers at the Union Club are letting it be known in social contacts and veiled utterances that the "two damned reds ought to hang anyway."

Irresponsible Probe.

And all the while figures slink in and out of the governor's office, unheralded and unnamed. What their business is, what they have told the governor, what raw tales of fanciful fabrication they have related, the attorneys for Sacco and Vanzetti can never know and can therefore never refute. But they are dripping poison slowly into the governor's mind. Whether he already feels that the chain of lies they have thrown around the two workers is heavy enough to drag them to the electric chair on July 10 is not known definitely, but there is a growing feeling that he is succumbing to these sinister forces. George Brantting, the Swedish attorney who will investigate the case for the labor movement of his home country, can't speak in Fanueil Hall, the "cradle of liberty." On the flimsy excuse that the hall is being repainted, the defense committee has been denied its use.

Instead a parade in which New England Scandinavians will take a leading role, is being planned through the city in honor of Branting next Sunday.

Life Sentence.

Two more jurors have been examined by the governor. One declared that he is in favor of commutation of sentence to life imprisonment. Many keen observers believe that this will be the "solution" of the governor.

Both Sacco and Vanzetti prefer death to life imprisonment, and Sacco has appealed repeatedly for the execution of the death penalty, as he is convinced that there is no justice in Massachusetts.

Former Governor William Sweet of Colorado visited Fuller yesterday and commended him for not appointing a public commission. Worcester business men, supporters of Judge Thayer, persecutor of the two men, likewise commended the governor.

The New York Nation sent in 417 more names on its petition for a commission.

Huge Day Demonstration Thru Inspiring Event

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.
(Special to The DAILY WORKER.)
MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., May 30.—(By mail.)—Only second to the struggle between the Red Army and the working masses of the Soviet Union at this time was one of the big tests passed in Moscow's May Day demonstration. Missing this test to fail in making an important part of the success of this occasion.

This fact, that was quite made apparent in all the May Day gatherings over the whole Soviet Union, is of special importance in these days of great threatening attacks on the Workers' Republic by the imperialist powers, finding expression to some extent in the imperialist war waged against the Chinese Revolution.

Nikolai Bucharin has just finished speaking on the Tribune of the Lenin Mausoleum. The six different Red Army bands, 500 pieces in all, have converged in the center of the Red Square. From 500 instruments comes the music of "The International," echoed back by the Kremlin Wall, a mighty volume of inspiring sound.

Aids to Red Army.

It is the signal for the starting of the Red Army parade. But upon the banners of these Red Army units there is inscribed the fact that the patron of this or that particular unit is some public body, factory, trade union, political organization or other body, that renders them material and cultural aid.

Similarly the different regiments assume the patronage of various villages, and in this manner cordial relations are established between the Red Army and the population at large, based on their mutual interests and any estrangement between the Army and the people is avoided.

Red Commanders.

So they marched. Here come the future generals. They are from the higher military academy where they undergo a course of three years' intensive training.—Red Commanders from the ranks of the proletariat.

The increasing number of these trustworthy "Red Commanders" has made possible the introduction of the system of the unitary command under which all the military, administrative and economic direction of each section of the Red Army is concentrated in the Commander. Political leaders have supplanted the political commissars. The plans for the future envisage the political and military direction being concentrated in the one personnel.

The various higher schools of military training all had their units. There was a unit from the aviation forces, including a hydroplane unit, a detachment from the chemical department, and from the famous chemical school of the Kremlin garrison.

There was an "International Legion," containing many Chinese soldiers, who were hailed everywhere as they passed.

Then a troop of railroad engineers and large sections of the "G. P. U." is their natty uniforms and well-colored caps, to show which branch of the service they are in. Thus the forces of the "G. P. U." that serve on the frontier border have green ribbons in their caps.

An inspiring sight is the big detachment of sailors who have come from Leningrad, where they are a part of the Baltic Red Fleet.

Interspersed everywhere thru the procession are the Red Army recruits of various classes.

The Red Cavalry.

Now a Red Cavalry Band wheels into position facing the Lenin Mausoleum and on the opposite side of the square, alongside the "G. U. M.", the State Universal Stores, a magnificent structure two blocks long, hosts of restless horses mounted by able riders, began to move around the Red Square. Pennants of many colors fluttered from long lances. Some of the troops had saddle cloths of pronounced hues, adding brilliancy to the scene.

The head of the column turns and passes before the Russian Historical State Museum at the north end of the Red Square. Then as the column turns parallel to the Kremlin Wall, the brisk canter turns into a wild dash. Simultaneously seventeen airplanes, spread in a broad and perfect fan, with motors roaring, appear suddenly over the Historical Museum, speeding over the Red Square from North to South. It was a sight to thrill, the plunging, dashing Red Cavalry splashing sparks on the pavement, the swiftly speeding Red Air Fleet overhead, that later broke into a single column and thundered about the Square, then winging its way back to the landing field.

Workers Donate Airplanes.

Some of those airplanes had been donated to the Soviet Power by the workers in various industries, intent on developing this arm of the defense of the Soviet Union.

Next came machine gun battalions. The guns are mounted on carriages, each drawn by four horses. Three of these carriages running abreast whirl past as in a Roman chariot race. There are multitudes of them. Then armored cars of various sizes, gradually growing larger; also various types of artillery also generally larger, accompanied in the skies by the appearance of three huge biplanes. Then Red Army trucks of various kinds.

600,000 in Red Army.

This is the display of the Red Army that now numbers approximately 600,000 in its ranks, that has grown from the "Red Guard" of the Russian workers which, organized by the Bolshevists during the Kerensky period in the course of 1917, fought the first battles of the Revolution, being the germ of the Red Army, organized in 1918, in the further development of the Civil War.

Training Fighting Youth.

Now come the youths of the factories and workshops in several solid regiments. They all wear black leather coats, the kind that are often worn by workers in America. That is their only uniform. But they all carry guns. Otherwise they are in their everyday clothes.

They are the youth who are receiving two years of preliminary training before they reach military age. This course is devoted chiefly to physical culture, but illiterates are taught to read and write, so that in the Red Army itself there are no illiterates.

This cultural activity is continued by means of courses of lectures, clubs and libraries. Thus the Red Army constitutes a tremendous educational apparatus; it gives to the large masses of peasant recruits their first acquaintance with modern culture and it turns out during the two years of service hundreds of thousands of cultural missionaries for the villages who, then as their political training have become supporters of the Soviet Power.

There were more regiments of students of chemistry. They were gas masks, presenting an interesting sight, both boys and girls.

Workers Riddle's Enemies.

Then came the workers' delegations. They poured into the Red Square from three directions: from the Tverskaya, from the Lubyanka and the Moscovya. They flowed across the Red Square in three huge currents. What multitudes of banners and battle flags! Caricatures, effigies and floats, in an endless stream, attacking the enemies of the workers the world over. The traitors in the Chinese revolution were the favorite theme. The British imperialist statesmen got considerable attention, the Dollar Statesmen of America not so much. Huge banners carried numerous slogans appropriate to the day. So the multitudes passed late into the day.

Here among the workers frequently marched units of the Red Army, shoulder to shoulder with the workers. There were many workers' delegations that carried arms, the workers' militia. Thus the idea of an armed working class was thoroly developed. Communists from foreign lands stood in the reviewing stands with tears in their eyes, tears of joy that at least in one land there was an armed proletariat, workers with rifles in their hands, prophecy of the day when labor in other lands would also seize power. Multitudes of Pioneers flowed past the Lenin Mausoleum with the rest, saluting the Soviet leaders on its Tribune, proclaiming "All ways Ready!" to all the world. That was the spirit of massed labor in Moscow's May Day Demonstration, 1927, "Always Ready!" to advance the cause of the Red Army of Labor.

Jerked into two parts when its mooring cable became entangled inside a rail as it began a flight from Brooks Field, San Antonio, Tex., to Scott Field, Ill., the U. S. Army dirigible "TC-10-243" is a complete wreck, although Major H. A. Strauss and his crew of five men escaped injury. Top photo shows the dirigible in the air. Below is the wreckage of the big ship at Brooks Field. The crew was caught beneath the gas bag when it fell, but all its members managed to scramble to safety before the 200,000 feet of helium gas was lost and the bag completely collapsed.

Admiral Uses Fake Documents to Smash Union in Philippines

MANILA, May. 30.—In order to smash a union of Philippine workers, to discredit the Filipino Nationalist movement, and to spread anti-Soviet and anti-Chinese propaganda, Rear Admiral Sumner E. Kittelle, Commandment of the Sixteenth Naval District, has issued a statement alleging that "certain radicals" were plotting to destroy the ammunition dump at Cavite.

Emissaries of the Soviet Union have been sent to Manila "to weaken the sovereignty of the United States," said Admiral Kittelle, forgetting that the independence movement in the Philippines is as old as the American occupation of the islands.

Fake Documents.

To support his case, Admiral Kittelle referred to the documents alleged to have been taken by Chang Tso-lin in his raids on the Soviet embassy compound in Peking. The documents it has been proved, were clumsy frauds perpetrated by Chang Tso-lin and the imperialist powers for the purpose of discrediting the Soviet Union and justifying intervention in China.

The immediate purpose of this anti-Soviet propaganda, observers declare, was the smashing of the union at the Cavite. Admiral Kittelle forced workers at Cavite to leave the union and to give "a personal pledge of loyalty to the American Government." Admiral Kittelle also notified workers that he would tolerate no opposition to Governor-General Wood, or sympathy for the Filipino Nationalist movement.

He urged workers to follow Aguinaldo, who has been a zealous supporter of the American dictatorship in the islands.

German Socialists Make Small Gains in Election

BERLIN, May 30.—Social-democrats were victorious over the nationalists in the elections of Mecklenburg State and the Danzig Free City elections. An additional seat in the legislature was won in Mecklenburg while in a Junker stronghold.

At the convention of the socialists now being held in Kiel, Otto Wels, head of the national committee repeated the willingness of his party to collaborate with the bourgeois groups in the government.

HAITIANS PROTEST SCHEME OF U. S. CAPITALISTS TO PUT THRU $5,000,000 IRRIGATION PROJECT

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Serious opposition is being made to the scheme of a group of Chicago and middle-western financiers to put through a $5,000,000 irrigation project in Haiti. This became known today when the New York "Nation" received cables of protest from several newspapers and a large number of organizations in the Caribbean republic.

The basis for the objections to the development of the irrigation plan is found in the treaty provisions which were railroaded through with the little country. Under these provisions the government of the United States places itself in a position of financial representative of capitalists who chose to make investments.

Capital "Protected"

One of the treaty provisions reads: "The government of the United States will by its good offices aid the Haitian government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, mineral and commercial resources and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis."

Danger to the People.

A still worse source of danger to the people of Haiti is found in another provision which declares that "the government of Haiti agrees not to surrender any of the territory of the republic by sale, lease or otherwise or jurisdiction over such territory to any foreign government or power, and not to enter into any treaty or contract with any foreign power or powers that will impair or tend to impair the independence of Haiti."

Seek Further Control.

Former congressman William A. Rodenberg, of Illinois, who is heavily interested in the present financial scheme for exploitation of Haiti said that the plan of his group "is no secret; it is strictly a business proposition."

He further declared that once the irrigation workers were in operation tropical fruits, sugar and various tropical products "could be produced to advantage."

Haiti is at present a "protectorate" of the United States. Beginning with the entrance of the National City Bank into Haiti the state department of the United States began a definite policy of interference on behalf of American capital. Beginning with the scheme of making small loans to the Haitian government by American banking concerns finally led to their obtaining mortgages on the railroads of the country and liens on national customs.

Thousands Killed By U. S. Marines

Following a series of "revolutions" inspired by American capitalists, they succeeded in having the United States establish a military "protectorate" over the little country which makes it a colony of the American empire.

This was effected, however, only after a campaign of the most violent brutality by U. S. marines, during the occupation. According to the U. S. Marine Corps report more than 3,000 Haitians were killed,—most of them practically unarmed. In a protest lodged by prominent Haitians with the Senate Committee of Inquiry into the occupation of Haiti, it was declared that the American occupation is the "most terrible regime of military autocracy which has ever been carried on in the name of the great American democracy. The Haitian people, during these past five years, have passed through such sacrifices, tortures, destructions, humiliations, and misery as have never before been known in the course of its history."

General Chiang Kai-Shek, Renegade

(From Chinese Guide to America)

General Chiang-Kai-Shek has turned its guns on the workers of Shanghai. He has made himself the murderer of the workers who were responsible for his victorious entry into Shanghai. He has ordered the disbanding of the trade unions and attempted to take their arms from them. He has declared war on the "reds" in the Kuomintang. He has split with the Civil Government of Hankow and has set up a military government of his own in Nanking. General Chiang Kai-shek has betrayed the principles of Dr. Sun Yatsen and joined the ranks of the counter-revolutionists.

We state emphatically that General Chiang's split from the Hankow government does NOT mean the disintegration of the Kuomintang. On the contrary it indicates a crystallization of the deep-seated contradictions within the Kuomintang growing out of the social composition of its membership. The Kuomintang is a mass organization, as we have pointed out in previous editions of the CHINESE GUIDE IN AMERICA, having within its ranks big and little merchants, workers, peasants, and students, etc. These various groups do not all have the same aims. Those elements who are not so severely exploited by foreign imperialism, and who themselves are engaged in the business of exploiting the Chinese masses fear that the revolution may go too far. These are the middle class elements, who stand even now ready to compromise with foreign imperialism. It is this group who favor the leadership of Chiang Kai-shek. They fear the masses, who are against all exploitation, both foreign and native. And out of their fear of the masses they make war on the masses.

It was the general strike instituted by the workers preceding the entry of the Southern troops into Shanghai that made victory possible. Not only did the workers lay down their tools, but they took up arms and fought for the Nationalist Cause. In the face of the execution squads of war lords, they carried on the struggle. Now General Chiang proposes that these same workers be disarmed, preparatory to completely breaking their power of resistence.

Naturally the workers of Shanghai resent such treatment. And again they come out of the factories by the tens of thousands in general strike. These workers readily see that their interests lie with the Civil government of Hankow, which rests on the mass support of the workers and peasants of China.

General Chiang Kai-shek is the Yuan Shi-Kai of 1927, who betrayed the revolution in its early days of 1912 and '13. Like Kerensky in the Russian revolution, he attempts to stop the progress of the revolution in its narrow nationalistic stage. But like Kerensky, the onward sweep of the Chinese revolution will engulf him and he will be recorded in the pages of history as one who would sell his people into oppression and exploitation. He may linger in the arena of struggle a short while yet. But the fires of the Chinese revolution will consume him as it will all the traitors who stand in the way.

The Day We Celebrate

The Fifth Anniversary of the Founding of the Red International of Labor Unions

By LOUIS BOUDOUCK.

The work done by the minority movement in the trade unions of the world not just over international relations from the reactionary labor leaders and the general council, who betrayed the great general strike, has developed into a very keen one. The minority movement and its supporters have taken the most active part in all trade union campaigns. During the great general strike and the miners' lockout, it pursued the right policy, mercilessly exposing the treachery of the reformist leaders, the policy of class collaboration and "industrial peace," which played so powerful a part in the preparations for the general attack on the trade unions.

Right Wing Weakened.

This work done by the minority movement threatened to destroy and indeed has partially destroyed the authority of the reformists. It is therefore no wonder that the latter have begun open warfare against the minority movement. The Right leaders, coming out against the class struggle, not less than the government and the owners, desire to avert strikes of any sort. The agitation for "industrial peace" openly and shamelessly carried on by them since the termination of the general strike is inseparably bound up with the struggle against the minority movement as founded as it is on the class struggle. The form at present assumed by the campaign against the minority movement is that of a policy of expulsion and disruption.

Expulsions.

The trade union bureaucrats of the general and municipal workers' union have undertaken the carrying out of the Amsterdam tactics of expulsion in England. As early as November 1926, they sent out instructions according to which members of the Communist Party and the minority movement could be elected neither to responsible posts in the union nor to its conferences or congresses.

Despite these instructions, the rank and file members of the union showed their complete confidence in the militants of the minority movement. The latter were elected in many local branches to various responsible posts. In January last the executive of the union sent out a new circular to all branches the contents of which were directed against the Communists and the object of which was to achieve their expulsion from the trade unions. The circulars declared in the first place, that membership in the Communist Party or adherence to the minority movement was incompatible with loyalty to the union; in the second place, that local branches of the Union must not join district bodies composed in any way associated with the minority movement; and finally, that local branches of the union shall in no case adhere to the minority movement or send delegates to its conferences.

Call Conference.

In reply to this, the general workers' section of the minority movement resolved to call a conference of representatives of local branches of the union of general and municipal workers in London to draw up a plan of campaign against such decisions and to force the union leaders to withdraw them.

The London district committee of the union, at the head of which are the most blatant reformists, denounced the minority conference and threatened to liquidate all local branches sending delegates to it, and to expel from the union any of its members attending the conference.

This order caused indignation among the rank and file of the union. The minority movement declared that the conference would be held, and appealed to all local branches and members of the union to embark upon a determined struggle against the leaders breaking up the union.

Conference a Success.

The conference was held on the 6th of February and, in spite of the threats and endeavors of the trade union bureaucrats to break it up, was most successful. It was attended by representatives from 21 branches—57 delegates, representing over 20,000 members. The conference declared emphatically that the Executive's policy of disruption and the delegates undertook to wage a campaign against its decision by all means in their power.

The trade union bureaucrats were not slow to carry out their threats. The London district committee expelled 5 of the most important branches from the ranks of the union. These branches were deprived of any sort of participation in organizational and administrative work until the next congress of the union. Besides this 18 active members were expelled from the union, including Comrade Moody, a member of the minority movement executive and of the general council of the general and Municipal Workers' Union.

Approve Expulsion Policy.

This policy of expulsion and disruption was sanctioned by the general council, nor is this surprising when it is remembered its leaders who are at the same time the leaders of the Labor Party, are merely carrying to its logical conclusions the tactics of the Liverpool labor party conference, which as is well known passed decisions on the expulsion of Communists. These tactics have merely been transferred to the trade unions.

On the 25th of March the General Council met to, all intents and purposes, "wash its hands" of the "disruptionist" Nos. 31," laying down among other things: That those trades councils which are affiliated to the labority movement, or receive, recognition by the general council organization, or are associated with that body, shall not be accorded recognition by the general council nor allowed to participate in any work carried on under the auspices of the general council."

The meaning of these instructions is clear: the general council is beginning an open warfare against the minority movement, the vanguard of the trade union movement. This shameless policy of the general council is unexpected neither by the supporters of the minority movement nor by the wide masses of the workers. It is not this that same general council which betrayed the general strike and the miners' strike? This same general council which is now fighting for industrial peace and still attacking the powerful strike as the weapon of the class struggle against the owners? That same general council which by its whole policy is weakening to the trade union movement has cleared the ground for anti-trade union Government legislation?

What is the explanation of the fact that in the very moment when government trade union legislation is threatening to throw back the labor movement a hundred years, the general council is carrying out its disruptive policy? There can only be one answer to this question: the general council and trade union bureaucracy in some unions have embarked upon their struggle against the Communists and the minority movement in the hope that the Government will reward them by changing some of the clauses of the anti-trade union bill so as to make it acceptable to the labor bureaucrats.

The minority movement has already begun its campaign for the exposure of the reformist leaders' disruptive policy. It points out that the general council had not recognized the trade councils "until the agitation of the minority movement had developed to the point where resolutions appeared on the agenda of the trades union congress demanding the affiliation of the trades councils to the T.U.C., with representation on the general council."

The agitation of the minority movement is responsible for transforming the most important trades councils into real centers of action in the various localities. This is one of the greatest contributions of the minority movement, which is being recognized by the trades councils as the real fighting file. At the last annual conference there were ninety delegates in attendance representing fifty-one trades councils. The general council cannot point out a single instance where the policy of the minority movement has injured or retarded the working class movement.

The general council's offensive against the minority movement can be explained by one reason: they know that the force in the trade union movement is the force and real force in the trade union movement of Britain that alone can save the movement from the traitorous policy of the Thomases and Pughs. This offensive of the general council will be defeated by the rank and file members of the unions.

vigor became sapped and their political virtue got tarnished they rallied the coin with hearing distance and watched their furrowing brows. Those that preferred the flesh pots of capitalism to the huggy coils became patriotic and respectable; the others were broken.

THE labor leaders that got tired of the fight joined the ranks of business and since, in the broad sense, one's class interests determine his attitude toward questions that affect his bank account these labor leaders have degenerated into defenders of capitalism and bitter enemies of the workingclass. Well is one of those. Having been recently of the workingclass the very thot of being jerked back into their ranks fills him with dread. He has no ideals that span a second-story worker would confess to without blushing. So he out-Herods his masters in his vindictiveness against the militant workers.

WOLL'S demand for an investigation of alleged Soviet activities in the United States must not be regarded as representing the individual wish of this labor faker. He is speaking for the big capitalists who head the National Civic Federation. Those are the elements that make our capitalist government jump. All he did was point to a new wave of terror in the United States against the progressive wing of the workingclass movement. From China to New York the reactionary storm is raging or brewing. Never in the history of the class struggle were the lines drawn more firmly lined up with the ruling classes. It is our imperative duty to draw out the latent insurgency in the ranks of the organized workers and to develop a new leadership that will supplant the corrupted and deadbeated human hulks that are now dropped around the necks of the labor movement.

Coolidge Glorifies Imperialism

By M. H. WICKS

NOTHING more than the statement of Coolidge in his Memorial Day address that "we have not sought the territory of any other people" is needed to show the hypocrisy of the whole speech. The United States has grabbed more territory than any other country in the world. Its imperialism is more rapacious than that of any other country. Its record of conquest is more extensive than that of any other country. Its record of exploitation of weaker peoples is more shameful than that of any other country. Its record of suppression of the struggles of weaker peoples for freedom is more brutal than that of any other country.

Coolidge's speech is a glorification of the victims of imperialism. In their lives most of them were workers, despised by the ruling class; all workers are considered dirt beneath the feet of those for whom they slave. Most of them had slaved all their early lives to produce surplus for the capitalist class. When that class could not waste it or invest it in the United States they took it to foreign lands and then forced the very workers who had produced that surplus (unpaid labor of the working class) to go and lay down their lives in order that their masters might exploit still more workers in other countries. Then the surplus value extracted from labor from all over the world piles ever higher. It has to be invested in still other territory. But there then ensues a conflict with the capitalists holding surplus produced by workers of another imperialist country. Diplomatic intrigue fails and war flares forth. Then the master class, unable to settle their own fight between themselves call upon their slaves to murder each other to decide which master class shall have the right to exploit still other workers. That is our Memorial Day lesson. That is the real cause of wars. Do not let Mr. Coolidge or any other parrot of imperialism make you believe anything else.

Frisco I.L.D. to Picnic.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 30.—A monster picnic of the International Labor Defense will be held at East Shore Park on July 4th under the joint auspices of the San Francisco, Oakland and Berkely branches of the organization. All workers are urged to attend for a good time and a labor Fourth of July, and to help in the building up of the movement for labor defense which is especially important in California where there are still so many class war fighters in prison, with every prospect for increased reaction as a result of the recent Supreme Court decision in the cases of Charlotte Anita Whitney and William Burns, under which the vicious California Criminal Syndicalism Law was upheld by a unanimous opinion of the members of the Supreme Court.

Coolidge Glorifies Imperialism in Philippines.

The raucous and frequently discordant brass band of international forgery has a new recruit in the person of an American admiral tooting a tin whistle in the rear. With an abandon reminiscent of one of Gilbert & Sullivan's characters in the "Pirates of Penzance" Rear Admiral Sumner E. W. Kittelle, commandant of the sixteenth naval district, asserts that "certain radicals proposed and discussed a plot to destroy the naval ammunition dump at Cavite," in the Philippine Islands.

Supporting his statement he cited "certain documents" found in the recent raid on the Soviet Embassy at Peking, China. That these documents were written by agents of the British tory government of forgery is of no concern to this lackey of American imperialism.

The story is quite obviously concocted with a two-fold purpose. First, the 2,600 workers at the arsenal are organized into a labor union. The odious administration of Major General Leonard H. Wood, who gained his greatest fame in the eyes of capitalism by commanding the strike-breaking forces at Gary, Indiana, during the great steel strike, follows the Coolidge strike-breaking policy in the islands. The rear admiral tries feebly to steal the thunder of the British forgers in order to terrorize the workers into abandoning their labor union. Secondly: the Wood regime wants to strike another blow at the independence movement in the Philippines as is evidenced by the statement of the rear admiral to the workers: "If you boys desire to follow some Filipino leader, why not follow General Aguinaldo,"

Aguinaldo, native military leader of a quarter of a century ago, has long been the servile vassal of American imperialism. "He is a good Filipino and an excellent citizen, loyal to the American flag." A Filipino who is loyal to the flag of the invaders is in the same category as a colonist who, in the days before the outbreak of the American revolution, was loyal to George III, that is, a traitor to his own people.

Every American worker with brains enough to perceive the class struggle sympathises with the trade union movement in the islands and urges the workers in the arsenal as well as all other workers under the iron heel of the Wood despotism to refuse to disband their unions in spite of the forgers threats. Unquestionably the struggle for national liberation in China against the imperialist powers is exerting a strong influence on the Philippines and we hope the day is not far off when the major generals and rear admirals will be driven from the country. In their struggle against American imperialism the Filipinos will have the support of the militant section of the working class in the United States.

Bill Green Does Not Speak for Labor.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who uses his office for the base purpose of assailing every honest effort on the part of labor against its oppressors, has issued a statement denouncing the proposed trade union delegation to Russia. This delegation is composed of prominent trade unionists and not by any stretch of the imagination can they be considered revolutionists. Yet Green comes forth and proclaims that they do not speak for labor and he wants the world to know it.

Green, alone, speaks for labor, according to his opinion of himself. However, there are thousands upon thousands of trade unionists for whom he does not speak. They belong to international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and pay no attention to the ravings of creatures of the Green stripe. Many local unions would not permit Green to address them any more than they would invite the chairman of the open shoppers to harangue them.

Furthermore, labor in the United States, though suffering from the blight of a reactionary and traitorous officialdom in most of its organizations, has never expressed its desires regarding a trade union delegation to Russia.

The reason Green tries to prevent a delegation going to Russia to investigate conditions for itself is because he knows they will discover that his anti-Soviet campaign is a plain concoction of capitalist lies. He doesn't dare endorse such a mission as a matter of self-preservation. The real facts easily obtained by an impartial committee would brand Green as a lying, vindictive agent of the capitalist class and an enemy of the working class.

Preparing for Further Looting of China.

Every move of the new Tanaka cabinet of Japan is contributory evidence that a secret conspiracy exists between Britain and Japan government to revive the Anglo-Japanese alliance in plain violation of the Washington treaties of 1922, when the old pact between those two countries was dissolved.

The Peking government under control of Chang Tso-lin has protested against the projected occupation of Japanese forces of Tsing-tao, a strategic point that will give Japan control of one of the rich provinces she relinquished at the Washington conference. It is not because Peking is opposed to Japanese imperialism that the agents of Chang-Tso-lin protest, but because the Manchurian war lord has been discarded by Japan and is no longer on her payroll. He wants to convince Japan that she is wise him to do her dirty work in China. The whole game in China is becoming ever clearer. The contemptible apostate and traitor, Chiang Kai-shek, sold out to British imperialism in an effort to arrest the northern drive of the nationalists in order that Britain could seize coveted territory. Then, with the rise to power of the Tanaka cabinet, Japan followed British policy on the basis of assurances that she would be permitted to retrieve her own former "spheres of influence," as a result of a victorious imperialist conquest.

Britain and Japan are pursuing their old policies in China and though they do not openly assail the position of the United States every move indicates that they are preparing for a struggle against the tremendous power of American imperialism, which plus its own game in that part of the world—a long-distance policy, the aim of which is to endeavor to secure the exclusive right to exploit China. Britain and Japan will not surrender without a bitter struggle; at first carried on through diplomatic, economic and military maneuvers without an open clash between the great powers, but inevitably leading to such a clash, which will plunge the world into a war of such magnitude that countless millions of workers will be slaughtered.

Only one thing can prevent such a war and that is the victory of the nationalist forces, which can be fully realized only when the armed forces of the imperialist nations are withdrawn or driven out of China.

The demand on the part of the working class for withdrawal of forces from China is not only calculated to aid the nationalist liberation movement, but is a matter of simple self-preservation. Every day the imperialist forces occupy China brings nearer the hour when another world war will burst forth. The alignments for such a beginning are already plain. Britain and Japan on one side and the United States on the other at first. As the conflict progresses other countries will be rapidly drawn in and the earth again rocks beneath the tread of the legions of imperialism as they again march to the human slaughter house to decide which gang of avaricious bandits shall attempt to rule the world for another decade just as they tried to decide in the last war the fate of the world the past decade.

Everywhere the demand should insistently be made to get out of China and stay out and permit the Chinese people to work out their own destiny.

Woll Makes Fascist Appeal.

Matthew Woll, speaking as acting president of the national civic federation, launched a fascist tirade against reds in general in which he even included an attack upon the constitution of the United States. He doesn't object to it as a class document. His is not by any means a Communist criticism of the uses to which it is put as the defender of special privilege. He objects to it because, in order to cloak the fraudulent democracy of the ruling class, it must on occasion pay lip service to free speech. While we were not aware of the fact that free speech is very widespread in this country, Mr. Woll, the galant servant of big business and self-appointed union wrecker, deplores the fact that the constitution permits Communists to express certain restricted opinions and he advocates "requisite laws" to prevent Communists giving voice to their demands.

As a Communist publication The DAILY WORKER has exposed the low practices of Woll so effectively that even the ordinary reactionaries in the American Federation of Labor are letting him severely alone. Naturally he flies in a rage and tries, in typical stool pigeon fashion, to work up a case for the government against us. His latest outburst followed the raid of the British tories upon the trade delegation in London and the subsequent breaking off of relations with Russia. Woll wants similar raids here. He wants to silence every agency favorable to the Soviet Union and advocates raids upon the trade agencies, "news and telegraph agencies, cultural and educational agencies and the like." We presume Woll, like the rest of the professional patriots, includes in his list of subversive agencies the various liberal organizations that cannot swallow his brand of Americanism.

Just as Mussolini has stifled every semblance of free speech in Italy, so Woll and his cohorts would repeat the performance here if they had the power.

Again, we must not forget that this outburst has wider implications than the antics of Woll as an individual. Woll is one of the principal agents of reaction in this country. Behind him stands the labor-hating aggregation of the National Civic Federation—bankers, igdustrialists, insurance magnates—who are unquestionably preparing for a new anti-labor drive on a national scale. Woll's tirade, brainless as it is, may be the first symptom of a general offensive, first against the Communists and the left wing and then against the main body of labor.

Organized labor, if it has learned any lessons from the bloody regime of fascism in Italy, should instantly repudiate the Woll propaganda designed to destroy what semblance of free speech we still have in this country. He should be told that if he wants to ape Mussolini he can confine his antics to the Civic Federation where such performances are appreciated, but that he cannot use the labor movement as a mask for fascism.

Walter Hampden Planning Season of Shakespeare

Unless present plans go awry the plays of Shakespeare will return to Broadway next season. Walter Hampden, in his interview with Heywood Broun, says that he will devote a considerable portion of next season at the Hampden's Theatre to Shakespeare's plays, which will be produced in the order in which they were written. Mr. Hampden, in the character of the exclusive "Caponsacchi". He is preparing to appear in two plays in which he has never appeared before, "Much Ado About Nothing" and "Coriolanus". In addition he will revive "Hamlet" and "The Taming of the Shrew". Not in fifty years has "Coriolanus" been acted in New York, or since the days of John McCullough, one of whose most famous parts the title role of this drama was. The last Hamlet and revival of "Much Ado About Nothing" was made by E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe more than a dozen years ago.

Another of the actor-manager's productions for next season will be of Henrik Ibsen's, "An Enemy of the People". Mr. Hampden placed this play which is seldom produced here, in rehearsal last January but the drawing power of "Caponsacchi" prompted him to postpone its presentation until autumn. A new play — the details of which are lacking is also slated for production. But two plays were produced by Mr. Hampden the present season: "The Immortal Thief" and "Caponsacchi".

WOMEN
Laundry Workers Must Organize

[illegible] Working Women's [illegible]
[illegible] Labor Board [illegible]
[illegible] Washing Trust.'

Today laundry owners are organizing on a tremendous scale. "A Billion-Dollar Wash Line by 1930" is the slogan. Unless the laundry workers meet organization by organization now—they will be utterly lost in the hands of the powerful combinations being formed by the bosses.

The Board of Health made an investigation ten years ago. The State Department of Labor, another, in 1924. Things were found to be practically unchanged. They still are. From it is claimed that many modern buildings have been put up. But these are were often used for the shipping and office work, thus for housing those who do the hardest, dirtiest work, of sorting, marking, washing, mangling, and ironing.

Dark, Dirty, Damp.

For the majority of workers in the laundries, these are the conditions that still prevail. Laundries frequently are housed in dark, dirty rooms, located in cellars, where neither light nor air penetrate. Rooms filled with hot steam and fumes from the chemicals and bleaches used to whiten the clothes. Floors dripping wet because the drainage is defective, or simply does not exist. Bad light, no artificial methods for letting in air and carrying off steam.

Workers standing up all day long—ten, twelve, even fourteen hours, often till they are ready to collapse. More often than not, no time off for lunch. Drinking water only to be had out of the faucets in filthy laundry tubs.

Street clothes hanging up on hooks in the same room where the washing and ironing is done, so that all the long day's end, the exhausted workers are forced to put on damp, clammy clothes—no rest room—no showers to get off the sweat and filth of the day's work—dirty toilets.

Danger of Disease.

It's a sweet job sorting out the dirty clothes, and marking them, before they go to be washed, with their sickening, sour stench, and the comforting thought that they may have come from sick people—handkerchiefs and towels from someone suffering from tuberculosis, sheets from the bed of a typhoid patient.

There is danger of heart-disease, too. Board of Health examinations found the great majority of both men and women in the laundries suffering from this dangerous illness, from the terrific strain of the work.

Laundry Owners Organize.

The laundry owners have already learned the lesson of organization that the workers are just beginning to learn. From a trade in which there were [illegible] small laundries and dry cleaning establishments in New York, Brooklyn and West Chester, there has developed [illegible] industry in the United States today.

At the end of 1929, several of the largest laundry companies in New York, banded together and formed one huge trust, now doing a business of $10,000,000 a year. From $270,000,000 in 1926, the laundry business in the United States jumped to $450,000,000 in 1928 and it is out to increase this to a billion dollars by 1930.

The workers will certainly have to do some speeding up and overtime to make this billion dollars for the trust. What does the Trust care about putting a stop to the unsanitary conditions, the dangers to life and limb from handling unprotected machinery, the terrific heart-strain from heat and steam and lifting tremendous weights, in dirt and dust which kills the workers years before their time, from tuberculosis, the suffering of women and girls whose internal organs are injured by lifting and carrying, the strain of pushing mangles and trestles, and the long, long hours of standing at their work. Profits must be made at all costs. Small laundries will be swallowed up, larger ones brought into the trust, and the workers driven to the last limit.

Workers Must Organize Against Intensified Exploitation.

The only way for the workers to protect themselves against the new wave of exploitation that the new order of things in the laundry business is bringing is to organize as the bosses have organized already.

Now is the time to join the union.

The organization campaign is on in every branch, of the trade. In every shop, men and women, white and Negro workers should work together to build the organization.

Join the Union.

Together, united in one powerful Laundry Union, the thousands of men and women in the industry in New York City, can win higher wages, cut down the working day to 8 hours and the week to the 40-hour week, do away with unsanitary conditions, get clean, light, airy, washrooms, stop carrying heavy loads of ironed clothes, do away with the old gas heating machines, with their danger of poisoning from gas and steam.

Not a billion-dollar wash-line for the bosses, but the highest possible standard of working conditions for the workers! Help to Build the Laundry Workers' Union.

Seattle Unites for Sacco and Vanzetti Defense Conference

SEATTLE, Wash., May 30.—Trade unionists of this city are organizing their forces in line with the nation-wide protests against the death sentence of Sacco and Vanzetti. At the instance of the International Labor Defense a united front conference to save the lives of the two Italian workers has taken form. The same conference functioned effectively last Fall in emergency protest meetings.

In the revived conference the Central Labor Council and a number of local unions are sending delegates as well as the Workers Party, the I. W. W., the International Labor Defense, the Socialist Party, the Workmen's Circle, the Labor College and other bodies.

All the above organizations and a large number of local unions have adopted resolutions or sent telegrams to Governor Fuller of Massachusetts urging freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti.

By Margaret Larkin

Following the expulsion of Local 1 and Local 25, the reactionary officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers started heresy hunts against individual members. But this just started a new revolt, leading to the left wing demands of 1925. The story is told in the Joint Board's own official account of the Left Wing in the Garment Unions, published in pamphlet form.

EXPULSION OF INDIVIDUALS.

After the division of the local, the rank and file of the workers refused to abandon the progressive idea of the Shop Delegate system, and new leagues advocating its adoption were established almost at once in the new Local 22 as well as in other locals.

The International continued its attempt to crush the movement by further expulsions. Members known to be in favor of it were not permitted to run for office, and candidates who received the endorsement of the Shop Delegates League found their names removed from the ballot on the eve of elections. Nineteen officers who had been elected by the membership of Local 22 with the endorsement of the Shop Delegates League were expelled from the Union in 1923.

Shortly after these expulsions, the Trade Union Educational League was organized, which advocated amalgamation of all the needle trades as well as greater democratization of the Union through the Shop Delegate system or some similar plan. The Trade Union Educational League was attacked even more fiercely by the International, of which Morris Sigman was now the president. The fact that some of its leaders were members of the Workers' Party made possible the cry of "Communism," which was immediately raised and has been used ever since, as a means of obscuring the issues in any internal dispute.

With the support of the General Executive Board, President Sigman issued orders expelling all members of the Union who were members of the Trade Union Educational League or any other organization where trade union problems were discussed. The order created a tremendous upheaval throughout the entire Union. Local after local was broken up. The most active members of Chicago, Philadelphia, New York, and other cities were expelled from the Union, and the International lost thousands of members. In the 1924 convention delegates from the largest New York locals were unseated on charges of being members of a League.

The immediate result of these attacks was to unite the rank and file of the membership in opposition to Sigman and the Administration, for it became evident to the workers that no man would have a right to his opinion in union matters, and particularly that the will of large groups of the members could not prevail, under such a policy of wholesale expulsion.

At the same time there was a growing revolt against the corruption in the Union. Any system in which the leaders are not elected by the members, are not directly responsible to them, and cannot be removed, is sure to breed corruption, and the International was no exception. The Administration machine had become so corrupt and the corruption so flagrant, that in spite of the expulsions, the membership rebelled. "Left Wing" leaders, running for office on an anti-corruption and reform platform, were voted into control in Cloak Operators' Local 2, Cloak Finishers' Local 9, and Dressmakers' Local 22. The managers of these locals were Joseph Boruchowitz, Louis Hyman, and Julius Pertney, respectively, all of whom are leaders in the present struggle.

The next great struggle of the so-called "Left Wing" against President Sigman and the officials of the International is of great importance, first, because the present dispute is in reality a continuation of it, and second, because for the first time in the history of the International, the membership was able to defeat the expulsion and "reorganization" policy.

The Left Wing Platform of Reform.

The demands of the Left Wing in 1925 included the following reforms: Proportional representation in the convention and in the New York Joint Board; the abolition of the policy of expulsion of members for their political beliefs, election of International officers and General Executive Board by direct vote of the membership, and amalgamation of all the needle trades.

The question of proportional representation in the Joint Board was of particular interest to the three Left Wing locals. Representation was equal, each local, large or small, sending five delegates to the Joint Board, so that the three large locals, representing about 29,000 out of the 50,000 members, were always outvoted by the delegates from the other ten small locals. The expenses of the Joint Board are met by the locals in proportion to their membership. Consequently the three Left Wing locals paid about sixty-five per cent of all the expenses of the Joint Board. In spite of this they were not allowed a single member on the Financial Committee which dispersed the funds.

When the Joint Board proposed to increase the local dues of all members from thirty-five to fifty cents, these locals protested that efficient management had reduced their expenses to a minimum, and could also reduce the expenses of the Joint Board. They also declared that they were able to pay their pro rata for the upkeep of the Joint Board without raising their dues. Nevertheless, over the protests of the members and of the three locals, the dues were raised. Such incidents resulted in increasing dissatisfaction against the system of representation to the Joint Board.

The representation to conventions was also a source of discontent to the membership. It grew increasingly militant in its demand for reforms, which, if carried through, would certainly seriously menace the tenure in office of the Administration.

The action of President Sigman in preventing strike demands to a Commission appointed by the Governor of New York in 1924 was the occasion for another sharp clash between Left Wing and Administration policies. Since the agreement in the cloakmakers' industry was about to expire, and the employers had given every evidence of unwillingness to comply with Union demands, the membership had voted in referendum, to strike for the demands. Instead of carrying out the order to strike, President Sigman submitted the demands to the Governor's Commission, and pledged the Union to accept its findings, in spite of the fact that the employers refused to make any such promise. This action was strongly opposed by the Left Wing group, and indeed, after two years of waiting, the recommendations of the Commission were such as could not be accepted by the Union, and the strike was called, although conditions were much less favorable to the Union in 1926 than in 1924.

Worcester Bricklayers Join Laborers' Walkout —Cops Attack Strikers

WORCESTER, Mass., (FP) May 30.—With cops on guard at every job, the city building laborers continued their folded arms policy today with the bricklayers helpers now out. More than 100 bricklayers automatically joined the walkout when their helpers struck.

Nine strikers were fined $17 each as the aftermath of a police attack on the picket line.

CO-OPERATIVES
Report is Issued for Cooperative Stores

By LELAND STOWE (Federated Press)

If you want some of your money to go to the actual people you are purchasing from, and not to the middlemen, you will be interested in the report of the U. S. Department of Labor [illegible] and retail cooperative stores. The report [illegible] of the consumers' dollar [illegible] and [illegible] with private stores [illegible] both in labor and [illegible] the private stores.

Statistical experts from [illegible] cooperative societies showed that in 1925 operating costs absorbed 16.3 per cent of the money paid by consumers. Nearly a decade later, in 1934, the expenses of retail grocery stores in 1934 by the Harvard bureau of business research, the department finds that in these private stores expenses absorbed 18 per cent of the consumer's dollar.

The department's figures show that the saving achieved by the coops was not made at the expense of the employes. The labor costs in both types of stores vary practically the same absorbing 10.2 per cent of the consumer's dollar in the cooperatives and 10.9 per cent in the private stores. In other words labor employed by the coops got 66.7 per cent of operating expenses while labor employed by private stores received 60.7 per cent.

The return on capital and borrowed money in the case of co-operatives ranges down from about 1% of sales for general stores to less than ½ of 1% for consumers stores. The department's analysis shows the percentage of net sales expended for each item of expense by general, grocery and combined grocery and meat co-ops to be:

Co-operative store-operating expenses	Pct. of net sales expended by General stores	Grocery stores	Grocery & meat
Wages	7.71%	8.92%	11.84%
Advertising	.25	.13	.16
Rent	.92	.42	1.29
Light, heat, power	.46	.76	.49
Insurance and taxes	1.00	.74	.66
Interest on capital and borrowed money	1.02	.74	.57
Office supplies	.15	.06	.03
Freight, express, etc.	2.32	.17	.20
Repairs	.14	.26	.12
Depreciation on equipment	.64	.46	4.07
Loss from bad accounts	.39	.27	.49
Miscellaneous	1.65	2.37	2.58
Total	18.83%	14.32%	17.48%

The department's figures suggest that as consumer cooperation extends, expanding the sales of individual stores, the proportion of the consumer's dollar absorbed by cost of operation will fall. In the case of coops with sales under $25,000 the department found expenses absorbing 27 per cent of the total; for stores with sales between $25,000 and $50,000 the expense was 18.79 per cent; for sales between $50,000 and $75,000 it was 15.46 per cent; $75,000 to $100,000 14.63 per cent; while between $100,000 and $200,000 expenses absorbed 15.03 per cent of the consumer's money. The department shows a jump of 19.82 per cent in stores with sales over $200,000 but this could probably be explained by the nature of the business or other special problems of this group.

SOVIET UNION CO-OPERATIVES CREATE FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH SIMILAR ORGANIZATIONS

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., May 30.—The Central Union of Consumers' Cooperative Societies of the U.S.S.R. has received invitations from the French, British, Belgian and Swiss cooperative organizations to send delegates to their congresses called for May and June in Nimes, Cheltenham, Namur and Interlaken.

The delegates from the Central Union to the congresses have been instructed to invite foreign cooperatives to send delegations to the U.S.S.R. to study Soviet Union cooperatives and to acquaint themselves with Soviet Union attainments during the ten years of proletarian dictatorship.

Information has been received from Prague, to the effect that a Czecho-Slovakian delegation of cooperative workers, consisting of 20 persons, will soon visit the U.S.S.R.

Working Students at Wisconsin U. Unionize

MADISON, Wis. (FP) May 30.—30 students at the University of Wisconsin are perfecting a labor union to advance the interests of men and women who work their way through school. Like other unions it will seek to raise wages of its members, gather data on the industries they work in and act as spokesmen for them.

It is a belated revival of a student labor union which was formed over 15 years ago at the university and conducted a successful lightning strike at the leading campus eatinghouse. The organizer and leading spokesman of that strike is now a professor of American history at Harvard.

The revival is due to the helplessness of the average student who has to earn money if he is to continue his studies. Wages for student labor range from 25 cents an hour to 50 cents, a survey of the field revealed.

Pres. Glenn Frank of the university is sympathetic with the new organization. William Forrest of the Madison Federation of Labor and several professors addressed the initial meeting, which was held at the Y. M. C. A.

Hazleton Bakers Get Increases.

HAZLETON, Pa.—(FP)—May 30.—Bakery and Confectionary Workers Local 481 has signed a 3-year agreement with the bakeries of Hazleton providing for wage increases of $1 to $3 a week and for reduction of the 8½ hour shift to 8 hours. Compulsory arbitration, binding on master and men, is agreed to. The union label is to appear on all baking products.

"Our Washington Office will become the Mecca for all those institutions and committees making information regarding conditions of Fascism in America.

"We need money, however, to carry this work along."

"As a patriotic American will you not help us financially in this work of defense of America by subscribing either for yourself or the business with which you may be connected, as much as you feel you can possibly spare?"

It remained for a newcomer in the field of professional patriotism, the United States Flag Association, organized in 1924, to make the first all-inclusive appeal. It says:

"Some of us belong to a half a dozen or more patriotic societies but our mail-carrier who delivers to us every day our mail cannot belong to them, because he cannot meet their particular qualifications for membership; nor can he afford to pay initiation fees and annual dues which to him are considerable. But your mail-carrier and yourself, and Mrs. Rockefeller and her cook, and Mr. Rockefeller and the man who sweeps the street in front of his house, can all belong to the United States Flag Association, the big, democratic, patriotic association, destined to become THE GREAT AMERICAN PATRIOTIC SOCIETY. It will be the great agency of the Nation, potent and far-reaching, for the building-up of Peace-Time Patriotism."

High Pressure Methods.

The better American Federation, though heavily backed by corporations, goes after members extensively. The "red menace" appeal is apparently relied upon to produce the best results. One pamphlet of exposé of the radical plot to overthrow the government is entitled "Behind the Veil," though most of its material, where accurate, could be secured from radical publications for fifty cents. Another money-getting folder is red, white, and blue is entitled "Are you an American or ?." It includes extracts from I.W.W. songs and quotations from radical journals, all in red ink, with a pledge at the bottom. The signer, who contributes to this employers' body at the same time, agrees to

"oppose all organizations or individuals who openly or covertly, directly or indirectly, give aid, comfort, or support to the doctrines, practices or purposes of the Bolsheviki, the I.W.W. or kindred organizations, or who do not give undivided allegiance to our flag and the great principles of constitutional free government of which it is the emblem."

When the business crowd behind the Better America Federation want to do a political job that might embarrass that organization, they get up machinery under another name. The Citizens' Committee of Ten Thousand (nominally a few score) is one of them, devoted solely to campaigning for the "right men" from Los Angeles in the legislature and Congress.

A circular appeal from that committee to business men in February, 1926, puts its job plainly:

"Laws which are detrimental to business or injure you, the members of your family, or the community in which you live, can be prevented.

"You are being robbed every day,—losses running into the thousands, yes, probably millions of dollars yearly. You and your business interests are footing the bill.

A California newspaperman who examined the Better America Federation carefully for an article on the real purposes concealed in its patriotic pretensions, says:

"Much of its pamphlet literature is used primarily for the purpose of securing new members and subscriptions. Business men and old ladies,—any one with a conservative bias, a credulous timid streak, and $10 or more to spare—are their meat. For instance, I know of one old lady who received a copy of the week's pamphlet 'Behind the Veil,' with its terrifying exposure of revolutionary activities enclosed in a letter asking her to join and contribute, which she did."

Down in West Virginia, the real operators behind the American Constitutional Association got out a letter of appeal, addressed to "members and friends." It is taken from the court record in the case of a solicitor suing for commissions and is reproduced in part:

One of our Bluefield (W. Va.) members writes:

"We have got to have something with PUNCH in it—something which will awaken and HOLD red-blooded men, and make them sit up and take notice and keep on taking notice and get out and dig for our Association.

Now then: Many of us feel just as do our member and his friend in Bluefield—that we must do something; and when we see and read, as all too often we do these days, about the efforts of either those who seek to overthrow our constitutional Government or of those, who being falsely led, are working to the same end, we are ready for "direct action"—ready to fight. But

This Association, as organized, is something wider and deeper than possibly some have thought. And while its officers realize fully the outrageous conditions which exist, and which must be changed, yet they also realize that better and permanent conditions will have to come by "peaceful persuasion" and not by force. One of our objects, as you have read, is to "inculcate"—not to force—"in the minds"—not the passions—of our people, both native and foreign born, the true spirit of Americanism. . . .

Also, you have just read, "The American Constitutional Association is organized to preserve reverence for law." And, here, what is meant is a respect—a reverence for Order, Symmetry and just Proportion as expressed by what we call Law. . . . Who can say there is any place for the "Closed Shop" here? And since we call upon "all Americans and American Organizations to accomplish these purposes," will not the un-American "Closed Shop" be automatically closed out when they answer our call? . . .

Do you—at least once a day, say to a friend or acquaintance, "Here, Tom, you must join The American Constitutional Association"?

"But what is it," says Tom.

"It is an association of all Americans and American Associations" is your answer.

"To do what?"

"Briefly, to organize the American people—the public."

"For what?"

And here is where you hand him the leaflet of our Object, and start the argument—starting doing your part. Get his application.

Time, patience, hard work and lots of money are required to merely offset the efforts of radical agitation which are SPENDING a year in these United States.

Workers' Delegations in the U.S.S.R.

At the Congress of workers of the Tailoring Industry in the U.S.S.R. which has just concluded in Moscow, Comrade Libers, the Chairman of the Belgian Delegation of the Tailors' Union said:

"During our sojourn in the U.S.S.R. we had the opportunity of seeing many institutions and factories. We are convinced that since the time of the last Congress, at which we were present, you have made great progress. We took part in the May 1st demonstrations together with the Moscow proletariat, and we are convinced that the working class of the U.S.S.R. is prepared at a moment's notice to defend the Soviet power. The workers of the whole world have learn from the Soviet workers how to fight for their own future."

Comrade Libers presented the Congress with an address from the National Congress of Tailors' in Belgium, which took place in Autumn 1926. In this address written in Russian language, it says that the Belgian tailors henceforth will fight energetically for unity.

Comrade Sclair, member of the Executive of the British Tailors' and Garment Workers' Union, who was present at the Congress, said:

"The knowledge of the Russian language gave me the lucky opportunity of following the work of the Congress from day to day. I have been convinced during this time that the work of the Soviet trade unions differs greatly from that of the English trade unions: your Congress took an active part in the solution of questions of economic construction and cultural work, while the English unions are not in the habit of doing (unfortunately they cannot at present). When I arrive in England I shall have something to relate.

"As for unity between the English and Soviet tailors, I consider that it exists already and that no power exists which can break this unity. The Annual Congress of our Union will take place next year, and we hope to see your representatives there.

"We shall work together then not only for unity among the tailors, but for general unity among the working class as a whole."

The Congress greeted the foreign delegates with a stormy applause.

Unemployment Benefit.

The Presidium of the AUCTU has confirmed the new regulations providing for the unemployed.

According to this regulation, qualified workers in case of unemployment have the right to assistance regardless of the length of time they have worked: highly qualified brainworkers also are entitled to assistance on the same basis, provided they have had paid positions in connection with their specialty, before becoming unemployed.

Unskilled and unskilled workers (whether they are trade unionists or not) can receive assistance only if they have worked for 26 weeks in the course of the last 12 months.

WORKSHOPS THAT DISTURB URQUHART'S SLEEP

(Letter from the Ural Mining District.)

One of the active leaders of the anti-Soviet campaign in England is, as is well-known, Leslie Urquhart. In order to better understand the cause of his wildly excited condition, we must have recourse to history.

Before the war, in 1913, the entire copper-smelting works of Russia turned out about 2 million 100 thousand tons of copper. Of this total, the Urals works smelted about one-half, the Caucasian, one-third, and those of the Kirghiz steppes about 15%. Only the poorest works belonged to the local industrials, Demidov and others. The entire Russian copper-smelting industry was monopolised by English and French (particularly the former) banking capital, which, in the form of five companies in 1913 worked 65% of the copper in the Urals, 88.5% of that in Kirghis, and 32.8% of the Caucasian. The remaining copper was monopolised by French banking capital, who were the owners of the "Bogomolov Mining-Industrial Company" (in the Urals) and the "Caucasian Metallurgical Company."

In the Urals of the five above-named English limited companies was one, "The Kyshtimski Works" Ltd., of which Urquhart could honestly say: "I myself am the Company." The Karabash copper-smelting works, the Kyshtimski Electric Refining Works, the Kaslinski cast-iron works (essential as an auxiliary, to all copper works), and several other small factories, were all part of the "Kyshtimski Works, Ltd." The maid factory of the "company" was the Karabash, constructed in 1906, newly equipped in 1912, and from that time smelting copper to the extent of 8,000 tons yearly.

When Urquhart recovered from the 1917-1918 years, he tried twice, in 1921 and 1926, to obtain a concession on his old works. He, at that time, broadly hinted that without his "cultured" help and experience, these works could not be restored. He knew, of course, that his agents, on the retreat of Kolchak, had done all they could to destroy the works. But the example of Karabash is a heroic page in the history of the restoration of Soviet economy: it worked excellently without Urquhart.

Karabash is now one of the main copper-smelting works in the Urals. Step by step we are having to restore long-torn parts of it, which were wrecked by Urquhart's agents. One by one the mines are being restored, furnaces for smelting copper are being put into motion; three months ago the reverberatory furnace (for smelting copper dust and foreign substances) was restored. The Kyshtimski electric refining works, which before the war refined Urquhart's copper (and this refining includes the separation of gold and silver of which the copper of the Urals contains a high percentage), refined in the course of the last year, 7,340 tons of Soviet copper—30% more than before the war.

Urquhart Annoyed.

But it is not only the excellent work of "his" factories that infuriates Urquhart. The most painful thing for him is the fact that instead of the old limited company, the present monopolists of the production of copper in the Urals (and of the whole U. S. S. R.) are the workers who used to work in his factories, in the form of the Soviet Government. More than this: In addition to the existing works, a huge Soviet Bogomolov copper-smelting works is being built in the Urals, which will smelt 10,000 tons yearly. This factory is not being built on the Urquhart pattern. If anyone on looking over his factories, and the living quarters of this Administration and highly qualified technical staff, had asked Urquhart: "But where will the workers live?" he would probably have considered him a madman; the question of houses for workers never worried him. But in the construction of the Bogomolov works, the first thought has been given to the workers' homes. Last year 600 thousand roubles were spent on house-building, and this year one million will be spent. Forty houses are already completed, including several large "communal houses." The co-operative buildings, the school, hospital, club and communal dining rooms are also finished.

Health of Workers to Be Safeguarded.

The smelting of copper in the new factories will be carried on by means of burning sulphur, ore, whereby sulphur gases will be given off. In Karabash, built by Urquhart, these gases poisoned the population for several miles around. But in the Bogomolov works, they will be collected for the production of sulphuric acid. And we can rest assured that the representatives of the Defence of Labor, who, in Urquhart's days had to wink at much that went on (otherwise the factories would have been closed down), will see to it that the health of the workers in the new factories is safeguarded.

The Bogomolov works are the last word in technique and the builders have already established the conviction of American copper-smelting works. Ore, coke, and other materials, essential to smelting, will be supplied continuously by means of the conveyor.

Very soon three of the works in the Urals will have an output of 21,500 tons of black copper. To cope with this increased output, the Kyshtimski works will be enlarged and a new electric refining works opened in Sverdlovsk. For the above reasons, the anti-Soviet campaign of Urquhart, without his "cultured" assistance, have managed not only to restore, but to develop the output and development of copper in the Urals.

IF HENRY GEORGE WERE A GERMAN.

The Share, by Franz Oppenheimer. Vanguard Press, 100 W. 13th.

Oppenheimer is most of all a single taxer. The only thing the latter has peculiarity over the average "Little Leader" is the fact that he is a college professor of a conspicuously un-Protestant university, and was for a number of years a Privat Docent. Otherwise he is the average Georgist, hard and honest thinking.

True to this tradition, Oppenheimer gives a vivid, and on the main correct diagnosis of the way in which certain states arose. By certain general and classical types—the first state, normal peace, the subjugation, commercial drive state, built on ocean commerce and the like. This is the best part of the book, and justifies its reprinting by the Vanguard Press. It is an old book (1908), and thru the decade of discussion of Russian affairs it is almost the only piece of pure publicistic comment to have emerged, by which we can judge it with considerable accuracy.

Judgment is made easier by the reason that Oppenheimer was historically honest. He did not dodge any issues. He started with a definition of the state which is clear and distinct, and essentially that of the class of serious worker:

"The state, completely in its genesis, essentially and almost completely during the first stages of its existence, is a social institution, formed by victorious group of men on a defeated group, with the sole purpose of regulating the dominion of the victorious group over the vanquished, and securing itself against revolt from within and attack from abroad. Teleologically this dominion had no other purpose than the economic exploitation of the vanquished by the victors." (page 15) Compare this with the Communist Manifesto, Chas. H. Kerr edition, p. 42, and with the Origin of the Family, Private Property and The State, by Engels, same publisher, p. 130.

But Oppenheimer speedily brings in his two essentially false corollaries: (1) The class state arises only thru war; the conquering tribe mulcts those of the conquered tribe, and sets up the state by that means; (2) The oppressive State depends entirely on the existence of large landed estates.

• • • •

In regard to the first of these, Bukharin comments: "The theory of L. Gumplowicles and F. Oppenheimer, which traces the origin of classes from extra-economic force, overlooks the difference between the abstract theory of society and the concrete facts of history. In actual history, the role of the extra-economic use of force (conquest) was very great, and had an influence on the process of class formation. But in a purely theoretical investigation this condition may not be considered. Assuming that we are analyzing society only, "abstract society," in its evolution, we should find classes developing here also (as of course the state, too, even according to Oppenheimer-V. S.) by reason of the so-called 'internal' causes of development mentioned by Engels. Therefore the role of conquests, etc., is merely a (very important) complicating factor." (Historical Materialism, International Publishers, p. 286.)

• • • •

In other words, when the material development of peoples has reached a point where private property is possible and efficient, classes develop, by one means or another, and bring with them the state. Besides this answer of Bukharin's we may show cases where states develop by other means than tribal war, and Oppenheimer's theory will collapse.

• • • •

There is much evidence (see Morgan, and others) to indicate that slavery thru debt, and classes of nobles, grew up from other causes than tribal wars. Especially the Chinese have developed classes and states, even feudal states out of primitive peasant proprietorship, out of communal proprietorship even; and these trace to other causes than wars of conquest.

But another refutation of Oppenheimer's first corollary is bound up in the collapse of his second theory, that about landed property. For Oppenheimer with strict logic, argues that if no sufficient indigenous people exists to be conquered, as in Australia, New Zealand and North America, and if impossibility of a slave class, or of homeless "free labor" is prohibited as in Australia and New Zealand, or if creation of landed estates of great size stopped, "as in Utah", (?) then no state can arise. Accepting Oppenheimer's premises, I see no way in which to escape his conclusion. His argument is good. But then, if since he wrote his book, the Australian, New Zealand and North American states begin to give such complete and irrefutable evidence of statehood as is found in suppression of strikes, prohibition of the importation of radical books, passing of anti-labor union laws, the shooting of Joe Hill, and all the other characteristics of a fierce class state, then Oppenheimer is wrong with Oppenheimer's theories of "conquest" and landed estates. If his ideas about these two things were correct, Utah, Australia and New Zealand should be no states, but places of what he calls "freeman's citizenship."

Like all single taxers, Oppenheimer saw the spread of "freeman's citizenship" thru the breaking up of the European great land holdings, due, if you please, to immigration from Europe to America which he thought would reach its end when there were "two masters to every one." There will be no 'surplus value' for the capitalist class, because the laborer himself can form capital and himself become an employer." (!) Perhaps we have been unjust to Henry George, who would agree with Oppenheimer as to the ills of capitalism resulting from the land monopoly, but did not express any such naïve program as to how to bring it about.

There is no need to add more. Sundry minor points of Oppenheimer's doctrine are consonant with his main arguments. He is certain that there is no such thing as unemployment caused by upsetting forces of labor saving machinery (p. 283) and also that there is no danger of Malthusian overpopulation. He scoffs at Marxism as the proletarian overstatement of the antithesis to the bourgeois defense of private property, and considers himself, true liberal that he is, above the classes, harmonizing them. Above all things he is prejudiced against violence.

—VERN SMITH.

LITERARY NEEDLEWORK.

The Time of Man, by Elizabeth Madox Roberts. Viking Press, New York. $2.50.

This novel, which was mentioned for the Pulitzer prize and hailed by some bourgeois critics as "great," suffers from too much literary excellence. It is all beautiful writing minus the impact of life.

Consider the author's material. Among the hills of Kentucky, isolated from the rest of the world, there live semi-migratory, poor white tenant farmers. Their life is barren and naked, a desperate struggle with the elements and with their fellow humans for a wretched existence. These are the poor white trash that industrial civilization has forgotten and that a benevolent capitalism remembers, if at all, only to help dig their own graves. An ugly life, decaying, meaningless, with here and there some rigorous beauty struggling to bloom.

• • • •

And what does Miss Roberts do with this brutal ugliness? She pretticises it, she envelopes it in soft, soothing twilight colors and sounds, a monotone of beauty, melancholy and resigned. She etherealizes her characters, divests them of the flesh and blood that are humanity unlovely, stained and broken and she evades their emotions by simply talking about them from a safe distance where passion is distilled in a delicate mist. And all this hard life, driven cruelly against the soil, is wrapped, sans fangs and claws, in soft, sheltering sentences, langorous beauty.

Beauty. I felt a little sick at the end, hungry for a large, juicy slice of ugliness to make me feel alive again. The bite of an incisive mind might hurt, but it would draw blood instead of water.

• • • •

Consider, I say again, the author's material. Practically a virgin field from a literary standpoint, peasants whose speech is as rhythmically beautiful as the peasants which Synge's plays, is life more devastating and ironic in its implications than anything Thomas Hardy ever knew.

And then consider what has happened to all this in "The Time of Man." Consider the book's impeccable propriety, the propriety of lifelessness.

• • • •

To me "The Time of Man" presents an interesting social and psychological phenomenon. In its writing and treatment of its subject matter it is almost perfect example of the conventionally feminine cast of mind. It sees the peasant which Synge's playa, in life more devastating and ironic in its superficial emancipations. It is the sort of book which most of our women novelists will continue to write under a system of society which has emasculated their sex until their minds have become tethered to certain weaknesses and evasions that they have come to consider as uniquely and basically "feminine."

"The Time of Man" is of a piece with the writing of Willa Cather, beautiful literary needlework.

CHINESE MILITARIST FRONT COLLAPSES

Pacific Conference Demands Colonial Freedom

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE New York Telegram asks if Lindbergh is mad after reading the recent pleas of bombast from the Fascist dictator in which the motor-car commander declared that he wanted an army of 8,000,000 strong with which Italy would participate in a war that would make the rest of the nations sit up on their hind legs and obey their ears to all Mussolini's demands. The demand of international Fascism indulged in a last chuckle at the expense of the corpse of liberalism and the protests from our own home-grown Fascisti of democracy were few and far between.

PERHAPS Mussolini is mad but we are not aware that the sane Wall Street bankers loan money to lunatics. Indeed we know quite a few belligerent, the mentally healthy citizens who would be looked on with suspicion should they seek a loan from the same bankers that drop their millions at Mussolini's feet. And the reason why they loan their money to Mussolini is because, first of all, they will make a profit on the loan and secondly the money will be devoted to the strengthening of the system on which the bankers look with a benevolent eye.

COMING to think it over we are of the opinion that Mussolini is not crazy. Any more than Napoleon was. Or Kaiser Wilhelm. He might have been considered crazy had he appeared on the world political stage twenty years ago. Ever the former Kaiser of Germany in his palmiest days never brandished the sword as threateningly as Mussolini does. The explanation can be found in the shaky condition of capitalism in Europe and the inevitability of the spread of Fascist organizations to cope with the ever growing militancy of the workers. The issue in the future will not be between dictatorship and democracy but between the Workers' and Farmers' governments and the black dictatorship of capitalism.

STILL the government has not made an appropriation out of the treasury for the relief of the victims of the Mississippi flood. Perhaps this money is being saved for the pork barrel. Hoover is in a panhandling mission and in the meantime the people of the flooded areas are suffering. Woe unto the unfortunate. Their misery will excite public compassion for a few days, then some other novelty hoves in sight—this time it was Lindbergh—and the world jogs along as usual.

IF the Washington administration was as much concerned with the fortunes of the poor farmers in the Mississippi Valley as it is with those of big business in Mexico, Nicaragua and China, it would not wait to tap the public purse before lending aid. It spends millions of dollars on expeditions to those countries, in going to the extreme of shooting down defenseless people simply because they stand in the way of Wall Street's interests. It's a capitalist government and there is no more humanity in it than there is in the soul of a pawnbroker.

LAST Sunday our ministers had a good time telling their flock that Lindbergh crossed the ocean without a mishap because he believed in god. We do not know whether he does or not but his father didn't believe very much in superstition. Had Lindbergh failed the spiritual aviators would have declared that "the sins of the father are visited on his children, yes, even unto the fourth generation." Anyhow, for once the preachers had a topic that had almost universal interest.

AMBASSADOR HERRICK made a good thing out of the Lindbergh feat. This flunkey is about the most colorless of the United States ambassadors and unless there happened to be some new development in the debt controversy between Washington and Paris, he was lucky to get notice in the society columns. But when Lindbergh have in sight he stuck to him like glue to a blanket and then pulled off an anti-Bolshevik speech in the form says of the aviator's reflected glory. Clever stunt! Millions who read the drivel were thinking of the flying flier and assumed that "them's my sentiments."

WHO dats not for the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti is approaching and there is reason to fear that the authorities intend to concentrate their attention on this threatened legal murder of two innocent workers during the week-end. EARL BROWDER OF AMERICA ELECTED CHIEF SECRETARY

Plan Fight Against New Imperialist War

(By Nationalist News Agency)

HANKOW, May 31.—Fourteen and a half million of the organized workers of Japan, Korea, France, Russia, China, the United States, England, and Java were represented by delegates to the Pan-Pacific Trade Union Conference which opened in Hankow on May 20 and closed on the 26th. The Australian delegates were prevented from attending by the refusal to them of passports by the Australian Government. The Mexican delegates were delayed en route. The Philippines Labor Federation cabled greetings and expressed regrets over the fact that they could not appoint delegates to attend the conference on account of their own Congress.

Demand 43-Hour Week.

Important decisions made by the conference included (1) support of the Chinese revolution and protest against imperialist intervention; (2), struggle against the Pacific war danger; (3), support the national liberation movements in India, Korea, Java, the Philippines, and Latin-America; (4), economic program including 43-hour week, social insurance protection for women, abolition of child labor, equal wages for equal work, freedom for organization of labor inspection, and abolition of punishment fines; (5), establishment of a permanent secretariat to distribute information and to prepare for the Pan-Pacific Congress next year.

Five members including the secretariat of which Earl Browder, of America, was elected the chief secretary, and Aplain of Russia, the assistant secretary. The other members include Nichiuri of Japan, Bai Shou-chen of China, and Gardes of Australia. Su Shou-chen is the head of the All China Labor Federation and is Minister of Labor of the Nationalist Government.

CHARGE WORKERS WITH SEDITION IN THIRD FRAME - UP

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 31.—Pete Muselin, Milan Resetar and Anton Zima of Woodlawn, Pa., were arrested Thursday on a charge of sedition, and were released on $2,000 bond each. Warrants are out for two others.

Muselin was arrested while working in a barber shop in Ambridge. Resetar called at the police headquarters after he learned that a warrant was out for his arrest. He was employed in an Ambridge bakery shop at the time the warrant for his arrest was issued.

Armistic Day Case

The three defendants were arrested together with eight others last year in a raid on three peaceful houses and were released o none-thousand dollars bail each. The indictments were quished before they ever reached the courts. They were then rearrested charged with the same "crime" and together with eight others last year in were released on $1,000 bail each. The indictments were quashed before they ever reached the courts.

They were then rearrested, charged with the same "crime" and again released on ball which was increased to $5,000 each for the three defendants. The charges were so flimsy that Judge Heller of Beaver County considered it necessary to dismiss the case for the second time before it reached the courts.

Third Time Same "Offense"

The Lenard Lonsdale Interests, however, did not rest in peace and caused the arrest of the three defendants for the third time. The charges now are exactly the same as on the two previous occasions.

About two weeks ago Muselin was arrested on a trumped up liquor charge and released on $1,000 bail dollars

Central Executive Committee of Workers [Communist] Party Appeals for Emergency Fund for the Daily Worker

The following telegram has been received from the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party:

DAILY WORKER
33 East 1st Street
New York City.

Chicago, May 31, 1927.

Comrades:

The jailing without bail of Comrades William F. Dunne and Bert Miller is part of the general campaign of frightfulness against the Communists and the left wing in the labor movement. It is part of the world campaign of the imperialists to cripple and silence the vanguard of the working class in preparation for the most frightful slaughter of the masses the world has ever seen in order to again try to decide the issue of which jackal pack shall have the right to exploit the rest of the world. Joining in this attack are the hordes of black reaction—the patriotic societies, the courts, the police, the agents of capitalism who have placed themselves at the head of labor unions in order to betray them. They want to silence The DAILY WORKER because it has done its duty to the working class by unmasking their murderous schemes, because it has exposed the betrayers of labor and fought for the building up of militant unionism in order to resist the wage cuts, the lengthening of hours and the general lowering of the standard of living. In face of this assault against The DAILY WORKER every comrade must rally to its support and exert all his or her energy to raise funds to rush to the management of the paper so that our only English daily, the gauge by which our party is estimated by the working class, may survive and grow stronger in order to lead in the great struggles that are coming.

Especially is it imperative that The DAILY WORKER be saved in view of the new struggle in the needle trades—the furriers' strike—that begins this week. It would be an immeasurable calamity to enter this fight without The DAILY WORKER.

Comrades, rally to the support of The DAILY WORKER!

Do not let the enemy silence us by their savage attacks and their atrocious actions in jailing our comrades without bail on such a flimsy pretext as they have used against us.

CENTRAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY OF AMERICA.

Comrades, the emergency is still grave. Our comrades are still in jail, denied even the privilege of reading books or newspapers. We are carrying on the work to the best of our ability, but you must continue to rush funds for relief during this critical situation. Send contributions to 33 East First Street, New York City. We are perfecting plans for a fund to insure The DAILY WORKER, but until we are able to get this work under way you must to help.

MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE, DAILY WORKER.

Imperialist Acts Against China Will Be Exposed Friday

The truth about the present situation in China will be told at a mass meeting at Central Opera House Friday evening, under the auspices of the Workers (Communist) Party.

Scott Nearing, Betram D. Wolfe, Harry M. Wicks, M. J. Olgin, Alexander Trachtenberg, Juliet Stuart Poyntz, Charles Krumbein, Rebecca Grecht, a Chinese speaker, and a representative of the Young Workers League will tell the truth about the revolution in China. The machinations of the imperialists for a new world war and the real meaning of the break in the Soviet-British relations will also be explained.

William F. Dunne, one of the editors of The DAILY WORKER, who was scheduled to speak, is now in jail as a result of a conspiracy on the part of the patriotic societies of this city to kill The DAILY WORKER. He will speak if out on bail by that time. Jack Stachel will be chairman.

There will be an admission charge of 25 cents. Tickets are on sale at the office of the Workers Party, 108 E. 14th St., Jimmie Higgins Bookshop, 108 University Place, and the Prolhelt, 80 Union Square.

Engineers to Mediate Pay Raise Demands

The demand of 30,000 locomotive engineers on the eastern roads for a 15 per cent wage advance has gone to mediation under the Parker-Watson Act, it was announced yesterday. Reports that a compromise of 7½ per cent might be made with mediation of certain working conditions would be agreed to, were denied.

It is suggested that the board of mediation will grant the engineers the 15 per cent advance, which other railroad crafts have won.

JOHN BROPHY PROVES LEWIS STOLE ELECTION AS PRESIDENT OF U. M. W.

Usurper in Office, Progressive Leader Charges in Analysis of National Vote

PITTSBURGH, May 31.—Only by the most astounding and bare-faced election crookedness in the history of the American labor movement is John L. Lewis president of the United Mine Workers today.

This is the giat of serious charges levelled against Lewis and his associates in an open letter by John Brophy, Progressive leader, to the membership of the Miners' Union, made public here today. He asks a complete recount of the vote by a committee of 5 mine workers.

"Gross irregularities," "self-evident frauds" and "vote stealing" on such a scale, Brophy asserts, that he has been led to believe that "the men now occupying the offices of International President, Vice-President and Secretary Treasurer were really not elected and that the Save the Union candidates were duly elected the international officers" of the Miners' Union, are detailed with figures in proof of the startling expose.

Eastern Kentucky

Eastern Kentucky, with no tax-paying members, cast 1,635½ votes out of a reported "membership" of 2,665½, and every vote, including the "half" was for John L. Lewis.

Glaring Examples

Northern West Virginia, with 877 tax-paying members, cast 14,164 votes, nearly all for Lewis; Tennessee with 483 taxpaying members registered nearly 4,000 "votes" for Lewis and 16 for Brophy; one third of the locals in western Pennsylvania listed as voting were dead; in the anthracite Brophy was given, in some cases, the vote cast for him while the vote of the membership, whether voting or not, was cast on ther for Lewis.

These are highlights in the remarkable statement from Brophy, who was Lewis' opponent in the 1926 election. He was given 81,000 votes to 178,000 for Lewis.

Brophy's statement in full will be published in tomorrow's DAILY WORKER.

SACCO and VANZETTI SHALL NOT DIE!

Progressives Winning Convention Delegates

Progressives have elected 116 delegates to the next International Typographical Union convention to 16 for the Administration, Wahesta Party, according to advices here from Charles Balh, secretary to International President Howard. When complete returns are in, it is expected that the progressives will have a majority.

Syracuse, home of the reactionary former president, James Lynch, reports a clean sweep for the progressive slate with two delegates elected to the convention.

Big Six of New York elected all four progressive delegates with German-American and the Hebrew-American locals each electing two progressives.

C.P.R. Railway Clerks Conferring on Strike

MONTREAL, May 31.—Conferences were being held today to avert a possible strike of 12,000 railway clerks on the Canadian Pacific.

Four New Limousines for Mayor Walker Cost More Than His Year's Salary

Mayor Jimmie Walker has four shiny new limousines, valued at $7,000 each. With chauffeurs and upkeep, they cost the city $36,481 in the past year, $11,000 more than the workers pay Jimmie for being the world's best dressed mayor.

All this, and more is explained in a report of the city affairs bureau of the republican party, in a broadside against Tammany made public yesterday. Four other city officials spend more of the city's money on private cars than they get as wages. All told about $1,000,000 a year is wasted on official limousines.

Even under the extravagant Hylan regime, no such heights in graft were reached, assert the republicans, themselves keen judges of graft through intimate knowledge.

SMITH IN PLAY FOR POWER IN TRANSIT PROBE

White House Ambitions Are Involved

Today Robert Mitchell, DAILY WORKER traction expert, resumes the exposure of the forces behind the present transit hearings and the effort to raise fares to 8 or 10 cents. The personnel of the transit commission is reviewed, revealing their intimate connections with Al. Smith.

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

Evidence that the present Transit Commission, conducting the so-called open hearings, began its career under the guiding star of the big bankers is to be found in the approval with which Wall Street greeted the appointment of this commission.

Nothing is as sensitive as the stock market. During the Hylan battle against the traction trust, the stock of the Interborough and B. M. T. had moved listlessly on the exchange. There appeared to be no solution to the tangle of knotted opposition until Al. Smith came to the rescue and cut the knot by dumping Hylan.

Immediately on the appointment of the new transit commissioners in April, 1926, the stocks of the I. R. T., the B. M. T. and the Third Avenue Lines advanced as if under inspiration. The I. R. T. stock in particular rose to a new high level for the year. How Wall Street, moreover, viewed the Smith-Walker administration is clear from the fact that traction stock began its systematic rise immediately after the 1925 elections.

Who are the men in whom the financial interests are so confident?

In the first place they are through and through Al. Smith men. Secondly they are part of the new machinery which the controlling banking interests had set up under Al. Smith in order to clean house in the old corrupt Tammany Hall and to set up a

CHANG RETREATS FROM HONAN AS FENG TAKES 20,000

Powers Rush Troops to Stem Nationalists

Highlights of Today's News.

1.—Hankow Nationalists smash militarist line in Honan; take 20,000 prisoners; Peking authorities withdraw all troops from Province.

2.—Imperialists plan war on advancing Nationalists; land 2,000 Japanese troops at Tsing-tao; rush British battalion to Tientsin.

3.—Wu Pei-fu's troops rapidly joining Hankow Nationalists.

4.—Chang Tsung Chang, Shantung-ese war-lord abuses Soviet Union citizens captured with Mme. Borodin on Pamlat Lenina; threaten hunger strike if not immediately released.

5.—Cabinet considers removal of U. S. embassy at Tientsin, controlled by Chang Tsing-chang, Shantungese war-lord, or Shanghai, controlled by Chiang Kai-shek, in view of imminent capture of Peking by Hankow Nationalists.

PEKING, May 31.—The entire Northern line in Honan Province has been smashed by the twofold onslaught of the Hankow Nationalist troops, commanded by General Feng Yu-hsiang and Yang Sen. The Northern authorities announced today that all troops would be withdrawn from the Honan front as a result of decisive defeats that Chang Tso-lin's troops have suffered at the hands of the Hankow Nationalists.

The prediction made by Eugene Chen and Michael Borodin that Peking will fall by midsummer seems to be justified in view of the recent victories of the Nationalists in Honan. The retreat of Chang Tso-lin's forces means the complete surrender of all of Honan Province south of the Yellow River, of Anwhei Province and the entire Lung-hai railway.

Capture 20,000.

The straw that broke Chang Tso-lin's Honan lines was the capture of Kunghsien yesterday. (Kunghsien is an important arsenal 40 miles west of Chengchow and a strategic point in the Nationalist drive against Peking).

The Northern troops were crushed between General Feng's troops advancing from the Shensi border to the west and General Yang's forces marching north from Hsakow.

Reports received from the front yesterday state that Hankow troops took more than 20,000 prisoners and large quantities of ammunition when the Northern troops attempted to prevent them from crossing the Lohe River. The retreat of Chang Tso-lin's forces be fleeing in panic.

Imperialist Plan War.

The imperialist powers are preparing to rush troops and warships to the Peking-Tientsin area in view of the imminent fall of Pewing.

Japan has already dispatched 2,000 troops to Tsing-tao from Manchuria and is holding two thousand more marines in readiness for immediate transportation to Peking and Tientsin, while British military authorities have ordered a battalion of troops from Shanghai to northern China.

General Smedley Butler, commanding the American marines in China,

GREETINGS TO COMRADE PAUL CROUCH

Comrade Paul Crouch, who was sentenced to a long term in the penitentiary for his agitation among the soldiers in the United States army, is slated for release from San Quentin prison today.

The DAILY WORKER, now under fire from the same capitalist enemy that railroaded Comrade Crouch into prison, welcomes him back into the fighting ranks of the militant workers again.

The ideas that Paul Crouch went to prison for cannot be crushed by imprisonment. They burst all bonds because they are pushed forward by the hammer blows of ordered events.

At this moment in world history when the days of war are being numbered, and the struggling masses are being put in shape for another defense in which millions of the world's working class are destined for the slaughter, Comrade Paul Crouch is invaluable. Every militant fighter is needed now more than ever. We feel sure that his place in the ranks awaits Crouch for the struggle ahead.

The DAILY WORKER greets and welcomes you, Comrade Crouch.

The DAILY WORKER STAFF.

Those wishing to send greetings to Paul Crouch can wire him in care of Edgar Owens, 1212 Market Street, San Francisco, California.

OF PRESIDENTIAL FOR LOYAL

This series of ten articles, of which this is the eighth, deals with the exploitation of the industrial insurance agent and methods to combat the evils of weekly payment life insurance. This series is the result of numerous requests to publicize the details of the swindle and fraud to which the agent is subject in common with the policyholder.

Article VIII.

By CHARLES YALE HARRISON.

The existence of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents should justify, in the eyes of the Insurance Department, the creation of an insurance workers' protective organization.

Every year millions of dollars are paid to the presidents' association in the form of fees. This money is taken from the current "mutual" expenses and paid to this association which is the official lobbying machine for the insurance trust.

The New York Department of Insurance is the recipient of thousands of letters of complaint from ex-insurance agents in which specific charges of fraud and withholding of salaries are made.

In 1916, the companies involved spent millions of dollars in crushing the strike which occurred that year. In the annual report issued the following year no mention was made regarding the expenditure of this "cooperative" money.

No Help From Insurance Dept.

The agent has nothing to hope for from the official departments of Insurance which are in existence in the various states. It is a known fact that the departments operate in favor of the company at all times. It is also a well-known fact that after his names in office the average superintendent is taken care of by his late charges.

Preparatory to the creation of an agents' union it is well to bear in mind that the legal machinery of the insurance department will be used to crush any attempt at organization.

In order to forestall this, an aroused public opinion must be created among the millions of policyholders who are defrauded by the "Big Four."

The legislative machine is always at the beck and call of the insurance trust. The legislators who took part in the famous Armstrong Insurance Investigation were bought off in order to avoid the investigation of "industrial" insurance practices in 1906. Hughes, Cox, Tully and others were all taken care of following the 1906 insurance scandals.

At the time of the Insurance upheaval in New Jersey the assistant attorney general was one Edward Dickinson Duffield, a cunning lawyer and shrewd politician. At that time it was considered good form to take pot-shots at the insurance business, providing such shots contained "constructive" criticism.

The Prudential Life Insurance Company is a New Jersey corporation and Duffield came forward with a plan for federal control of insurance companies. This was distasteful to the Prudential hierarchy.

Bought Off

The following year, on the expiration of his time in office, Duffield was made general solicitor for the insurance company. This was in 1906. In the same year he was appointed 4th vice-president. In 1913 he was made vice-president. Five years later, in 1918, he was appointed vice-president and associate general counsel for his faithful work in crushing the 1916 strike.

In 1922 Duffield was appointed president and has acted in that capacity ever since. Among the "Big Four" the Prudential methods are the most shameful. It still indulges in the iniquitous deferred dividend system which was declared illegal in New York by the Armstrong Committee.

Of such material is a life insurance president made.

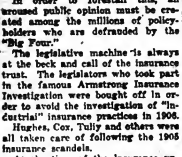
"Friend of Workers"

In one of its official pronouncements to its field staff the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company says, "Today the Metropolitan with its millions of industrial policies in force is recognized as the friend of the workingman."

Who recognizes this? The forty million defrauded policyholders? The sixty thousand agents who are bulldozed and ordered not to organize?



Haley Fiske, the Metropolitan president has something to say on the question of the agent when he says, "Criticism has frequently been directed at the comparatively high expense rate at which industrial (weekly premium) insurance is conducted. A large share of this expense is the result of the services extended to the insured in sending agents to their homes each week to collect the premiums. The history of industrial insurance has amply demonstrated that this system of house-to-home collecting is necessary. . . . No substitute has yet been found for the faithful agent who goes from house to house."

Robbing the Faithful.

In the face of this statement Mr. Fiske authorizes the deduction of 15 million dollars annually from the pay envelopes of his so-called faithful agents.

We have Mr. Fiske's words for it that the company cannot exist without the field worker. He is the pillar upon which the whole insurance structure rests.

Only the unionization of the industrial insurance worker will end the unfair and harsh conditions under which he works.

Upton Sinclair to Fight Boston Ban on His Book "Oil"

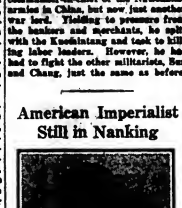
Upton Sinclair is expected to come East and fight Boston's ban on his latest novel, "Oil." A. C. Boni, publishers of the book, are waiting final word from the author of so many workers' stories. The Bonis will back Sinclair's legal test of the Massachusetts censorship provisions under which Boston police have acted.

"Oil" is a well hewed chunk of contemporary life. It may in time be recognized as a first rank historical novel. It crowds the growth of the oil industry through the national scandal period under Harding into its pages. It gives flashes of the movie world, of the prophets and profits of new religion, and of the currents in the labor movement.

Boston booksellers say that some of Sinclair's women characters are too outspoken in their gold-digging philosophy of love and life—hence the ban. They deny that the author's attack on private profit system of industry and government brought the action against the book. After two police detectives confiscated copies of "Oil" in one shop, practically all Boston book dealers withdrew the volume from their shelves.

"Oil" follows the fate of Sinclair Lewis' novel "Elmer Gantry," which satirizes the protestant ministry, and other recent works which are alleged to fall under ancient obscenity clauses of Massachusetts law.

"Fascisti, Inc." Of Britain Goes Out of Business



LONDON, May 31.—Unable to do much exposure of the relative strength of the British labor movement, the "British Fascisti, Inc.," has gone out of business. It was organized about two years ago to have openly contemptible of the other organizations whom it seemed of being too moderate in not making bloodshed a principal method of settling workers' assistant and compositions.

They themselves, however, limited their activities to beating up stalwart Labor members in their leisure shirts. The oath of allegiance prescribed that members, regardless of "life, person or self-interest," should forward the cause of fascism.

This positive looking chap is none other than Chiang Kai-shek, formerly commander-in-chief of the Nationalist armies in China, but now just another war lord. Yielding to pressure from the bankers and merchants, he split with the Kuomintang and took to killing labor leaders. However, he has had to fight the other militarists, Sun and Chang, just the same as before.

American Imperialist Still in Nanking

John K. Davis, U. S. Consul in Nanking. He is largely responsible for the lying propaganda about Nationalist atrocities there and has remained behind to tell Chiang Kai-shek what American big business wants him to do.

Barbusse In June Labor Defender Urges Sacco and Vanzetti be Freed

"The execution of Sacco and Vanzetti can be considered hereafter only as a tremendous challenge to the entire public opinion. It will engender everlasting hatred on the part of the working masses and be condemned by all loyal, wise and enlightened spirits whom it will transform into enemies of a system of domination which employs such methods. . . . There are all the moral and humanitarian as well as tactical reasons why the supreme American power should spare these two victims."

These are the words contained in an appeal for Sacco and Vanzetti by Henri Barbusse, the internationally known writer and agitator of France, written especially for the June issue of the Labor Defender, which is just off the press, upon the cabled request of the editor.

Special For Sacco-Vanzetti

The June issue which is a special Sacco-Vanzetti number contains a series of features dedicated to the famous case that has aroused the indignation and protest of millions of workers. The cover design by the noted labor artist Fred Ellis, is a striking expression of the powerful hand of labor stretched ou tto save the two Italian radicals. The issue contains a lengthy record of the organizations and individuals of prominence throughout the world that have protested the planned execution; the speech of James P. Cannon, secretary of the I. L. D. at the Chicago protest meeting, and a review of Felix Frankfurter's analysis of the Sacco-Vanzetti case by Thurber P. Lewis.

Articles On Arrests

In addition, the June issue contains articles on the campaign against labor leaders in Hungary, written by Martin Abern, an article on the arrests and imprisonment of the five workers and ladies garment workers in New York, on the case of Jack Rubenstein, Passaic strike leader, by Hollace Randsell, the continuation of the life of Eugene Barnett, the Comrade I. W. W., letters from prisoners, and a full page of photographs of the labor defense movement throughout the world, in addition to the usual host of illustrations which have added to the popularity of the Labor Defender.

Copies of this issue can be obtained at labor bookstores, local offices of the I. L. D., or from the national office of International Labor Defense, 80 E. Lincoln Street, Chicago, Ill. A copy is easily worth the dime it costs.

K. K. K. BARRED FROM PARADES

Warren Investigates Queens Riot

As a result of the clashes between Ku Klux Klan elements and their opponents and the death of two fascists during Memorial Day celebrations on Monday, Police Commissioner Joseph A. Warren stated yesterday that he believed that both the Klan and the Fascisti should be barred from parades, especially when wearing their white robes or uniforms.

The police commissioner yesterday started an investigation of the clash between police and catholics with members of the K.K.K. along the line of march during the Memorial Day parade at Richmond Hill, Queens on Monday. In spite of the fighting attitude of the Klan no clubbing took place although that is a usual feature of police action when workingclass organizations are involved.

The Klan is angry nevertheless, feeling that the police had no right to interfere with their parade. It is believed that the entire matter will be white washed.

Chang Retreats From Honan; Loses His Army has visited Peking and is reported to be making plans for the dispatch of American marines from Shanghai to north China in preparation for the Nationalist offensive against Peking.

Wu's Troops Join Hankow.

The success of the Nationalists appears assured in view of the persistent reports that Wu Pei-fu's troops are rapidly joining the Hankow armies. Wu Pei-fu's army has been regarded as a buffer between the Nationalists and the northern war-lords and the defection of Wu's troops places nothing between the Nationalists and Peking, but the demoralized army of Chang Tso-lin.

Imperialists Abuse Soviet Prisoners.

MOSCOW, May 31.—A report received here today states that the forty-seven members of the Soviet Union steamship, Pamiat Lenina, who are being held prisoners at Peking in an attempt on the part of the imperialist powers to goad the Soviet Union into war, have appealed to the court at Tsinanfu, protesting against the appalling conditions of their imprisonment.

Chang Tsung-chang, Shantung war lord, who arrested them, has offered no explanation and has failed to produce any accusation against the prisoners.

Declare Hunger Strike.

The prisoners declare that they will go on a hunger strike today unless they are informed of the reasons for their arrest and immediately released. No word has been received of Mme. Borodin who was removed from the Pamiat Lenina and sent to Peking.

Arrest Soviet Citizen.

HONG KONG, May 31.—A citizen of the Soviet Union, who has been engaged in organizing peasants' unions in southern China, is reported to have been captured at Pashing. What action the right wing in control of the town will take is unknown.

Concentrate Japanese Troops.

TOKYO, May 31.—Increased concentration of Japanese soldiers in China is believed near today.

The tide of battle is turning against the Mukden troops, upon whom Japan is relying for protection of her citizens in Shantung, General General Yata at Tsingtao reported today.

Two thousand Japanese soldiers have already been detailed to Tsingtao. Two additional battalions of 1,000 men will be sent to Tientsin soon, it was believed.

Mme. Sun Heads Relief.

(By Nationalist News Agency).

HANKOW, May 28 (Delayed). — Madam Sun Yat-sen is heading a movement to create an organization for the relief of wounded soldiers returning to Wuhan from the Honan front. She plans to establish a base hospital here.

The Chinese and foreigners here are cooperating in the formation of a Northern Expedition Red Cross Service, with Madam Sun as chairman. Two hundred persons, including American, British, Chinese, and German doctors, attended a meeting here yesterday to devise means of aiding the Red Cross.

Unofficial U. S. War on Hankow.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—The removal of the American legation from Peking in view of the imminent capture of that city by the Hankow Nationalists is under contemplation by the government, it was announced today.

The cabinet which is bitterly hostile to the Hankow Nationalists contemplates the removal of the legation either to Tsinan, which is controlled by Chang Chung-chang, Shantung war-lord, or Shanghai, which is controlled by Chiang Kai-shek.

Add Your Name to the $100,000 Roll Call List!

The $100,000 Roll Call Drive was undertaken to raise the sum of $100,000 in the shortest possible time, and to give every friend of the defense a chance to be listed on this Honor Roll. More and more money is needed to successfully carry on the campaign to defend the imprisoned Coalminers and furriers.

A dollar is not too much from any worker. The number of workers who can give one dollar reaches into the hundreds of thousands. Many of these however are delaying their contributions thinking that they still have time. The Joint Defense & Relief Committee wishes to impress upon all the sympathizers that the money is needed immediately. Send in your dollar today. Do not wait any longer. A dollar from every worker will help to keep our martyrs from prison.

Ben Gitlow's Father Dies of Pneumonia; Radical Many Years

Louis Gitlow, 59, father of Ben Gitlow, member of the Central Committee, Workers (Communist) Party died here last Saturday afternoon after a short illness. He was buried in the Workmen's Circle cemetery on Sunday.

Louis Gitlow had been active in the labor movement of this country for many years. He was among the founders of the Voice of Labor, one of the first papers issued by the socialist labor party. When the socialist party was formed he joined that organization, later affiliating with the Communist Party, being a member until the day of his death.

Comrade Gitlow's widow, Kate Gitlow, is secretary of the United Council of Workingclass Housewives.

Brotherhood Bank Officially Yields to Union Smasher

WASHINGTON, May 31. (FP).—Herman E. Willis, assistant grand chief engineer and national legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who has been a director of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers' Title and Trust Co. in Philadelphia, confirms the report that the bank has been merged with Mitten Bank. When the deal becomes effective on May 31, President Mitten of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. and of Mitten Bank, will have control of the combined bank, but he will retain five of the directors and the president and most of the staff of the B. of L. E. Title & Trust Co. The former president of the Brotherhood concern will be operating vice-president of the B. of L. E.—Mitten Bank.

How Mitten, who controls the street railways of Philadelphia and maintains a company union which he claims is not hostile to the regular trade union—the Amalgamated Street and Electric Railway Employes—has been able to supplant the Brotherhood bank is a story which Mitten himself at in a circular which he has sent to Washington press correspondents and labor officials.

"This bank," says Mitten in a letter to President Prenter of the B. of L. E., published in this circular, "was originated through the discovery of 1,000 trainmen and conductors who, through payment to conductors on the cars for P. R. T. preferred stock, showed an ability to save an average of $5 per week. P. R. T. stock is limited in quantity, other means were necessary to be found in order that these workers' savings be directed into savings accounts, where every additional savings account of the worker is a certain and substantial blockade against Bolshevism, and is therefore the greatest possible support to the present property-owning system."

Having used his street car conductors as stock salesmen, Mitten proceeds to work on receiving tellers for his bank. They gathered in the savings accounts on every street car on Mitten's lines and soon cut off many of the chief sources of deposits upon which the Brotherhood bank had counted. When this process had gone far enough, he made a proposal to admit the Brotherhood bank to a consolidation, as he had earlier taken over a labor bank known as the Producers' and Consumers', which had failed. The Brotherhood bank was sound, but was not growing so fast as had been anticipated. After much discussion, the Brotherhood bank's directors recommended that the merger be approved.

The Amalgamated Street & Electric Railway Employes does not share Mitten's good opinion of the Philadelphia situation. President Mahon has expressed himself as looking upon Mitten as a union-buster—a term which Mitten quotes in his circular without naming Mahon. The chief of the trade union has asserted that Mitten tried to smash the union in Buffalo some years ago. Mitten replies that organized labor needs "more enlightened management" to guide it to economic efficiency.

LONDON, May 31.—The British Government will be held responsible for all losses incurred by citizens both of the Soviet Union and Great Britain due to lack of time of the Russian Trade Delegation in winding up its financial affairs.

They Are Celebrating the Fifteenth Anniversary of the "Pravda"

GUSSEV CHIEF SPEAKER—BUKHARIN ANSWERS ZINOVIEV ATTACK

By WILLIAM F. KNUDE.
(Federated Press Correspondent of "The DAILY WORKER")

MOSCOW, May 9th (By Mail).—The fifteenth anniversary of the publication of the Bolshevik Daily, "Pravda," was celebrated today at a public meeting held in the "Hall of the Columns" of the Dom Soyus (the "Union Temple" of the Soviets, built before, formerly the most exclusive club of the nobility). Thousands of people again squatted from the more modern gentry brought up in the polished white marble columns that give this famous hall its name. Above the platform on which sat about two hundred of the more prominent members of the "Pravda" staff and Party organs, was suspended a big red and gold streamer: "Greetings to the Bolshevik Pravda!"

Fifteen years ago the Bolsheviki realized that the time had definitely come when a break must be made with the opportunist, liquidatory Menshevik with whom they had thus far been "united" in a single Social Democratic Labor Party. This "unity" deserves the quotation marks because never had two horses pulled so contrariwise as did this team; both wings, representing widely divergent ideology and generally advocating diametrically opposite tactics, they had maintained their own organizations and press, and Party history had been a long sequence of almost twenty years of inner-Party struggle over every vital question confronting the young Russian labor movement.

Lenin Calls For Break.

There had been splits before which, under the pressure of conditions, had been breached—but now that the Mensheviks proposed the virtual liquidation of all the revolutionary phases of socialist activity Lenin called for the final break. The Bolsheviks formed their own Party, rallied behind themselves the overwhelming mass of the Party membership, and began publishing, in Petersburg, their own daily—"Pravda."

From the very first the paper had to fight desperately against police suppression. Its very title was chosen first under the conditions of this fight, a dormant police permit for the appearance of a paper by that name being utilized to make the start. Time after time the paper was confiscated, members of the staff and distributors imprisoned, but the paper appeared just the same under a slightly changed title and the chase went on until it was ended by the victorious proletarian revolution. Now the birthday of "Pravda" is also "International Press Day" for the Communist movement, a fitting tribute to the first and greatest of Bolshevik dailies.

Pravda's Services Reviewed.

Great ovations greeted Comrade Ulianova, sister of Lenin, who is re-

[illegible] Central Committee of the Communist Party, and M. I. Bukharin, Editor-in-Chief. The chairman was Uglanov, Secretary of the Moscow Party organization. The real principal speaker was that old Communist Comrade Gussiev, known to a great many American Communists for his services to the American movement. He is head of the CPSU of the Central Committee Department for the Press it was his function to review the work done and yet to be done by the "Pravda" and the other leading Communist press in the Soviet Union.

He began by threatening, human comity, to speak 15 minutes on the 15 years of "Pravda's" history, one minute for each year, and then two hours or more of excursions through the realm of the Soviet literary world. Then he promised to do no such thing and confined himself, after a short statement of the significance of "Pravda" to the movement, to a detailed analysis of the tasks and trends in the present day Communist press in the Soviet Union.

The 15th anniversary, he said marks a turning point in the history of "Pravda" and our press generally. Our task now embraces the enlightenment of the vast masses of workers and especially the raising of the cultural level of the peasant people. Quoting Lenin he reminded the great audience that when "Iskra" was started there were perhaps 40 revolutionists grouped around it in all Russia. "Proletar" already had about a thousand such. "Pravda" when launched enjoyed the active support of tens of thousands, which have now grown into millions. The task of our press is to find suitable forms for the mobilizing of these no longer thousands but millions. The mobilizing of these masses for the demands of the hour—rationalization, economy, lowe prices—is the immediate task of our press.

The Rabcor's Job.

We all realize, he continued, that the worker-correspondents are one of our most valuable and indispensable ties between our press and the masses. But this movement, which now includes between 250,000 and 300,000 worker, peasant, red army and youth correspondents is beginning to show some signs of development in a direction not beneficial to its real function. There is to be observed a tendency towards separatism, although the Worker-Correspondent movement is something exclusive and apart from the toiling masses instead of their voice. The whole well-developed structure of worker correspondent circles, conferences, organizers, special press, etc. faces the danger of institutionalism, and this must be avoided. The renaissance has been that during the last year their ranks have not grown at the desired tempo, there is often an inclination to narrow the membership of worker-correspondent circles down to only Party and Youth League members, and in turn this has its reflection on the one hand in a certain conservatism and even resentment among worker correspondents towards proposed new forms of mass work by the press, and on the other in neglect by the special work-correspondent press organs of the specific problems of their own field in favor of general politics, thus invading the field of the regular Party press. Several glaring cases were cited: of a Leningrad worker correspondence organ allegedly reporting on a gubernia conference actually devoted only a few lines to this and the rest of the paper to China, Italian Fascism, world economies, etc. Everything except work-

This cartoon illustrates the changes in the name of Pravda, organ of the Russian Communist Party, made necessary by the constant attempts of the police to suppress it. The names on the paper in the successive pictures are: Pravda, Workers' Pravda, Northern Pravda, Pravda of Labor, For Pravda, Proletarian Pravda, Path of Pravda, Worker, Laborers' Pravda, Pravda, Page Pravda, Workers' Soldier, Proletariat, Worker, Workers' Path, Pravda.

How to Reach the Masses.

The speaker than discussed some of the new methods of developing mass contact with the press that had been initiated successfully. The chief of these was the putting of each factory, separately, on public exhibition through the columns of the press in such a way that worker correspondence grew so far beyond the more limited circles of the WPC movement itself that personal letters were sometimes received from 30 per cent of the workers engaged in a plant.

The method employed, as in the case of the paper in Tver, is to call for a public discussion of each factory as a basis of determining which is best, and which is carrying on the most conscientious efforts to improve. The campaigns, lasting from two to six weeks depending on the size of the enterprise, are very thoroughly prepared for. After thorough explanation in the Party nucleus and enlisting the full collaboration of the Trade Union Committee, a general meeting of the workers is called at which the proposal is explained and discussed. Then enlarged "Production Conferences" are held in each department to prepare for the presentation of material, and finally after the whole factory has been discussed its open affairs on the basis of the questions solved by the conferences, correspondence and all others who can be moved to do so write in to the paper what they have gleaned of the views of the workers and also whatever details of fact they can contribute. These letters are frankly published and sometimes regular press debates ensue.

At the close of the campaign another general meeting is called and the results are subjected to discussion. In the case mentioned where almost a third of the workers wrote personally to the newspaper 42 definite suggestions were made, of which 22 were accepted at once and carried out to an extent of 80 per cent. As a result, also, the friction which existed between the workers and the technicians was liquidated.

Opposition Scorned.

Following Gussiev's speech there were short addresses by Comrade Ulianova and others including a factory worker who had taken part in the illegal distribution of the original "Pravda." Thereupon Comrade Zinoviev, who had been sitting at the extreme rear of the platform, asked for the floor. It was granted without question and, as an old "Pravda" collaborator his reception by the audience was fairly cordial. This was his first appearance since his crushing defeat in the XV Congress of the CPSU and the VII Enlarged Executive of the Comintern, and there was great interest in what he would have to say. He did not leave his hearers long in doubt. Assuring them that in the event of a war on the Soviet Union every comrade (of the Opposition) would be found in the solid united Party front, he attacked the Party policy in China and especially the "Pravda" which, he said, did not give sufficiently earnest, attention to the war danger and did not print his article on May First. By this time dissatisfaction embraced the whole audience and shouts of "Enough!" came from all parts of the hall.

Not Fooled By Pretty Speeches.

No sooner had he wound up his remarks than Nicolai Bukharin went to the tribune—where he was given a tremendous ovation. He had not intended to speak he said, but the unhazard of attitude of Zinoviev made an immediate reply necessary. To come before an open mass meeting in such a critical time with an attack of this sort was a crime against the Party. The charges made by Zinoviev he refuted completely, and the pretty phrases about "united front of the Party" were exposed by comparison with Zinoviev's actions. A resolution endorsing the policy of the Central Committee and censuring the Opposition was then offered from the floor and adopted with only two dissenting votes.

As is customary in such celebrations, a very fine concert program followed the serious part of the meeting. Each guest received a souvenir anniversary packet of "Pravda" and its other publications. This drawing taken from the 15th anniversary supplement of "Pravda" illustrates the hectic experiences of the sheet with the Tsarist and Kerensky police. In its history between 1912 and 1917 it had to change its name sixteen times of which six changes were after the February revolution. The sequence of the various titles and the number of issues through which they lived is as follows: "Pravda" (Truth) 440 days, "Workers' Truth" (17 issues), North-ern Truth (31 issues), Labor [illegible] (30 issues), For Truth (51 issues), Proletarian Truth (15 issues), Path of Truth. (91 issues), Worker (one issue) into a magazine, Laborer (one (85 issues), which was closed down on the eve of the World War. Then came "Pravda" once more under the old name, changed June 19, 1917, to "Sheet of Truth," on June 26 to "Worker and Soldier" which was closed down on August 5, and followed in quick succession by "Proletarian," "Worker," "Path of the Worker," and finally, on Nov. 8th once more "Pravda."

THE FACTORY NUCLEUS IN USSR

By KARL REEVE

MOSCOW (By Mail).—The functions of the nucleus of the Russian Communist Party and of the trade union organization in a state-owned factory in the Soviet Union, are, of course, not the same as functions of the Communist nucleus or the trade union organization in a factory in a capitalist country, or in a privately owned enterprise within the Soviet Union. In the state owned enterprises in the Soviet Union—and the large industries, as well as the transportation are entirely in the hands of the state—the proletarian state is the employer.

The workingclass, through its organizations, the Communist Party and the trade unions, has therefore, as one of its functions, the increasing of the production of the factory, the elimination of all points of friction, as well as the protection of and advancement of the interests of the workers.

The basic unit of the Communist Party in a Russian factory is the factory nucleus, and the highest party body in the factory is the general meeting of the factory nucleus. The general meeting elects the nucleus bureau, consisting of no more than 9 members, and 3 candidates and this bureau functions between meetings of the general party membership. The bureau elects an Organization, an Agitprop, a Work Among Women and other committees, which are responsible to the bureau, which in turn, is responsible to the general meeting of the factory nucleus. In a later article I will give definite details as to the organization of the party nucleus as well as of the trade union within a Russian factory. In the present article I will describe the chief functions of the nucleus. The Rayon (county or section) committee of the party maintains contact with the factory nucleus and with the nucleus bureau, and is the higher party unit. (There are six rayons in Moscow). The functions of the rayon committee will also be described later.

The party nucleus is the fundamental party organization and consists of at least three members (in small enterprises). The principle tasks of the nuclei are: a) "To work among the masses, to constantly exercise the party influence among the non-party masses of workers and peasants and explain the party slogans and decisions; to determine the needs and demands of these masses, to raise their political and cultural standard, to draw the masses into the process of socialist construction, into the Soviet, co-operative, economic and other work."

b) "The inner party work, carried ont on the basis of inner party democracy; to study the decisions of the party congresses and conferences, to draw the membership into active participation in the decision of all questions confronting the party as a whole as well as the local party organizations; to promote people to the leading party, Soviet and other positions, to educate the membership in the Leninist spirit; to draw new members into the party, and improve the social composition of the organization by a thorough study and control of those admitted to the party."

c) "To direct the work of the non-party organizations and participate in the Soviet, economic and co-operative work of the enterprise, village or institution" (extract from latest draft rules on the nuclei, which have been discussed by the Leningrad, Moscow, Nishni-Novgorod, Tula, Ivanove-Vaasiesensk Vologda, Zlatoust, Tver, Vodsk and Smolensk organizations. The amendements proposed by these organizations and approved by the Department of Organization and Appointements are included in the quotation).

The general membership meeting, the highest governing body of the nucleus, is called by the bureau, or its own initiative or by request of one third of the membership. Nuclei meetings are held regularly, at least twice a month, and decisions are binding if at least half of the membership is present. A majority vote decides all questions. Each meeting elects a presidium of a few members, or a chairman and secretary. The general meeting indorses or amends plans of work submitted by the bureau, considers applications for membership or to become candidates, discusses and acts on expulsions and disciplinary measures, elects delegates to party conferences occurring within the rayon, receives reports from the Young Communist League, the party fractions, and individual members on their work. The general meeting discusses political, economic, trade union, party and local questions.

The general meeting elects the Bureau, for a six months period, consisting of nine members and two or three candidates, a large number being allowed only with the consent of the rayon party committee. If the nucleus is small, consisting of less than seven members, a secretary is elected instead of a bureau.

In order to better carry on the work among the non-party masses, the nucleus periodically conducts open meetings and attempts to draw active non-party workers into the political study circles and schools, and tried to give active members or workers responsible positions in the carrying on of the work in the factory, particularly those who are workers, farm laborers or poor peasants. Non-party workers who have the confidence of the workers and stand near to the party are nominated for elections in the non-party organizations, as well as party members. The best elements are drawn into the party. The nucleus at all times attempts to draw the non-party masses into the discussion of the problems of the Soviet Union as a whole. "By overcoming the narrow craft and localist sentiments, and conducting thorough systematic educational activities and imbuing the masses with a sense of their common interests the nucleus secures their support for the party slogans and decisions," (Extract from same as above)

The nucleus participates in all the educational and cultural work carried on within the factory, such as clubs, libraries, literature evenings, entertainments, question and answer evenings, coal and wall newspapers, etc. The nucleus does all it can to increase subscriptions to the press and increase the number of worker correspondents, and carries on educational activity among the latest.

Opposition in Bulgar Parliament Wins Many Seats Despite Terror

SOFIA, May 31.—In spite of the existence of the governmental reign of terror, 32 Opposition candidates were elected to the Bulgarian parliament.

Since the crushing of the Radical Agrarians and the assassination of the late Premier Stambouliski the election of a majority of reactionary members to the parliament has been a foregone conclusion.

Fifteen of these elected as Opposition deputies are now in exile, victims of the white terror. It is not expected that they will be recognized by the new parliament.

Calles Boycotts U. S. A. In Retaliation Against Fleecing of Government

MEXICO CITY, May 31.—A decree has been signed by President Calles forbidding all Mexican governamental departments to purchase supplies of any character, either directly or indirectly, from the United States. Ambassador Sheffield and attaches of the embassy refused to comment officially on the decree.

President Calles stated that the decree was issued because "The United States Government has established a systematic embargo upon all goods purchased by the various departments of the Mexican Government."

HOOVER'S OFFICE HAS DEFENSE FOR AFRICAN SLAVERY

WASHINGTON, May 31 (FP).—[illegible] American capital should accept the [illegible] fers made to it by Ras Tafari, ruler of Abyssinia, and proceed to employ great numbers of slaves in the development of rubber, coffee, copper and other resources of his empire, it will do so with elaborate moral explanations.

In the files of the government at Washington is a confidential report of recent date, on the subject of slavery in Abyssinia—the one significant omission from the report on that country which the Commerce Department has just published.

Nice Life.

"The slaves," says this anonymous report, "in the capital, Addis Ababa at least, do no useful work, their conception of their whole duty to their owners being the ornamental function of running beside him on the few occasions when he rides forth upon his mount. It is an easy life, and the class of people used as slaves desire no other.

"It seems superfluous to wax vitriolic over the time-honored customs of an ancient African empire. The last slave country in the world must be induced to change its ways by more gradual methods. A custom like this is not to be uprooted by stroke of pen or sword."

Disarm Natives.

Having thus reported on chattel slavery to an administration which claims direct succession from the Great Emancipator, this investigator quoted at length the opinions of a foreign official who had lived long in eastern Africa. This foreigner recommended that Abyssinia rather be deprived of arms and ammunition as a means of stopping their slave-taking habits.

"The War Minister of Abyssinia," says this report, "never rides forth without at least 2,000 slaves running behind his horse waving long wands and shouting their paens of joy in praise of their master. A poor man may possess only one small item of human property, but that one must assuredly be ever at his side to do him homage.

"Nor is the lot of the slave unenviable. To bring a good price, or to retain his value, he must be well fed. He is content, on the whole, with his position in life, albeit because he can visualize none better.

All for Civilization.

"To all these peoples slavery is, far from being an evil, a most desirable and essential part of the social structure. They would even maintain, were it put to them, that the condition of the slave is much improved over their aboriginal status, their status being considerably elevated from that of wild animals to the relatively high civilization into which they are purchased.

"It is to be anticipated, therefore, that the eventual eradication of slavery from the countries of this district is scarcely to be seen by any person living at present."

These conclusions were applied not merely to Abyssinia but to Afghanistan and the Hedjas, in southwestern Arabia, to which large numbers of slaves, especially children, are sold by Abyssinian raiders and Arab traders.

Will Send Minister.

In its report dated July 25, 1926, the Temporary Slavery Commission of the League of Nations says that Abyssinia is the only Christian country in which slavery is still legalized. It credits Ras Tafari with taking preliminary steps toward their gradual liberation, but it offers advice to him, in a series of proposed measures for curbing his purpose effective. It might help him to encourage his principal chiefs to free their own slaves; also to register all slaves and to declare free those not registered; finally to abolish "the legal status of slavery," but with the reservation that "for a fixed period" such freed slaves might be compelled to continue to serve their masters.

The League Commission's report also declares that forced labor can only become free labor, in a safe economic condition, when small holdings of land are made accessible to freedmen, and when cash payment of adequate wages is assured by foreign companies that may develop the resources of the country with the labor of serfs and slaves.

These facts were in hand when the Washington administration decided to ask congress to enable it to send a minister to Abyssinia.

Smashing the Imperialist Front in China!

The black picture of a defeated and disorganized nationalist movement, pictured by Frederick Moore, New York Times correspondent, and other mental scavengers of imperialism is shattered by the lightning flashes of victory as the militarist front in China collapses before the Hankow advance. The temporary arrest of the victorious advance caused by the treachery of the renegade, Chiang Kai-shek, who tried to turn a part of the nationalist forces over to the imperialist invaders, has been overcome. The collapse of that venture was the reason for the hasty dispatch of British, Japanese and American forces to Tsing-tao and Tientsin and points up the Yangtze in preparation for repetitions of the bombardment of Nanking.

In spite of and against the forces of predatory capitalism the nationalist armies march from victory to victory and again raise high the hopes of the revolutionists and anti-imperialists of the world. The converging of the two nationalist armies—the main force from Hankow and the Shensi batallions of General Feng Yu-siang—at Changchow, the intersection of the two main railroad lines, gave the national liberation movement control of all Northern China and assured the collapse of the armies of the bribed bandit generals in the service of American, British and Japanese capital.

This magnificent victory will drive the imperialists mad with fury and they will hesitate at no atrocious crimes, they will resort to any unscrupulous provocation, in order to stem the rising tide of revolution.

Now, more than ever, the working class of the great powers must insistently demand that all invading forces be withdrawn from China so that the workers and peasants may be left unhampered to organize their own government and exterminate the bandit gangs who for years have been used by imperialism to thwart the desires of the masses of Chinese.

Herrick Assails Bolshevism Because It Is Enemy of War

Myron T. Herrick, American ambassador to France, now shining in the reflected light of young Lindbergh, whom he supplied with a pair of pajamas and a room at the American embassy after the famous ocean flight, upheld the tradition of his kind in a Memorial Day speech in France. American ambassadors are famous for their total ignorance of political affairs. They merely parade at foreign courts as puppets, without brains, without comprehension of the deeper currents that control politics, while the real work is done by a small staff of trained, if obscure, office workers and alleged experts. The public utterances of ambassadors are supposed to contain some political content; to deal with political and economic relations between the home countries and the countries to which they are sent. With the customary quackery that distinguishes utterances of American ambassadors, this ex-president of the American Bankers' Association, only briefly and in the most superficial manner, referred to relations between France and the United States. Not one word was uttered about the real problems confronting the world; nothing about China, or the mandates policy of the league of nations, or the war debts, or any of the other unsolved questions that daily rise to plague the imperialists.

As a substitute for a political discourse such as is expected from ambassadors of any other land, this ornament of the Ohio gang, that launched the period of administrative "revelry" with the inauguration of the late Dr. Harding as president of the United States, stole the anti-Bolshevist thunder of the fiendish blackguard braggart, Mussolini. Mentally poverty-stricken, this ambassador of Wall Street pilfered the very language of Mussolini as reported from his latest harangue before the Italian chamber of deputies.

MUSSOLINI (Rome, May 26th)	HERRICK (Paris, May 30th)
We have taken measures in the struggle against malignant tumors, 10,000 ships from the East have been disinfected—from that East which brings us so many pleasant things like yellow fever and Bolshevism.	Modern methods of scientific research are being applied to the scourge . . . of cancer. These modern scientific methods are now, somewhat belatedly, being applied to the scourge of Bolshevism.

Like that other good and faithful servant of the American capitalist bandits, Matthew Woll, Ambassador Herrick eulogizes the die-hard tories of Britain for their raid on the Soviet trading corporation and the breaking of diplomatic relations with Russia.

While the irreconcilable conflicts on the political and economic field bring nearer the time when the rapacious nations of the world will fly at each other's throats in a new world war, there is one policy on which they are agreed; that is the necessity for a vicious fight against Bolshevism, for the imperialists all know that Bolshevism is the only force today capable of thwarting the conspiracies of the imperialists and that to the extent that the workers of the great powers and the oppressed nations come under its influence they will refuse to be cannon fodder in the imperialist conflict that is drawing ever nearer.

Bolshevism is the only force on earth working for peace. It does not play the filthy and contemptible game of the social-democracy and indulge in pacifist illusions that only play into the hands of the war-mongers, but openly proclaims to the workers the revolutionary slogan of Lenin: "Turn the imperialist wars between nations into civil wars against capitalism." Only through the revolutionary struggle can the workers hope to wipe from the earth the real causes of modern wars.

This is known to all the spokesmen of imperialism, hence their savage drive against Bolshevism throughout the world. The conspirators hope to weaken and if possible destroy the organizations of the working class so they can again lead millions of workers to the slaughter. Anti-Bolshevist propaganda is war propaganda and the anvil chorus of imperialism assails the revolutionary movement of the international proletariat because it is preparing the way for new wars.

The Herricks, the Wolls, the Mussolinis, the Joynson Hickses, and others of their stripe are trying to pave the way for new attacks by the master class upon the Communists of the world.

Already in the United States the attack has begun against the most dreaded spokesmen of the revolution here, The DAILY WORKER, that is now under the combined fire of the police, the courts, the jailers, the patriotic societies and all the forces of death and destruction that can be mobilized to do the dirty work of Wall Street.

The reply of the workers to Herrick's and Woll's apeing of Mussolini must be unstinted support of The DAILY WORKER and the preparation for the mass struggle against the threats of war that are now ringing throughout the world.

"Through the Alps Lies Italy—But Mussolini Lies All the Time"

Mussolini has frequently stated that he is for peace, with honor of course. Part of the material required to fortify the mythical honor of this depraved monster and his capitalist backers in Italy and America, is an army of five million men by 1932. In this respect he follows the example of the other imperialist powers, which hide behind a veil of pacifist phrases a feverish preparation for war.

THE WORLD WAR—A WAR TO PREVENT ALL WARS (?)
WHAT ABOUT THE WAR ON CHINA?

By MARGARET COWL.

According to Professor Bogart (Direct and Indirect Costs of the Great World War), quoted before a Senate Committee, the total cost of the war for all countries, including the Central Powers, was two hundred eight billion, four hundred five million, eight hundred fifty-one thousand, two hundred and twenty-two dollars ($208,406,851,222). Of this amount $22,072,214,125 was advanced to the allies. This cost includes the expenditure sustained by the United States which is $22,625,252,843, plus advance to allies $9,455,014,125, a total of $32,080,266,968.

It is estimated by Bogart that 22 billion dollars is nearly enough to pay the entire cost of running the United States government from 1791 up to the period of the world war. These figures safely substantiate the statement that the war cost the United States "considerably more than a million dollars an hour."

Cost in Human Life.

About 25,000,000 men, women and children were killed in the World War. (Half of these were killed on the battlefield). Prof. Bogart estimates that there are 10,004,771 "known dead" and that of the 5,983,600 reported as "prisoners or missing," at least half may be added to the "known dead."

During the nineteenth century, there were 13,000 battle days in nine wars in which time 4,448,300 men were killed. The World War in about 1,500 days killed nearly 13,000,000 on the battle field.

The Spanish influenza epidemic of 1918, the direct outcome of the war, killed nearly 8,000,000 people. Over 500,000 soldiers in the French and German armies contracted tuberculosis during the war. There are still hundreds of thousands of ex-soldiers suffering the effect of trench fever and shell-shock.

This is the price paid by the peoples of the world for a "war to end all wars."

If this was a "war to end all wars" then why did Great Britain send 80 warships, America 55 and Spain one warship just recently to China? What are 15 battalions, one division and three brigades and three artillery divisions doing in China today? Why are the months of guns smoking again? What business have American troops to shoot down Chinese men women and children who are fighting for liberation? "To protect life and property" we are told. Workers cannot be enjoled into believing this slogan as a justification for the presence of such fighting forces in China, to protect lives of foreigners in China. The presence of such armed forces means nothing else but actual intervention in China by the above named countries.

What Communists Say.

The Communist International states:

"The Chinese Revolution with its tremeudous sweep and its enormous influence upon the colonial world and upon the European proletariat, has caused an extraordinary intensification of the crisis of capitalism. The seriousness of the crisis has caused the imperialists to join forces and compelled them for the moment to bury their differences beneath their rifles and bayonets. Their crusade against China, their plans for a criminal provocation of the Soviet Union place the cause of peace in the whole world at stake."

American imperialism is playing a significant role in this intention. It is to the interest of American imperialism to maintain a situation in China where the exploitation of the Chinese workers would be unhindered.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1926 states that there were 18,893 marines stationed in China, Haiti, Cuba and Nicaragua. Undoubtedly since the struggle of the people in China for liberation, this number has been increased.

According to the study of the "Cost of government in the United States" made by the National Industrial Conference Board, it is found that five years after the close of the war expenditures were 359 per cent higher than in the last pre-war year.

Edward B. Rosa, formerly of the Bureau of Standards, gave the war expenditures of the United States government for 1919-20 as 92.83 per cent of the total expenditures.

According to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1925, the expenditures for past wars and preparation for new wars cost the United States government over 80 per cent of its total expenditures.

Leads to World Conflict.

The continuation of military intervention in China by the imperialists, will inevitably lead to a great imperialist war.

"The Soviet Union is prepared to accept the most drastic measures for the prevention of war and competition in armaments and calls upon the other powers to do this. The Soviet Union proposes that the standing armies be completely abolished, that war industry be done away with and a real control set up consisting of representatives of the people, of the workers, of the trade unions and of the peasants."

The workers in the United States should actively support these proposals and immediately demand the withdrawal of American warships and troops from China.

movement of workers and sympathetic elements. They trusted more to the puny voices of "respectable" citizens.

ONE would imagine that in a case of this kind, where two lives are in jeopardy, that all sections of the workingclass movement regardless of differences of opinion, would be able to unite on the simple platform of: "Save Sacco and Vanzetti." Regardless of what harm those puny-brained busybodies may be able to do there are enough militant workers in the United States to make it clear to the capitalists of Massachusetts that they will consider the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti an act of vengeance against the workingclass and plain murder. The agitation to secure their release must be renewed with increased vigor.

"Patience" and the Poets

Gilbert and Sullivan Again Take a Crack at Hero Worship

PERKE Hamberg Productions, Inc., are reviving Gilbert and Sullivan. They have a company outfit, to put "Patience" on at the Theatre Masque. That's too close to Greenwich Village. Somewhere out in Bronx would have been safer. For "Patience," one of the lesser known of the Gilbertian operas, swings a wicked lash over our long haired friends. If you hear your versifying neighbor running down "Patience," believe him not, his wrath is highest praise, and proves the whip bites deep.

The action revolves around Reginald Bunthorne (James Watts), a flashly poet, an arrant knave, who knows he is a fraud, and Archibald Grosvenor (Joseph Macaulay), the idyllic poet, who is a Narcissus, and so unfortunate as not to know it. These are prototypes. Their children are still with us, damn the luck.

Both are flouted, mocked, dissected flayed, and stabbed in the back, to the tune of some very pretty lyrics, sung by remarkably pretty girls.

But the women who trail after these poets are not spared either. No wonder this play has been unpopular. None who worship matinee idols could enjoy it, and the idols too, would have to feel that the most unkindest cut of all was the ridicule that indirectly drops upon them because of the quality of their conquests. The curtain rises on an elaborate jeer at the women who fall for poets. The ladies enraptured by Bunthorne, stand around the stage, dressed in semi-Greek costumes, in poses more goofy than Greek, and sing—"Twenty love-sick maidens we—maidens much against our will." Who can take credit for winning what is evidently easy to win?

As foils to the poets appear the Heavy Dragoons, glaring with "prime colors." How come they march on the stage doing a goose step as stiffly as the House Guards of the Hohenzollerns? Is this as it was in the beginning, or has some Irishman bored from within the Perke Hamberg corporation?

But if the Heavy Dragoons balance their light brained rivals, they are not allowed to get away unscathed. Within a few minutes the fact is brought out that these man-hunters are passionately fond of candy, and that they regard their red coats as primarily lures for ladies. In their midst, too, silliest of them all, is a certain Lieutenant, the Duke of Dunstable. Even the stupid dragoons find him stupider than any (He proves it later by his choice of a wife), and yet his very presence in the regiment is a reproof to the Englishman's love for lords—the poor freak had to enlist to escape the constant monotony of cloying flattery and adulation.

In the end the whole mob of them nearly succeed in making an aesthete of the only proletarian in the play, Patience, the milkmaid. She winds up by marrying the idyllic poet, the not innil he reforms, and agrees not to write any more of his junk.

I don't know whether the Gilbert and Sullivan partners were really conscious revolutionists — probably not. Probably their poetry and music were based merely on the rule of thumb theory, "Where you see a head, hit it." But it is gratifying to see that so many of the heads which fell beneath their baton strokes are those which have worn the crowns of popular adulation during one of the most hypocritical periods in English history.

The singing is particularly clear and sweet. Vivian Harte, as Patience, and Bernice Mershon as The Lady Jane were especially good.—Vern Smith.

GOV. SMITH USING TRANSIT PROBE TO ADVANCE HIS POLITICAL FORTUNES

ment efficient administration. The previous Transit Commission had been the old line of which Francis Walker and his circle were the figureheads. Al. Smith, the present transit commissioners and the former police commissioner, McLaughlin, are of the new Tammany Hall lineage.

Gilchrist Is A Pal of Smith.

John F. Gilchrist, the chairman of the commission, is an old Tammany standby, but principally the personal friend of Al. Smith. That he is the right-hand man in the governor's move for a larger slice of graft than can be obtained in New York State, becomes evident to anyone who notes carefully the details of the hearings now being conducted at 270 Madison avenue. He is a friend of Thomas L. Chadbourne, millionaire lawyer for the B. M. T. and one of its controlling powers.

Let Gilchrist explain if he will, the basis of this friendship between himself, the paid servant of the people, and this Mussolini of the traction game, an individual so contemptuous of the public as to insult common intelligence with his obvious perjury in testifying that he had no knowledge of an "understanding" to purchase I. R. T. stock by his own group.

Godley Tammany Man.

The second member of the commission is Leon G. Godley. Godley is a Tammany faker from Brooklyn and another of Smith's personal friends. He was appointed by the governor over the numerous other recommendations of Big Boss McCooey, who had made the fatal mistake in 1925 of backing Hylan. Godley, in his earlier years, was associated with McAneny and a firm of traction lawyers. He and Gilchrist make a handsome pair to back up the desperate efforts now being put forth by the Catholics, the Knights of Columbus, the Militia of Christ, etc., in their attempt to place a Catholic in the White House.

The desperate affort being made by the Catholics to revive their waning influence through the prestige of running a presidential candidate goes a long way to explain Al. Smith's temporary "break" with the traction ring. Wall Street, with its hand on the national economic pulse, is in a position to gauge accurately the approach of the coming depression.

Is Smith Doomed?

Frightened at the many signs, the financial interests have given the order at the last moment for the re-election of a republican. Smith is being forced, however, to take up the challenge to his ambitions by a movement far larger than himself. Unless he had behind him a large and organized backing, Smith would not dare to come out with even such a camouflaged opposition to the traction interests as is now being displayed by the hearings. The question still to be cleared up is: Who is behind Al. Smith's open challenge to the traction ring?

The third member of the commission is Charles C. Lockwood, a staunch republican. The appointment of a republican would seem to belie the statement that this is entirely a Smith comcission. Quite the contrary is the fact. At the time the present Transit Commission was appointed in April, 1926, it was stated that Lockwood had not even been consulted as to whether he would accept.

In With Untermyer.

Lockwood's fame dates back to the building tradas investigations of 1921. The attorney conducting the prosecutions was Samuel Untermyer. It is an open secret that Untermyer is Smith's under cover man, manipulating the governor's forces as a labor of love and admiration. Lockwood's connection with Untermyer is of a more than ordinary nature as will become clear in a moment.

Lockwood is also a personal friend and great admirer of Frederick Ecker, first vice-president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Ecker is likewise an Interborough director, one of the three members of the board who represent the bond holders. This struggle between the directors on the board representing the bondholders and the other irresponsible, non-stock holding directors, who are merely using the railroad as a basis for plundering the public, has already been noted.

During the recent I. R. T. strike, it was Lockwood who played the game of the group represented by Ecker. Acting under the inspiration of Ecker, Lockwood, it will be recalled, was then the one who came to the fore in issuing statements "against" the Interborough.

Lockwood, Untermyer, Smith, McLaughlin, the members of the Transit Commission are working hand in glove with this group of big finance capitalists to reorganize or check the traction ring which last September by means of corrupt voting of stock perpetuated themselves in power.

The game that Al. Smith, through the Transit Commission and with the able assistance of Samuel Untermyer, is playing is a game for high stakes. Prospects of the presidency are the issue. The control of the whole traction system is the stake. But who is pulling the strings?

Cops and Finks in Raid on Furriers Offices in Newark

NEWARK, N. J.—May 31.—The Furriers' Union office here was visited by right wing officials and members of the police department who attempted to frame up the left wing members. Being unsuccessful, they took it out of the hide of a slim youth who happened to be present in the office.

Three of the gangsters beat up the boy, who weighs no more than 100 pounds. While this was going on, Hilton Corbett, Sam Adelman and Frank Wenarsky, representing the right wing International, stood outside giving orders to the police.

The next move on the part of the gangsters was to attempt to place a certain document in the desk of the secretary. After being discovered they gave up the attempt. Another furrier who was just entering the office was set upon and beaten, even worse than the youth had been a short time before.

Jobless Furriers Asked to Register Today at Joint Board's Offices

All unemployed fur workers are urged to register at the office of the Joint Board, 23 East 22nd Street any time after 2 p. m. today. The registration will continue until the end of the strike. Jobs will be assigned in the settled shops according to the order that the workers register.

Special shop lists are being sent to the chairmen of all independent and fur trimming shops. The names, address, local and ledger number of all the workers in the shop should be placed on the list and immediately returned to the Joint Board. From these lists special working cards will be issued without which no worker can return to the shop after the one day stoppage that is being called in sympathy with the strike of the workers employed in the association shops.

FURRIERS READY FOR BIG STRIKE ON SCAB SHOPS

Woll Busy Seeking Cop Protection

The general picket committee of the Furriers' Union held their organization meeting last night at Astoria Hall, where arrangements for the coming strike were discussed.

The committee will start their work immediately in preparation for the struggle. In numbers it equals the famous general picket committee of the 1926, having the same amount of enthusiasm and fighting spirit. Ben Gold was present and told the assembled workers what their tasks would be. All those who were present pledged to fight until victory is achieved.

The Joint Board announced last evening that a general member shop meeting would be held Thursday evening right after work where the final mobilization for the strike will take place.

At last night's meeting of the Joint Board, plans for the struggle were discussed at great length and the union machinery was declared to be ready for the general strike.

Woll Wants Scabs Protected.

According to reliable information reaching The DAILY WORKER at a late hour last night, Matthew Woll, Hugh Frayne, and Edward F. McGrady, the American Federation of Labor committee to disrupt the furriers' union, will appeal to Police Commissioner Warren today for protection for the scabs they have hopes of furnishing to the bosses to break the strike. When informed of this last night, many active members of the furriers' union just grinned and said they did not expect anything different from strikebreakers.

Another move on the part of the A. F. of L. strikebreakers with the cooperation of the bosses was the distribution yesterday in all association shops, leaflets of the bosses issued by the A. F. of L., urging the workers not to go on strike.

Woll—Boss Cooperation.

The leaflet is written in a bulldozing tone and says that workers joining the strike will be dealt with severely by the union. It ends: "Remember! All workers remain at work!" Many workers commented on the fact that the only ones McGrady was able to get to distributing the leaflets were the bosses.

The Joint Board announced yesterday that strict control of all workers will be in force during the strike. Arrangements are being made to know the whereabouts of every worker at all times due to a special system that is being installed thru a special method of centralization.

No Big Scab Jobs As Plumber Strike Enters Third Month

Not a big scab job in operation in Brooklyn was the boast of Plumbers' Local 1 yesterday on the eve of another membership meeting to consider new moves in the fight for the five day week and a $13.20 scale.

Picketing is in full blast, officials declared and so far employers' threats to import a thousand strikebreakers have not resulted in any big job going forward. The paralysis of the Brooklyn pipe trades is complete after the eighth week of the strike, they reported.

Plumbers' helperr are also waging a vigorous fight for the $9 scale and the five day week, loyally supporting the Brooklyn plumbers, as well as the Journeymen locked out in Queens and Richmond. Hundreds of members are being fed daily in the strikers kitchen at the Church of All Natioos, 9 Second Ave.

Appeals for financial support for the kitchen are being answered by local union and fraternal groups, President C. F. Millar announced yesterday. In one day alone Carpenters' Local 1164, Upholsterers' Local 76, Bohemian Bakers' Local 22, and Branches 6, 55 and 325 of the Workmen's Circle donated for the kitchen's support.

Bakers' local 3 of the Amalgamated Food Workers are contributing $80 a week.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—Delegates from labor unions and fraternal societies organized the Philadelphia Council for the Protection of the Foreign Born at a meeting held here over the week end. President James Maurice of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor was the main speaker.

Needle Trades League Holds Special Meeting At Manhattan Lyceum

A special meeting of all the Leagues of the Needle Trades has been called for after work on Wednesday, June 1st at Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East 4th Street.

This is a very important meeting where discussion on the latest developments in the present struggle of the needle trades will take place, particularly the mobilization of the entire left wing for the coming furriers' strike, and it is most urgent that every member of the League should be present.

Due to the fact that there is to be a reception and welcome for Moissaye Nadir at Central Opera House, we are arranging the meeting for right after work so that the comrades will be able to attend both the meeting and the reception. The meeting will start promptly at 6 o'clock and must adjourn at 8.

TRACTION BOSS SNEERS DURING TRANSIT PROBE

Chadbourne Refuses to Divulge Control

Thomas L. Chadbourne, reputed boss of B. M. T., toyed with Samuel Untermyer, transit commission counsel yesterday and then took the boat to Europe.

Just when he will return was left indefinite with Untermyer going through the motions of teeth gnashing over the loss of his quarry. Chadbourne had nothing to say about his control of either I. R. T. or B. M. T., and finally hid himself behind a statement prepared by his lawyer, refusing flatly to divulge "personal business," although it concerns the city's 6,000,000 straphangers pretty intimately.

But the banker did admit that he is making 7 per cent on his stock and hopes to make 8 per cent from the city's nickel-payers. But otherwise his knowledge of the traction stock was as obscure as that of any sweating, jostled subway rider, despite his investment of millions.

Chadbourne admitted speculating in subway stocks, having bought huge blocks on margin. "I am holding that stock," he declared calmly, "until the car riders pay more fare. And that time is coming."

Untermyer called for the "Hayden Stone people" after he was through with Chadbourne, but one and all they had simply ignored the summons to be present. However some junior clerks of the Chase National Bank were there. They told blandly of their bosses placing thousands of shares of subway stock in their names and said it was a usual banking process.

Close observers of the traction mess believe Albert Wiggin of the Chase National, one of the nation's largest banks, is the biggest figure in the B. M. T.

Dressmakers Local 22 Will Meet on Thursday

Local 22 of the I. L. G. W. will hold the first general membership meeting in months Thursday at 7 p. m. at Webster Hall. The meeting will be the occasion for a demonstration of loyalty on the part of the dress makers toward the Joint Board, and the discussion of futurs policies of the union.

Bishop Brown to Be Star Speaker At the Conference

Bishop William Montgomery Brown's appeal in behalf of The DAILY WORKER in yesterday's issue will be followed by a meeting at Webster's Hall, 4th Ave. and 11th St. next Friday evening with the venerable rebel as the principal speaker.

The threat against The DAILY WORKER has aroused the militant workers to rally to its aid and hundreds of meetings are being arranged all over the country for that purpose.

One of the outstanding figures in the drive to save the paper and put it on a firm financial footing is Bishop Brown.

His speech next Friday evening will be on the subject of "Evolution and Revolution" and those who have heard him speak since he went out to banish the spooks from the skies and the robbers from this earth know that he can hold his audience in rapt attention.

"At the rate I am growing young" declared the bishop in an interview to The DAILY WORKER, "I must stop fighting when I want to die."

Each fresh fight seems to add to Bishop Brown's vitality and when the attack of The DAILY WORKER broke, he hopped into it like a Spartan.

The DAILY WORKER conference will be attended by delegates from unions, fraternal organizations, left wing groups and Workers Party units.

Professional Patriots

By ROBERT MORSS LOVETT

Chairman of the Committee on Militancy, Order of the World War and Chairman of American unit of the organization's section. The DAILY WORKER is publishing a series entitled "America: Professional Patriots," gathered as a result of careful research by Sidney Howard and John Hearley, will provide the reasons for the zeal of the spies of the "patriotic" organizations.

VII

What They Do.

All these organizations exist primarily for propaganda. Their main activity therefore is printing literature and giving it great scope. Less common are public meetings, debates, furnishing speakers, conducting prize contests for patriotic essays or orations in schools and colleges, though they all figure.

The propaganda is chiefly against radicalism in all its forms, including LaFollettism, the child labor amendment, and industrial welfare bills. Next most conspicuous, is the attack on pacifism, usually coupled with radicalism, on the theory that the object of the pacifists is to disarm the United States "so that the Bolsheviks can take it." Restriction of immigration, and Americanization of the aliens who are here, come next in importance, though the efforts at Americanizing are very feeble. This activity is based on the assumption that most aliens are Reds (or most Reds are aliens—it works the same either way).

In the background of activities, but underlying them all, is hostility to the organized labor. Where organized labor is recognized, as it is in the National Civic Federation, it is only the conservative leadership that is encouraged and approved. The progressive and radical unions are regarded as part of the menace to "American institutions." They supported LaFollette in 1924, as did the Socialists, and the Communists were prepared to do. Therefore they are un-American. As Mr. Gompers and many of the conservative leaders also supported Mr. LaFollette, it put quite a strain on this interpretation, and caused Mr. Ralph Easley of the Civic Federation to explain and apologize for Mr. Gompers to his conservative associates.

This attitude to organized labor is natural to conservative business men. If the Reds are not opposed they may capture the labor movement "as they have in Great Britain." We might be fated not only with the prospect of a labor government at Washington, but a radical labor crowd in power. Therefore the safe course is to stop the evil at its source—organization. And quite aside from political power, trade unions are to be opposed by employers in their own businesses. So we find the professional patriotic organizations on the whole anti-organized labor and open shop. The Civic Federation alone is not, though anti-union employers are not on board.

Yet it would not do to express this attitude openly as part of a patriotic program. So it is concealed under attacks on the Reds. It is significant enough that not a single trade-unionist is on the controlling board of any of the patriotic organizations except the Civic Federation, which was organized to bring capital and labor together.

In addition to propaganda, some legislative work is done by a few associations, chiefly in opposing progressive measures such as industrial welfare bills and the child labor amendment, and in fighting efforts to repeal laws curtailing free speech. The total effort put into legislative work is slight compared with the propaganda work. It is also far less than a few years ago, probably because progressive industrial measures are so little agitated. Only the National Civic Federation and the Better America Federation of Los Angeles have ever gone far in that field.

Not Active In Politics.

None of the organizations takes any active part in open politics. The disastrous experiences of the Security League in that field in 1918 may account in part for their reluctance to tackle it, though it is probable that they are not fitted for such a major task. Their leading backers are prominent and influential in the regular republican and democratic organizations, and do not need help outside. It is significant, however, that almost all the patriotic societies united in opposing the LaFollette Movement in 1924, not by official action in most cases, but by matter-of-course references to it as "made in Moscow." It was just tied into the regular anti-red campaign.

Some few of the organizations have actively gone into the business of prosecuting radicals, or have aided or prompted public officials to do so. Most conspicuous of these efforts was the long campaign of the Better America Federation against the I. W. W. in California, as a result of which about 164 members of that working-class organization were sent to prison under the criminal syndicalism law, solely for their membership in it. The Federation employed for over three years three professional witnesses, Diamond, Coutts and Townsend, to testify in all these trials. Two of these were ex-convicts. The American Defense Society assisted the federal secret service under William J. Burns in bringing the criminal syndicalist prosecutions in Michigan in 1922 against thirty-one members of the Communist Party. The president of the National Security League, Mr. Solomon Stauwood Menken, has on several occasions insisted on the exclusion of distinguished aliens whose radicalism he opposed—notably the Countess Cathleen Mary Szigli, wife of the first president of the Hungarian Republic.

The Security League in 1925 also succeeded in inducing a business men's luncheon club and the Y. M. C. A. of Hartford, Connecticut, to cancel speaking engagements of Mr. Arthur Henderson, M. P., the British labor statesman, on the ground that he was preaching "socialistic doctrines." On this occasion the Baltimore Sun remarked:

"Already in continental theaters America is the subject of the same sort of gibes that New York pokes at Brooklyn. With Mr. Kellogg inside the government and the National Security League outside, we are certainly a legitimate subject for ridicule."

Typical of the activity of the National Security League was the report issued by B. F. Ristine, Major of Infantry, 84th Division, U. S. Army, Indianapolis, on Frederick J. Libby of the National Council for the Prevention of War, who was scheduled to speak on peace in Indianapolis. This report was "authenticated by Major General Robert L. Bullard, U. S. Army, Retired, President of the League."

All of the statements included in the report had been answered and proved to be falsehoods time and again by Mr. Libby's organization. Knowing of this, the Indianapolis Monthly Meeting of Friends complained to the army headquarters at Indianapolis and received a reply from G. L. Townsend, Colonel of Infantry and Chief of Staff which said that "the statement made by Major Ristine regarding the authenticity of the data was inaccurate, the data being understood to have been compiled by the late R. M. Whitney (author of the book 'The Reds in America') and furnished the undersigned and his associates for their information, the officers of the National Security League believing it to be correct and true, and not furnishing it for publication. . . . It is known to be the expressed policy of the League to avoid controversy involving personalities, and it is regretted by the officers of the League

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE Chinese revolution has more lives than the proverbial cat. The Nationalist Government—the legitimate one with headquarters at Hankow was reported several times about to step up to the block, coil up its pigtail and invite the executioner to do the right thing by it. Only The DAILY WORKER, of all the daily papers published in the English language in the United States gave the facts of the situation in China and interpreted them properly.

IT was quite evident to us that this mighty movement with the overwhelming majority of the masses behind it, was in no danger of decisive defeat tho it suffered setbacks. The failure of the traitor Chiang-Kai-Shek to deliver the goods to the imperialists was proof sufficient that he did not have any popular support. Chiang could not even find enough Chinese nationalists of ability to organize a cabinet. As for the northern bandit generals their supporters consist of conscript soldiers who are loyal only as long as they are within speaking distance of an executioner's sword.

THE capitalist correspondents in China had general Feng about to march to Hankow, tho a few weeks previously they had him on the payroll of the government of the Soviet Union. Now that he has whipped the northern bandits into cream he is back again on the salary sheet. This is the kind of news that is fit to print.

WITH the recent victories of the Nationalist armies the danger of foreign intervention in China becomes ever more likely. It would be foolish to assume that because the capitalist powers have conflicts among themselves they cannot come to terms for a common policy in China, even a temporary unity. All of them fear the revolutionization of China. Japan, England, France and the United States have their heels on the necks of colonial and semi-colonial peoples. With China unified under a national anti-imperialist government the revolutionary fever would go thru the oppressed peoples of the Orient like fire thru a forest.

WHILE we hail the fresh victories of the Chinese people and expose the predatory aims of the foreign imperialists aided by their harpies, the capitalist press, we must not cease to warn the workers of this country that the words of sympathy for the Chinese people expressed by Coolidge are no guarantee against intervention. We also take this opportunity to point out to some of our liberal critics who accuse The DAILY WORKER of "exaggeration" that our "direlictions" in that respect are always calculated to encourage the exploited to fight on, while the capitalist press deliberately lies to discourage the oppressed from battling for their rights!

ON the whole the radical press is more accurate than the capitalist press of any shade of opinion. We know that victories cannot be turned into defeats and defeats into victories by clicking a typewriter. Nevertheless a hostile press has an enervating effect upon the minds of the people and it is therefore very important that the workers should have a press of their own that concerns itself solely with their interests.

FROM collective troubles to individual troubles: Recently a letter came into this office from a subscriber, and a remarkable letter it was. He told in point blank that he was about to commit suicide because he was old and could see nothing in life that was worth the effort of living. He was a laborer and worked for about 40 cents an hour. His name is Franz Bostrom and he hailed from Seattle. He was known to many radicals from all over the United States who visited Seattle. He was a sympathizer with the radical movement and a man of intelligence.

YESTERDAY, a copy of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer came in with the news that Bostrom took his own life. Beside his body lay two notes: one a message to the coroner concluding: "I've had a hell of a time of a worthless life." The other was addressed to the manager of the auto camp where he was employed at Snoqualmie. It began: "When you receive this, I will be dead. I am tired broke and do not own anyone a cent." It is known that this was a good thing he did. . . .

POWERS RUSH PLANES, TROOPS TO PEKING

Ultimatum Sent to Fur Bosses

GIVEN UNTIL 5 P.M. TO QUIT RELATIONS WITH SCAB UNION

Must Recognize Power of Joint Board

An ultimatum to the Board of Directors of the Associated Fur Manufacturers and to Oiser Schachtman and his associates in the International Fur Workers' Union was served by the Furriers' Joint Board in letters dispatched last night.

The manufacturers were informed of the mobilization to be held in Cooper Union right after work this afternoon and were given until 5 p. m. to send a favorable reply to the letter of the Joint Board. If the associated fails to signify its intention to

(1) Recognize the Joint Board, which is the union chosen by the workers.

(2) Refrain from encouraging or supporting the dual, opposition union.

(3) Forward instructions to associated members to live up to the terms of the agreement signed last June.

(4) Refrain from interfering in internal affairs of the union.

(5) Refrain from forcing the workers to join an organization to which they are opposed.

(6) Reestablish union conditions in the shops; the "Joint Board will be forced to adopt proper and necessary measures to safeguard the interests of the workers and protect the Furriers' Union".

Ex-President Notified.

To "Mr." Schachtman, "ex-president" of the International Fur Workers' Union, the Joint Board also sent notice of tonight's mass meeting, inviting him or his associates to attend and declare their readiness to bring peace in the International and guard the interests of the workers and the union. The Joint Board's letter declares that if no favorable reply is received by 5 o'clock today, Schachtman and his associates will be held responsible, by the workers, for the consequences of their refusal to bring about peace and will hold them equally guilty with the employers for the trade war being forced upon the New York fur workers.

Toronto Furriers Appeal.

In the absence of any apparent desire for peace at International headquarters, the Joint Board, Toronto Fur Workers' Union, has made the first move for unity by sending to

HANKOW VICTORY CELEBRATED AT FRIDAY MEETING

The victories of the Hankow army over the mercenary troops of Chang Tso-lin will be celebrated at the Workers (Communist) Party mass meeting on China Friday evening at Central Opera House.

"For the past few weeks," declared Jack Stachel, acting general secretary of District 2, yesterday, "the bourgeois press has been reporting that Hankow is failing. We had all learned to recognize that each announcement of the fall of Hankow covered up a defeat for the Northern army and a defeat for the imperialists.

"The Friday meeting will also explain the real meaning of the breaking off of relations between Great Britain and the Soviet Union and the danger of a world war arising therefrom, which is being engineered by British imperialism."

Speakers will be Scott Nearing, William F. Dunne (if out of jail by Friday evening), Rebecca Grecht, Juliet Stuart Poyntz, Charles Ruthenberg, Bertram D. Wolfe, H. M. Wicks, M. J. Olgin, Alexander Trachtenberg, A. Lozovsky, spokesman for the Red International of Labor Unions, and a Young Workers' League speaker. Earl Browder will be the chairman. Admission will be 50 cents. The meeting will start promptly at 8 p. m.

The Daily Worker Still Fights for Its Life!

Every day the entire jackal pack of capitalist reaction awaits expectantly the news of the death of The DAILY WORKER. Last week so-called experts on such matters predicted that we would never survive the attacks waged against us. They though the fight they waged against us on every side would kill us. But we are still fighting on.

It is possible for us to appear today because our comrades and sympathizers have rallied to our support and enabled us to meet the demands of the printer temporarily, and we feel that we owe it to all our readers to keep them informed regarding our condition. We are still in danger. The costs of publication, of defending our imprisoned comrades, Dunne and Miller; the costs of preparing appeals so that we can get them out of jail—provided Tammany's judges will permit them to get out on bail, which they have thus far denied—all this imposes heavy burdens upon us.

But the message from all our comrades is an echo of the dying words of Comrade Ruthenberg, "Let's Fight On!" They have shown that The DAILY WORKER means much in their lives. They realize that no effective fight is possible without The DAILY WORKER to hold high the standards of the class struggle.

One of the inspiring examples of the loyalty of our comrades was the action of the executive of Section Four, Harlem and Yorkville units of the Workers (Communist) Party. The section organizer, S. Nemser, sent in the following letter:

"At the enlarged executive committee meeting of the section where all functionaries of the units were present, we considered the plan of helping The DAILY WORKER. We approve of turning over to the organizer $500.00 and we call upon every member in the section to give full support to the Executive Committee of the section to carry on the campaign of The DAILY WORKER at the present critical situation. It was unanimously decided that we pledge full support to the Central Executive Committee of the party and the campaign to keep The DAILY WORKER alive.

"We call upon every member and every section of the party to do likewise."

Comrades, this is the spirit that has enabled us to keep up the fight during the trying days we are living through where we are beset on every side by demands that tax our resources to the limit.

Do not fail to keep funds coming in. All those units of the party that can contribute must do so at once. All those who owe debts to The DAILY WORKER must pay them now. Send the money in by telegram or special delivery to 33 East First Street, New York City. We need it quickly and badly. A dollar now is worth ten under normal conditions, because the need for it is greater than ever before in all our history.

MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE, DAILY WORKER.

Injunctions Follow Picket Ruling

The decision of the Court of Appeals upholding "peaceful picketing" was declared yesterday by labor authorities to be no real victory for the workers.

"The courts will go on issuing injunctions just the same," said Joseph R. Brodsky, attorney for several New York unions. "In fact, here is a new injunction granted this morning, the day after the decision of the Court of Appeals, by Supreme Court Justice Prewett of Brooklyn. He has given this to the Clarendon Shoe Company against its workers, on the grounds that there were 'coercion, intimidation, threats' used on the picket line.

"The right to strike and the right to picket were not won by law but by economic pressure of the workers. Now the court is giving its legal approval—only there is a joker in the decision. It says 'peaceful picketing,' and it is left to the judge to decide what this is."

All workers are familiar with the tricks used by employers to create disturbances on picket lines, to cause the arrest and fine of one worker, and then using these examples of "unlawful" methods as argument demanding that the court should grant an injunction against all picketing.

The case passed upon by the Court of Appeals was that of an injunction taken out by the Exchange Bakery and Restaurant, Inc., of 840 Sixth Ave., New York, against officers of Waiters' and Waitresses' Union, Local 1. The court's opinion is that anyone may enter a non-union shop and organize the employes, and if a disturbance is created, the criminal law and not an injunction must be invoked.

"This has always been the contention of organized labor", said Attorney Brodsky. "But in actual practice, the courts say, 'There has been trouble on the picket line; it is not peaceful. Therefore we will have no picketing at all.'"

Judge Prewett, on Tuesday of this week, granted an injunction to three house painters in Brooklyn restraining their workers from striking for a wage increase of $8 a day. This injunction will remain in force until June 13 when the patriarch continued expires.

HIGH HONOR PAID RUTHENBERG BY MOSCOW MUSEUM OF REVOLUTION

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.
(Special to The Daily Worker.)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., May 2. (By Mail).—There will be a Ruthenberg Memorial Corner in the Museum of the Revolution, in Tverskaya St., here. This was decided on today thru arrangements made with the director of this important and interesting Soviet institution. Rose Frumkina, who is also connecte with the Agitprop Department of the Communist International.

The nucleus of this Memorial will consist of the beautiful Red Banner of the American Communist Party that was brought along with the Bronze Urn containing the ashes of Ruthenberg, as well as the streamers with their revolutionary slogans, that decorated the wreaths of the Party Organizations in Bremerhaven, Bremen, Hamburg and Berlin, Germany, and also here in Moscow. Here will also rest the wooden casket in which the Bronze Urn was carried all the way from Chicago to Moscow. There will also be pictures and photographs in the collection, showing Ruthenberg in different party activities while alive, then pictures of the funeral in the United States and of the various demonstrations that took place in Germany, and lastly of the final funeral ceremonies at the Bufiding of the Communist International, in the Red Square and before the Kremlin Wall here in Moscow

The Ruthenberg Memorial in fact is the beginning of the American Section of the Museum of the Revolution. On my visit to the Museum, Comrade Frumkina pointed out the meager material that had been received so far from America. Most of this concerned the Passaic strike. There were a few copies of The DAILY WORKER and other party publications. That was all.

It is urged that all comrades in America having any material, pictures, daily papers, etc., dealing with the life of Ruthenberg, send them on immediately either to the present writer, or preferably the original manuscripts or pictures, that they may be put on historic exhibition.

Material must also be sent here concerning the American labor movement generally; charts and statistics regarding the American class struggle, on strikes, cost of living, wage fluctuations, the development of the American Communist Party, the trade unions and farmers' organizations.

Church Now Museum.

While the duty of preparing this material for the Museum of the Revolution should fall upon the party nationally, nevertheless, the party organizations in different sections of the country can also make their contributions, some of which ought to be of great value.

The Museum of the Revolution is housed in a magnificent, the rather old building, on Tverskaya, called "Moscow's busiest thorofare. It compares well with Museums in the United States, so far as arrangement of material is concerned. It is only one of many museums in Moscow, some of these being now housed in former churches. The guide book to Moscow often carries a note, after calling attention to some church or cathedral, pointing out that it is "now a museum."

The Museum of the Revolution was formerly Rasumovsky Palace, built in 1814, where later the English club was housed. The Museum was founded by the commission of the Moscow Committee of the All-Union Communist Party, for the investigation of the Oct. (Nov. 7, 1927) Revolution. It is formed from the permanent exhibition of this commission together with the Historical Revolutionary Museum of Moscow. The Museum strives to give a complete review of the history of the Russian Revolution from its very beginning, and also of the history of the All-Union Communist Party. Since January 1926 the Lenin Museum is also located here. There is also the Comintern (Club Section) of Communist Section, which holds up considerable space and is decorated by a huge painting of the Second Congress of the Comintern.

No Squabbles.

In the United States the museums are completely isolated from the

BUTLER SHIFTS U. S. BASE FROM SHANGHAI AS FENG DRIVES NORTH

Imperialists Prepare for War; Britain Sends More Planes; Land 2,000 Japanese Troops

BULLETIN.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—Despite official denials repeatedly made, the American marine base in China will be completely shifted from Shanghai to Tientsin, it was definitely learned today. General Smedley Butler, commanding the American marines in China, is now perfecting the arrangements.

PEKING, June 1.—With the imperialist powers rushing troops, warships and airplanes to Tientsin and Peking, the danger of an open imperialist war against Nationalist China looms larger than ever.

The sweeping victories scored by the Hankow Nationalists in their drive against Peking have stirred the powers.

British Send Air Fleet

Two thousand Japanese marines have already landed at Tsingtao, while a cable from London states that the British die-hard government has decided to send a squadron of the latest type of airplanes to Tientsin. Preparations for the dispatch of further air forces are being made, the cable says.

There are now 7,000 American, British, Japanese, French and Italian troops in Peking and Tientsin.

SHANGHAI, June 1.—The growing gravity of the situation in North China was emphasized today when the Sixth Marines, commanded by Col. Henry Snyder, suddenly received orders to embark hurriedly on the transport Henderson, to sail tomorrow morning for Tientsin.

It is learned from authoritative sources that Britain recently sounded out Washington on America and Japan together taking over the protection of foreign interests in North China, leaving Britain to handle the situation in South China.

Though reports from Washington say there is no official cooperation with Britain, there is the fullest cooperation between the British and American military and naval forces at Shanghai, extending to the conveying by American warships of British steamers up the Yangtze River

U. S. Approves "Defence" Measures

PEKING, June 1.—American Minister John Van A. MacMurray replying today to an inquiry from the United States regarding the outlook for the safety of foreigners, said he believed present conditions did not warrant the evacuation of American women and children from Peking. This declaration directly contradicts President Coolidge's statement that the American Legation would probably be removed from Peking soon.

The "documents" alleged by Chang Tso-lin to have been taken in his raids on the Soviet Union embassy compound on April 6 are pure frauds, political observers declared.

Peasants Attack Chang

PEKING, June 1.—The opposition of the peasantry thruout Honan Province and wholesale desertions of troops to the Nationalists, as well as the determined drive of the well-trained troops of the Hankow Government were responsible for the withdrawal of Chang Tso-lin's troops from territory south of the Yellow River, it was learned today.

Supporters of the Manchurian war lord stated that desertions of Fengtian troops to the Nationalist cause and rear attacks of the Red Spears, a peasants' organization, were in a

Call Dressmakers to Membership Meeting at Webster Hall Tonight

All dressmakers are called to a membership meeting of Local 22 tonight at 7 p. m., in Webster Hall, 11th Street near 3rd Avenue.

This is a chance for all dressmakers to show once again their loyalty to the leaders of the Joint Board, and their determination to continue the struggle for preservation of the union, and of union conditions in the shops. Now is the time to lay plans for increased action. All members of Local 22 must be on hand to take part in the discussion of union problems.

HARLEM BARBERS STRIKE NEAR AS GIRLS FIGHT ON

Bronx Pickets Arrested Big Parade

An auto parade headed by two big busses filled with striking beauty shop workers wended through Bronx streets yesterday as part of the drive for unionization. Forty automobiles bearing banners, streamers and placards left Boston Road headquarters of the Barbers' Union and visited shops affected by the strike.

Nearly 500 girls have won their demands for recognition of the union and improved working conditions, leaving about 30 per cent of the shops still unorganized. The union, embracing both barbers and women workers, is putting up a stiff fight to win the other shops.

Sadie Reich, organizer for the Women's National Trade Union League and several girl pickets have been arrested on picketing charges.

Harlem barbers and beauty shops was scheduled to strike today for recognition of union demands for adequate pay for week end workers and union hours for women. A strike of east side barbers, culminating in a general Manhattan strike may follow.

Gangsters are being hired in Harlem to fight the pickets, it was learned yesterday. Thu union won the Bronx strike in three days and hopes to clean up on Harlem just as quickly.

Burglars who looted the home of Jesse Livermore, Wall Street "Wolf" of $100,000, were quarrelling yesterday over the spoils, according to a "snitcher" of the gang.

The proposed tunnel and subway extension from W. 41st St. under the Hudson and the Palisades to New Durham, N. J. was declared practicable yesterday.

BROPHY PROVES BY FIGURES THAT LEWIS STOLE MINERS' UNION VOTE

PITTSBURGH, June 1.—John Brophy charges the John L. Lewis administration with stealing the biennial elections of the United Mine Workers last December. His charges are made in a circular letter to the membership of the international union.

The tabulated report of the vote, local by local, has finally been published from the Indianapolis office of the union. It gives Brophy 60,641½ votes, as against 173,823½ for Lewis. Brophy declares the tabulation shows "gross irregularities, self-evident frauds, and vote stealing to a startling extent."

The candidate's accusations are causing a sensation in Pittsburgh union circles. Brophy is a well-known figure in the miners'

[illegible] INVOLVED IN LAPSE [illegible]

This series of ten articles, of which this is the eighth, deals with the operations of the insurance companies and methods to combat the evils of weekly payment life insurance. This series is the result of numerous requests for information on the details of the scandals and fraud to which the agents' practices are common with the policyholder.

By CHARLES YALE HARRISON

ARTICLE IX

As long as the industrial insurance worker remains unorganized, just so long will the colossal fraud of weekly payment life insurance go on. As long as the "lapse and surrender" method of paying wages exists just so long will the agent have to work hand in glove with the looting directors of the "Big Four."

The first demand of an agent's union must call for the abolition of all industrial "lapses." For by means of this method of wage payment are the evils of the fraud perpetuated. The excuse offered by the officials of the "Big Four" in maintaining this system (which costs the industrial agent upward of 35 million dollars a year in wage deductions) is that it is a lapse deterrent.

In the face of this misleading excuse the "Big Four" last year lapsed over 6 million policies for nearly 3½ billions of weekly payment life insurance. Obviously the "lapse and charge" system is not all that it is crooked up to be as a lapse preventer.

Why They Lapse.

The real causes of lapses are the excessively high premiums rates and the unusually harsh policy conditions. It is safe to assume that a vast percentage of embryonic policyholders take out their life insurance with the intention of maintaining the protection until maturity or death. Under the stress of "dynamite" sales methods sometimes the amount applied for is greater than the insured can possibly, for, but the majority of cases are sincere applications.

Why, then, do we find that only half of all weekly business written remains in force at the end of the first year?

It is because this form of petty larceny insurance is sold under false representations. It is because the purchaser is led to believe something which is very far from the truth. It is because the rosy picture painted by the agent-artist can never, under present conditions, be realized by the prospect.

Cash In.

No one knows this better than the officials of the "Big Four." They know from past experience that the average life of an industrial policy is less than three years. They know that only 1 per cent of all terminated policies are matured endowments. They know that the prospect who insures himself under any plan has only 10 chances in a hundred of cashing in on his policy either by death or maturity.

This being the case, and business being what it is, the wisest plan, in their estimation, is not only to penalize the policyholder for his poverty but to blackjack the agent as well.

Haley Fiske Says:

Let us examine in the light of official statistics the truth of the statement that due to the high cost of maintaining industrial insurance in force the "charge" system must be preserved.

Haley Fiske, the arch-apologist for weekly premium life insurance, speaking on the subject of lapses says: "Lapses DO constitute a most unfortunate feature of the business, a feature, however. . . which characterizes all insurance. The methods of compensating the field force have been so fixed as to PENALIZE LAPSING and encourage persistence." (Emphasis mine).

The COMMUNIST

1113 W. Washington Blvd.

CHICAGO, ILL.

In view of the fact that 90 per cent of all industrial policies lapse before they mature either as claims or surrenders, and, that commissions are only paid on policies which terminate as claims and surrenders, the "Big Four" only pay for 10 per cent of the business written each year.

In this respect they differ from the "ordinary" companies who pay for all policies placed, irrespective of how long they remain in force.

No Medical Fees.

Again, industrial risks are not medically examined on policies under $1,000 and as the average weekly payment policy is for a less amount than $500 comparatively few medical fees are paid. In the Metropolitan report as submitted to the N. Y. Insurance Department, industrial fees were less than half of that expended in the "ordinary" department. The figures are $785,252.95 in the industrial department and $1,803,806.14 for the "ordinary" division.

If the claim put forward by the "Big Four" officials that the "lapse and charge" system prevents lapsing there might be some excuse for its maintenance. But this is a deliberate lie and is used as a club to keep the field worker in line and further enrich the officials and directors who profit thereby.

And as long as the agent remains unorganized the system will remain.

District Executive Lauds Fine Work of Late Louis Gitlow

The death of Louis Gitlow, father of Ben Gitlow, is mourned in an official statement by the executive committee of District 2, Workers (Communist) Party. The statement reads:

In the death of Comrade Louis Gitlow, the Workers (Communist) Party has lost a loyal, devoted and persistent fighter in the cause of the emancipation of the workingclass.

To many Comrade Louis Gitlow was known as the father of Benjamin Gitlow, an outstanding leader of the Party. But Comrade Louis Gitlow was not merely the father of Benjamin Gitlow. Comrade Gitlow leaves behind him nearly forty years of activity in the labor, Socialist and Communist movement. He was one of the early members of the Socialist Labor Party and helped to found the Voice of Labor.

When the Socialist Party was formed, he was a charter member and was always to be found in the left wing of that Party. He helped to form the official left wing and when the split occurred in 1919 joined the Communist Labor Party. He then worked for the unification of the Communist forces in America and up to the date of his death was an active member of the Workers (Communist) Party.

Comrade Louis Gitlow died at his post. Only a short while ago, when he was already ill, he could be found every day until four o'clock in the morning working for the defense bazaar to help the cloakmakers and furriers in their struggle. Comrade Louis Gitlow was one of the founders of and active workers in the International Labor Defense.

Comrade Louis Gitlow leaves behind him his son, Benjamin Gitlow, and his wife, Mother Gitlow, who remains to carry on the work to which he devoted his life.

Cappellini Helps Hudson Throw 8,000 Miners Out of Jobs

SCRANTON, Pa., June 1.—Hudson Coal Co. balanced its order placing 10,000 miners out of work in Luzerne county today by another order suspending operations in Lackawanna county. Eight thousand men are forced into idleness.

The switch came after secret conference with President Rinaldo Cappellini of District 1, in which hours and conditions were discussed. The grievance committee of the Hudson Coal Co. has been at swordpoints with Cappellini for months. The new agreement between him and the company will not help to smooth relations.

And then this check, made out to a lower Broadway brokerage concern, was found. Later Fischer and Hartley confessed to speculation with the union funds, but said they were "paying it all back." They revealed that $14,000 had been paid back but that $37,000 is still due Painters' District Council 9.

By MARGARET LARKIN

The truth about the General Strike and its calling is given in today's installment of the official Joint Board history of the struggle in the garment unions. Few strikes have been so lied about and misrepresented. Margaret Larkin's clear account of its origin will equip you to answer malign stories inspired by the right wing.

The General Strike

There has been much misunderstanding as to the calling and the conduct of the Cloakmakers General strike,—a misunderstanding that has been purposely fostered by the Right Wing leaders. In spite of the fact that the strike was conducted jointly by the Right and Left Wings, they have charged that it was "lost by the Communists," and have made this an excuse for seizing control of the Joint Board and the four locals for another "reorganization."

The Demands

The demands for which the strike was fought were formulated by the officers of the International, or Right Wing, in 1924, more than a year before the present Left Wing administration in the Joint Board was voted into power. They were approved by the membership in a general referendum in that year. In spite of the vote of the membership to strike for the demands, President Sigman presented them to a Commission appointed by Governor Smith.

At the end of two years, when the Governor's Commission finally reported, it was clear that the Union could not accept its terms, since the report rejected the most vital demands of the Union. It recommended only very small wage increases, and ignored the workers' plea for a forty hour week. Moreover, it gave to the employers the right which they had long sought of discharging ten per cent of their workers every year without cause. This "reorganization of shops," with all its resultant speed up systems and discrimination against active Union workers, could not be accepted by the Union without a struggle. Only one point of the Union's demands was reported on favorably, namely that the number of sub-manufacturers working for any one jobber should be limited, so as to force the jobbers to assume responsibility for Union conditions in the shops of their contractors. This was a measure long desired by the Union, but the jobbers, representing seventy-five per cent af the industry, refused to accept the report of the Commission of this point, making a strike inevitable. Since the report was so unfavorable to the workers on every other point, the Union found that it had nothing to gain and much to lose by accepting it, and that a strike must be called in the entire industry.

It has been suggested that a strike should have been called only against the jobbers, although such a course would have been impracticable in the extreme. The two main points at issue were the "limitation of contractors," which the Union hoped to get from the jobbers, and the "reorganization of shops," which the "inside manufacturers" hoped to get from the Union. Sub-manufacturers had little interest in the issue of reorganization of shops, since very few of them employ the 35 workers that the Governor's Commission had made the perquisite of the discharge privilege. To have called a strike against the jobbers alone would have been to abandon the "inside shops" to reorganization, a forty-four hour week instead of the forty asked for, very small wage increases, no recognition for designers or examiners. Furthermore a strike against the jobbers for the theory of "limitation of contractors," could not have been conducted successfully without the additional demands of higher wages, shorter hours, time guarantee, and so forth, that make a more popular appeal to the workers. Finally the character of the industry is such that only a General Strike of all branches can be carried on successfully, since it would be impossible to keep "inside shops" from manufacturing for jobbers, and so converting many workers into scabs and seriously crippling the effectiveness of the strike.

Calling of the Strike

On June 29, the Joint Board called a mass meeting of the membership in Madison Square Garden to consider the situation. Morris Sigman, President of the International, Hugh Frayne, New York Organizer of the American Federation of Labor, Sydney Hillman, President of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and many other Right Wing leaders were present, and spoke strongly in favor of a strike. Telegrams were read from President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, and other high labor officials, promising support. Thousands of cloakmakers filled in Madison Square Garden voted the strike. On July 1, the strike, that had been voted by the membership in 1924, ratified at the conventions of 1924 and 1925, approved by the General Executive Board, the Joint Board, and the Executive Boards for all the locals, was finally called.

When the machinery of the strike was organized, the leaders of the International were given the Chairmanships of the Finance, the Settlement, the Out-of-Town, and the Law Committees, and membership on all other Committees, so that the strike actually was carried on jointly by the Right and Left Wings.

working masses. They are generally deserted sepulchres.

But on this Sunday that I visited the Museum of the Revolution, accompanied by Comrade Frumkina, an unending stream of humanity was continually pouring thru the various and numerous rooms. There were plenty of lecturers to explain everything, not in a careless monotone, but with intense enthusiasm, like a zealous teacher interested in his task.

Thus one of these lecturers, that we listened to, interspersed her remarks with questions, that were quickly answered by some one in the audience. Thus in one section was a map showing the route taken by Lenin from Switzerland to Russia following the February, 1917, revolution. The lecturer started off asking, "Where was Lenin when czarism fell?" which put the gathering immediately on tiptoes. Then when the original of a thesis written by Lenin was shown in a glass case, the lecturer would ask, "What is a thesis?" and some worker would quickly and accurately reply.

Thus this Revolution Museum, giving a Bolshevik view of the struggle of the workers and peasants for power in Russia, is a sort of university for the thousands that pour thru it.

The exhibits start in its first section with a review of the Cossack and Peasant Insurrection of Stenka Rasin in the 17th Century, and the Cossack and Peasant and Workers' Insurrection of Emelian Pugatchev in the 18th Century.

Section Shows Revolution.

The second section shows the revolutionary movement during the first half of the 19th Century. There are documents on serfdom under Nicholas I, the Peasant Liberation, the Peasant Disorders, the Revolutionary movement in the 60's, the movement of the "Narodjiki" about 1870, the Group of the Narodnaya Volya (the People's Freedom), the first organization of the Revolutionary Workers' Movement, the South Russian Workers' Union and the Northern Union of Russian Workers.

Then comes the Russian Marxist Movement, from the "Group of the Liberation of Labor" to the group "Iskra" and the eve of the first revolution. Detailed documents on legal and illegal Marxist literature of this epoch are here.

Next comes the First Russian Revolution of 1905-1907, richly represented by literature and illustrated papers of that time, pictures of the insurrections and peasant disorders; the first and second state Duma and the Fourth (Union) Congress.

Then follows the period of reaction, the period of the new revolutionary growth of the Great War, pictures of the persecution and execution of revolutionaries under czarism; pictures and diagrams showing the decline of the old social order and the growing revolutionary wave, with many illustr the World War.

tions of the museum bring s to the February Revolution of 1917, with the workers and soldiers' insurrections. The first Soviets in Petersburg (now Leningrad) and Moscow, the Temporary Government, Lenin's Arrival, the growth of Bolshevism pass in review. Then comes the October (Russian Time) Revolution of 1917.

There is a Lenin Corner, with many pictures of Lenin's life at different periods. Another section shows the conditions of prison life, penal servitude and exile, as well as the mechanism of underground (illegal) work.

It is in the Comintern Section of the Museum, devoted to the Communist Parties of the different countries of the world, that the developing struggle in the United States must be distinctly interpreted.

FRANS BOSTROM, LABOR PIONEER, ENDS HIS LIFE

Appeals for Revolution in Last Letter

Frans Bostrom, one of the Pacific Northwest's ablest labor fighters, is dead.

Bostrom, former secretary of the Socialist Party of Washington, scribbled "A fitting end to workingman's life" on a scrap of paper, turned on the gas and lay down to die in the bare room of a cheap Seattle lodging house.

Shortly before he wrote a long letter to The DAILY WORKER explaining carefully why he was not renewing his subscription and why he had selected death rather than continued existence on the meagre wage he earned as an aged bookkeeper.

Bostrom was state secretary of the Socialist Party in the days when it was a tower of left wing strength in Washington. Later he ran a small cigar store in Tacoma where left wing members of the Socialist local gathered in a rear room to discuss the war and the new crisis before the party.

Persecuted During War.

Then the government began its persecution of Bostrom for selling anti-war literature. Department of Justice agents arrived to give up his little bookshop. Although in the 50's, and not vigorous physically, Bostrom went to work in the shipyards and became a leader in the famous Shipyard Laborers Union of Tacoma.

After the war the radical movement in Tacoma declined in strength with the closing of the shipyards, but Bostrom, an active fighter in the Communist movement, supported himself by odd jobs.

Plans Suicide Carefully.

Then he made his decision to end his life, quite as calmly and methodically as he made his decision 27 years ago to enter the socialist movement in Sweden. With the clear intelligence which made him one of the best grounded Marxists in the Pacific Northwest, he wrote out his last statement, ending with the sentence:

"Yours for the supremacy of the working class in a speedy revolution."

Bostrom's letter to The DAILY WORKER reads:

Editor The DAILY WORKER,
New York City
Dear Comrade:

The time of my paper expired April 22nd. Owing to the fact that I had decided to withdraw from the class-struggle when my little savings were exhausted, and go where I would be fairly certain to find the liberty I have spent my life in trying to bring to this earth, I did not find it convenient to send you the money before now.

Having taken a somewhat active part in "The Cause" for the last 27 years, it is natural that I should have a good many friends among the comrades I have past all over this country. I feel that I may give them an explanation for deserting them.

I am by profession a bookkeeper. But it is difficult for a revolutionist to get into and still harder to locate a job in this line. So I have mostly worked at common labor. I am now nearly 60 years old and would find it hard to hold down a deskjob in competition with young men. In fact every move is painful. And more painful to the mind than to the body. Frankly, it hurts my self-respect that a man with my intelligence and knowledge should not be able to live even in the simple way in which I have lived for these many years without grovelling like a worm before some damned moron whose lack of self respect has elevated him to bossing.

World a Stage.

I decided more than a year ago to use up my savings and then die. I am afraid that as a consequence I have been of very little use to the Party, since in reality I died when I made that decision. Since then the world has appeared to me like a stage and I have been merely a more or less amused onlooker.

Now when the moment has arrived I am not at all anxious to leave. I am not tired of life. I am not excited in any way. I have always been exceptionally well balanced mentally and have never been aware that I know that I, and every other person who has to toil to live, would have been better off had we never been born. I have known for thirty years past that death is the only emancipator for the slave as long as ignorance keeps him and his kind disunited. But something, perhaps curiosity, has kept me from individual salvation in the (for the present) only available way. But realizing from the beginning that it would be difficult when the time came to make up my mind to depart, I have planned so that there is now no cent that I owe cent left in the world. I owe nothing to anybody and what others owe me is uncollectible. I have no god, but have always worshipped liberty. I have not loved my neighbor, but have tried to treat him as fair as I wished to be treated. My morality consists in only one maxim: Self Respect (Those who do not like me probably call it Conceit.) I have no duties and admit of no virtue unless it be: Moderation, Forbearance.

I regret that my finances do not permit me to stand with my comrades until nature took its toll in regular order.

Being confronted with an inexorable slavery or death, I choose the least of two evils. I am not taking my own life. Charge my murder up to capitalism, the hydra-headed old hag.

Yours for the supremacy of the working class in a speedy REVOLUTION.—Frans Bostrom.

Let Negro Wait in Electric Chair as Killers Argue Duty

RAIFORD, Fla., June 2.—Stapped in the electric chair at the state prison for fully ten minutes, staring goggle-eyed into eternity, awaiting the death current which never came, Jim Williams, condemned Putnam county Negro, is living today, reprieved until Friday, by which time it is expected the question of who is duty-bound to act as executioner will be settled.

The Negro, according to authorities, is probably the only slayer in the United States who escaped death by electrocution merely because no one would press the switch.

Butler Shifts Base Away From Shanghai

large measure responsible for Chang Tso-lin's defeat.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—Evacuation of the American legation and other properties in Peking, ancient capital of the Chinese empire and of its recent successor, the republic of military chiefs, has been planned by the State Department and approved by President Coolidge. Unless conditions in Northern China become quieter within a few days, orders for withdrawal of the staff and their records and private effects to Tientsin, on the coast, will be issued.

British and Japanese policy just now is agreed in support of Chiang Kai Shek, moderate Nationalist, Japan has abandoned Chang Tso-lin, war lord of Manchuria and now controlling Pekin. Coolidge suspects Chiang of being still the radical he professed to be when he took Shanghai, and is feeling his way slowly the other powers have beat the U. S. in forming alliances with the new war lord.

Japan is moving troops in Shantung to protect Japanese nationals and Japanese properties from attack at the hands of the northern chief—Chang Tso-lin and Chang Tsung-Chang — whom the Tokio government has abandoned. The American withdrawal from Peking would seem to indicate that the Japanese were preparing to withdraw from Peking also, or else that they were getting ready to provoke the Chinese to a general anti-foreign break.

Machine Gunners at Tampa Fire Into Mob Bent Upon Lynching

TAMPA, Florida, June 1.—The mob which seemed determined to lynch B. F. Levins, reputed to have confessed to several murders, finally dispersed this morning, but not until it had clashed with the Florida National Guard.

The crowd, made up of many of the best citizens of Tampa, with sundry visiting Northerners who came South seeking amusement and were anxious to partake of the chief sport and help hang a man, were considerably shocked when the deputies and militia actually defended the jail. Lurid stories of the atrocity of the crime had inflamed the southern gentleman and their guests, and the lynch mob formed with the fatal facility of long practice, forgetting that there was no Negro involved in this case.

Anger at the sheriffs for firing caused further clashes, in which machine guns were finally used. Three are killed and an unknown number wounded.

Imperialists Shift Military Base in China.

The withering of the lines of the Chinese counter-revolutionary forces before the sledge-hammer blows of the advancing Nationalist armies has forced a swift change of front on the part of the imperialist bandits of the United States, France, Britain and Japan.

Before the echoes of the pacifist utterances of the statesmen of the great powers have died away the gun-men of imperialism in the marine, naval, army and air forces have been ordered to shift their bases northward, Japanese forces were moved northward several days ago. Two battalions of British have gone north this week, one to Wei-hai-wei and the other to Tientsin. A British air squadron has also proceeded to the latter point. Reports indicate a similar movement of French forces.

American marines, under the leadership of that comic opera lackey of Yankee imperialism, Brig. Gen. Smedley Butler, have shifted their base northward from Shanghai to Tientsin, even while Wall Street's puppet president at Washington is still congratulating himself on his Memorial Day speech in which he hypocritically asserted that the armed forces of this country were never used to stifle the liberties of weaker peoples.

This concentration of imperialist forces means but one thing—an attempt at concerted armed intervention on a huge scale against the victorious Nationalist revolutionary forces.

Again, in face of the threat to all imperialist rule in China, the invading forces temporarily unite in an effort to stem the tide of revolution. They realize that the new drive is under the leadership of what constituted the left wing of the former Kuomintang (nationalist liberation party), the workers and peasants with its invincible vanguard, the Communist Party of China. The present Kuomintang has thrown off the weight of the middle and big bourgeoisie that formed the right wing of the party and supported the betrayal to the imperialist butchers of Chiang Kai-shek, so there is no section of the present revolutionary movement that will play the role of bribed tool of imperialism.

Britain still takes the initiative in the fight against the Nationalist revolution, because she has more to lose, not only in China, but in all her vast empire on which patriotic Britishers boast that the sun never sets. Wave after wave of calamity rolls over the heads of the tory die-hard government. The breaking off of relations with the Soviet Union has infuriated a large section even of the British capitalist class that was carrying on trade with Russia; the anti-labor drive has alienated all sections of the working class; its defeat on a policy of united action in China, when it had to yield to the pressure of Wall Street, is followed by the collapse of the counter-revolutionary forces upon which it based its wan hopes. British imperialism is also being challenged on another front—Egypt—where three warships and additional land forces have been dispatched to deal with the Nationalist movement there. The mass pressure upon the Egyptian government has forced it to demand the withdrawal of British officers from the Egyptian army council. Many times since the close of the world war the Egyptians have staged revolts against the despotism of British rule and the liberation movement in all the colonial countries has gained tremendous impetus as a reflex of the victories of the Chinese liberation movement. In its fight against this world-wide movement the British imperialists are fighting for the life of the empire—and the realization of the fact that it is thus far losing its fight drives it to desperation.

Likewise the Chinese liberation movement has had its reflex in the Philippine islands as is evidenced by the peasant revolts and the actions of an American rear admiral, Kittelle, in dissolving the labor union at the Cavite naval arsenal, by utilizing the forgeries of the British tory government as an excuse. The attacks on the Filipinos are for the purpose of weakening the independence movement and the labor movement so that American forces in the Philippines can be released for service in China. Already Smedley Butler has announced that marines will be removed from the Islands to aid in endeavoring to reestablish imperialist rule in China.

More than ever it is imperative that the workers' and farmers' organizations in the United States make their voices heard in no uncertain terms in a demand to get the armed forces of this country out of China and keep them out.

Commissioner Warren's Threat Against Labor.

Police Commissioner Warren has declared that he is opposed to "class" demonstrations or parades in the streets of New York City. He used the Memorial Day disorders in which two fascists were killed in the Bronx and the Ku Kluxers and police rioted in Queens as an excuse for his proclamation against "class" parades.

As far as the fascists are concerned they are so cordially hated by the overwhelming majority of the Italian population that whenever they raise their heads they meet with fierce and spontaneous resistance. The assailants of the fascist band, who are alleged to be responsible for the death of two black-shirts, have not been found. It is an impossible task to arrest all anti-fascists, for there are not enough jails to hold the Italian population. Italian fascists are no menace; they can be taken care of in a most salutary fashion by the Italians.

As to the koo-koos, they have become so insignificant that their night-gown parades only evoke derisive laughter. There is nothing to fear from them.

The only demonstrations that are effective are labor demonstrations against plots to murder workers like Sacco and Vanzetti, against the employers and their agents comprising the right-wing of the trade unions and against the predatory policy of American imperialism in various parts of the world. It is these labor demonstrations that Commissioner Warren aims at when he speaks of class demonstrations.

If this beneficiary of Tammany Hall and the appointee of the Broadway male butterfly, Mayor Walker, thinks he can with impunity suppress labor demonstrations, he is badly mistaken and will discover the fact the moment he tries to prohibit such demonstrations.

AN ILL-TIMED EXPLOSION

(By BERT MILLER In Cell 17 of Tombs Prison).

The heated outpouring against Bolshevism delivered by Ambassador Myron T. Herrick at the Memorial Day exercises at the Suresnes American Military Cemetery is a remarkable utterance in other respects than its lurid vituperativeness.

It is worthy of note that the venerable ambassador speaking as he did immediately upon the rupture of relations between England and Russia has thereby assumed the prerogative of making official comment, upon the provocative act of the British Tory government. This is, to say the least, unusual. He may have acted on his own initiative or Canfora Cal may have moved his "spokesman" to Paris for a day. Who knows?

It is significant too that the capitalist press has given the Ambassador's speech little prominence or editorial comment. From the lack of applause, one is therefore left to opine that the venerable fire-eater must have put his foot in it, somehow.

Ever since John Bull was so ignominiously humbled by Uncle Sam's refusal to continue to follow Great Britain's lead in a Far Eastern policy in China, the former gentleman has been aching to recover from this blow to his world prestige and influence. It is evident that Downing Street has now decided that its next step toward this purpose is an offense against Soviet Russia. While no one will pretend for a moment that American capitalism hates Bolshevism any less than do the English capitalists, there is still room to believe that various influential and powerful groups of American capitalists now see their way clear to make the most of England's political and economic difficulties by securing for from every possible corner of the world market—even Russia. Considerable pressure has already been exerted in this direction. With Britain out, what more favorable opportunity could be found to wrest the greatest possible concessions from the Workers' and Peasants' Republic?

We are therefore left to wonder, editorially, whether Herrick's explosion may not have been ill-timed from the point of view of powerful American capitalist interests.

What's What in Washington

WASHINGTON, June 1. (FP) President Coolidge, true to form, has made a political selection of his vacation place this summer. South Dakota has two senators at Washington who were elected against the opposition of his machine in 1924 and 1926. They are not real progressives, but McMaster is inclined to follow the lead of Norris on farm issues, and Norbeck, now entering his second term, frequently votes with the Hiram Johnson and Borah group. Indeed, Norbeck has been known as Hiram Johnson's only follower in the Senate.

By going into the Black Hills state forest in southwestern South Dakota for his three months of seclusion, Coolidge does nothing for the impoverished farmers or cattlemen of the West, but he flatters the sentiment of state pride and give welcome advertising to the railroads and other tourist industries in that region. McMaster and Norbeck, as practical politicians, will be put into the role of polite hosts, whether they like it or not. And since South Dakota is the state which holds the earliest presidential primary next year, Coolidge has by this move given himself the maximum handicap in the race for delegates in the 1928 convention.

Poll-Tax Wrecks Families

A Texas polltax dispute, according to reports in Democratic official circles, has broken up three families in Maryland, just over the border of the national capital. The dispute deals with women's value as voters.

A woman on a Texas plantation asked her husband to pay the polltax for their family, so that she might vote. He refused to pay any tax but his own, saying that her vote wasn't worth paying for. She went to the country seat and stayed in a hotel, while her friends started a bill through the state legislature making it impossible for a husband to thus separate his own polltax payment from that of his wife. This measure was passed, and the woman went triumphantly home.

Afterward, she visited in the Maryland suburbs of Washington and told her story. Women who heard it started arguments with their husbands, three of whom held firmly that the Texas husband was justified in his attitude. And so three households broke. The wives had no thought of yielding on so serious a point of political progress.

Industrial Mobilization.

Fifty officers of the Army Industrial College have just made a three-day visit to the Pittsburgh district, to look over the big steel and machinery plants and to explain to plant managers the plans of the War Department for distributing orders to them in the event of war. The officers of the army, in turn, were given a first-hand lesson in big-scale industrial production.

Industrial mobilization, as it is called by the department, was heartily endorsed by spokesmen for the Carnegie Steel Co., National Tube Co., Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., Jones & Laughlin, and other concerns. They said the department's plans would help their industry in time of emergency, since they would provide for efficient distribution of work with a minimum waste of effort in readjustment to war production. Everyone assumed the likelihood of a war emergency.

DRAMA

"The Legend of the Bear's Wedding"

To all those who have the misfortune of seeing "Potemkin," we recommend "The Legend of the Bear's Wedding," the second picture of Sergei Eisenstein, denied in Asbestos Dave's old world movie channels. This means we recommend it to every worker.

It is a great comedy classic of the picture, telling in its story in never flagging interest, one vivid scene after another and ending in a terrific, inevitable climax that leaves one breathless. It is likely you know the story: A Lithuanian landlord's son, born to a mother, who frightened by a bear, goes stark mad in giving birth. The legend so widely known to all Russians, credits pre-natal influence in accounting for the nature of the son, who leading a double life, as master of the estate, at night is a human beast that preys on the young peasant girls, killing by tearing them to death with his teeth as an animal. Unnerved, as he murders his bride in this manner, he takes to the woods, to be hunted and finally killed by the peasantry.

This brief account does no justice to the eventful plot in which one dramatic moment follows another and builds for the logical terribly dramatic end. In photography, the adequate, this picture does not give us the artistry of "Potemkin." But you will find here a story well told pictorially, splendidly acted, and faithfully costumed to the country and period. Surely, here is something out of the ordinary and worth-while seeing.

In the Russian-peasant legend of the bear, it is a landlord, a vicious bully lashes the assembled peasantry. The suffering of the oppressed creeps into all folk lore. At the wedding of the master, a wicked looking potbellied flunkey (splendidly acted) verbally lashes the assembled peasantry to dance and appear gay for the event. As a religious lesson, the children (as children will at all Sunday schools) are bored and sleepy. This picture, made in a Workers Republic, instead of the usual hokum, gives us something that is honest to life itself. There are other reliable touches to reveal its origin.

The Legend of the Bear, is the first picture of the Art Cinema League, at its new 55th Street Theater. If later programs are in keeping with this, its first showing, it will be well worth placing this small but attractive theater in mind as a place where intelligent, honest amusement can be had.

Farmers Jailed as Rights Batter on Union

NEWARK, N. J., June 1.—After breaking up two meetings the Farmers union here last Saturday, the right wing group has barred warrants on five active members of the organization. A meeting was held in Jerry Carpentiere who was severely beaten up by the right wing gangsters.

One of the members was arrested Monday night and held in jail until the next morning. Three others were arrested Tuesday. All are released under $500 bail.

At a meeting of the general strike committee Shapiro and Skolnik pledge the moral and financial support of the New York joint board.

Morris Langer, manager of the Newark local, outlined the situation at present. He told the assembled workers that the strike was one which concerned the entire membership in their struggle for freedom of expression within the union.

PATERSON, N. J., June 1.—The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union bureaucrats helped Paterson raise another $50 for the Joint Defense for the imprisoned needle workers by failing to show up at a meeting called at Morris Sigman's request to afford him an opportunity of explaining why the Workmen's Circle branches should not support the Defense Fund.

After extensive correspondence between Workmen's Circle Branch 106 and Sigman's propaganda bureau, May 18 was fixed upon, and rights and lefts both turned out and filled the hall at 3 Governor Street.

After waiting an hour and a half for Sigman's agent to appear, the chairman asked some champion of the right wing to present the case of the International. Since no one volunteered, a left winger gave an explanation of the left wing position, and challenged the rights to refute his arguments. Again no right winger responded.

An excellent analysis of the situation, showing that the fight in the I. L. G. W. U. was not a fight between workers of two factions, but between the entrenched bureaucrats on the one hand and the rank and file workers on the other, was made by I. Geller, who ended his talk with an appeal for the defense.

Oliviso Sentenced to Penitentiary for "Possessing" Bomb

Michael Oliviso, 24, anti-Fascist, was sentenced to one year in Sing Sing Prison by County Judge William F. Buckley at White Plains yesterday following his conviction two weeks ago by a jury on charges of carrying and possessing a bomb during a Fascist riot in Portchester.

In his defense, Oliviso had claimed that the bomb had been handed to him by Dante Bertini during a meeting at Portchester some time ago which resulted in a riot.

At the time it convicted Oliviso, the jury recommended leniency for him. Judge Bleakley then announced he was in possession of evidence which had not been introduced at the trial and would investigate before passing sentence on Oliviso.

In sentencing Oliviso the judge declared he believed the case should be reopened with Bertini as a defendant.

Bertini was recently fined $20 by the same court.

Release Moskowitz From Jail Without Giving Any Reason

After serving one month of a six months' sentence, Herman Moskowitz, active member of the Young Workers' League, was mysteriously released from Welfare Island yesterday morning without any reason being given by the authorities.

When informed of his release, Charles M. Joseph, attorney of the International Labor Defense who had been conducting the case was amazed at the procedure adopted. Josephs has been appearing almost every morning in the Court of General Sessions asking for Moskowitz's release on bail, pending an appeal. This plea was always sidetracked. Josephs has promised to investigate the question.

Moskowitz and Matthew Kushner were arrested April 27, at Union Square where they were distributing Hands Off China leaflets issued by the Workers (Communist) Party. April 29, Moskowitz was sentenced to six months in the workhouse. Shortly after Kushner was released with suspended sentence.

Brooklyn Plumbers Firm at Meeting on Original Demands

Undaunted by the report that the Master Plumbers' Association had attempted to break the strike of the 3,000 Brooklyn union plumbers advertising for 1,000 scabs, Local 1 in regular meeting Tuesday evening voted to stand firm by demands for a $14 scale and the five day week. They have been out since April 1.

With International officials hosing about town again, the Brooklyn plumbers are meeting the fight on two fronts, one against the bosses and the other against their own higher officials who want the workers to go back on the job and arbitrate their demands.

The union is protesting to Health Commissioner Harris about disease-breeding plumbing being done in Rosedale and other sections. Strike-breakers who know little about plumbing are installing tubs and basins without vents, as required by law.

Mexico Cops Hunt Reds For Bible "Influence"

MEXICO CITY, June 1.—[illegible] Anti-religious activities are to be stamped out in the state of Tamaulipas, it has been announced.

At first it was rumored that he was leaving for a short leave of absence, but it is now announced that he has resigned.

The reason for his resignation is found in a letter from Governor Kellogg, ordering him to start a revival in Mexico and put [illegible] which were taken from the church and given to Callen.

Cops and Gangsters Set Upon Strikers

Pickets [illegible] Agents yesterday [illegible] Workers' shop, [illegible] Fifth Ave. [illegible] Workers which took place [illegible] Monday morning.

Officials of the Joint Board of the Cloak, Suit and Dress Industry [illegible] that it was at the instigation of right wing leaders of the International that [illegible] Steinzor, chairman of the Joint Board, Isidore Weinberg, assistant manager of the Dress Department, together with 29 other cloak and dress shops were taken into custody when mass picketing was begun by the workers.

When the boss of the Carmon Brothers shop (which is but partially registered with the International) discharged one worker the entire shop made a stoppage in sympathy with the discharged worker and came down to a meeting at the office of the International. The business agent who took up the complaint made an arrangement with the firm to lock out 19 other non-registered workers in addition to the one already discharged. This action on the part of the International representative was bitterly resented not only by the workers in sympathy with the Joint Board, but also by some of the workers who registered with the International.

But Few Scab.

The shop was declared on strike by the Joint Board and only ten of the more than 40 workers employed are scabbing today. The registered chairman and ex-chairlady are among those who refused to return to work. Amongst the scabs working in the shop at the present time is one of the former business agents, Greenberg, and Harry Kantor, a member of the present Executive Board of the International local.

At 7:30 this morning the first group of workers were arrested while picketing in front of the shop. The officers of the International together with their committee of strong-arm men pointed out individual workers who were arrested by the 12 policemen and 2 sergeants who were on hand, while the hired gangsters of the International were permitted to remain near the shop. These unwarranted arrests only served to increase the number of pickets. At 8 o'clock another group of workers were arrested. This manoeuvre was repeated at 8:30 again, but the picketing continued.

Names of Pickets.

Those arrested are: Alter Seitler, Barnet Schuchman, Alex Hartenstein, Henry Turk, Harry Cohen, Isidore Weissberg, Isidore Steinzor, Anna Lelbowitz, Mollie Karp, Anna Epstein, Sonia Chaikin, Rose Merkowitz, Lena Plein, Lillie Perlman, Calla Simirotin, Sarah Gillis, Irving Sophian, Rose Alfelen, Morris Cohen, Hyman Tarshin, Dave Aber, Alex Ritzen, Samuel Cohen, Sam Huck, Julius Miller, Samuel Chanker, Ray Feinblatt, Joseph Gellis, Charles Gibel, Sam Cohen, Max Tuchman.

City Rivers, Bays Unfit for Bathing Health Men Admit

Because the city and state refuse to compel industries to regulate their sewage, the waters of the Hudson, Harlem and East Rivers and on Pelham, Sheepshead and Jamaica Bay are unfit for bathing. Health Commissioner Harris yesterday issued a strict warning against bathing in the disease-laden rivers and bays.

"The East River," he declared, "is filled with disease-breeding stuff from industrial establishments all the way from Red Hook Point to Hell Gate. The East River, as well as the North (Hudson) is poisoned daily by rotten stuff from the wharves and from steamships and other boats.

"Off the Palisades, where hundreds of boys are accustomed to bathe, we have found death-dealing refuse and acids dumped from factories which line the North River shores.

"Pelham Bay is a particularly dangerous spot. When the tide goes out, we find the beaches strewn with the most noxious smelling matter."

Harris refused to explain whether any steps were being planned against the industrial firms polluting New York waters. Health authorities point out that both rivers and all the bays could be made fit for bathing if places were obliged to take care of their noxious refuse.

The Atlantic shore beaches are relatively "clean," but after storms or when heavy winds blow from the ocean they are strewn with garbage from city refuse scows.

Testimony of Spy in Coal Case Shows Plans for Lindbergh

Lindbergh reached a boiling point among Democratic politicians in New York City yesterday when they learned that Charles Lindbergh will be brought to Washington before he comes to New York, and they were quick to throw the whole blame on the shoulders of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, the former Republican assistant secretary of the Navy.

Roosevelt, they charged, had suggested to [illegible] Washington friends, that Lindbergh be asked to come to Washington. They charged Roosevelt was piqued because of certain plans in connection with the New York reception.

Grover Whalen, chairman of Mayor James J. Walker's committee for reception of distinguished guests, said that Lindbergh's desire to [illegible] had "disputed most of New York's plans."

Mayor Is Sore.

Earlier in the day, Mayor Walker had stated that President Coolidge's invitation to Lindbergh, extended by a special committee of cabinet members, to come direct to Washington, was "in contra-distinction to every tradition."

Lindbergh refused $1,000,000 offered him for a year's work in the films and on the lecture platform, Rene Nacover, theatrical producer, revealed yesterday when he arrived here on the liner Paris. Nacover attempted to open the negotiations with Lindbergh in France and said the flyer turned down his offer without hesitation.

President Coolidge acted upon his own initiative in inviting Lindbergh to re-enter the United States via Washington, it was said at the White House yesterday ament reports from New York that democratic city and state officials there were incensed over the nullification of Gotham's ambitious plans for receiving the trans-ocean flier.

STANDARD OIL USED KELLOGG TO JAIL ENEMY

Long Arm of Octopus Busy in Mexico

Standard Oil, Department of Justice agents, Mexico and oil mix in a strange fantastic story which culminated yesterday in charges that Cecilio Velasco had been kidnaped. He is the attorney for independent oil companies in the Tampico field which are fighting Standard Oil.

E. Basil O'Connor, partner of Franklin D. Roosevelt, sponsored the charges, which includes the flat statement that Standard Oil influenced Secretary of State Kellogg to have Department of Justice agents go to Mexico City to kidnap Velasco, while him out of Mexico and place him in a Texas jail.

Independent exploiters are suing Standard Oil in Mexico for $28,000,000 over land titles, and Velasco had been appointed by Mexican courts to see that Standard did not remove its assets to that value pending the settlement of the suit.

Nevertheless Standard is moving equipment from Tampico to Venezuela, according to O'Connor and in addition has had Velasco kidnaped and jailed.

Injunction Against Painters.

Supreme Court Justice Faweett in Brooklyn yesterday granted three boss painters a temporary injunction to restrain District Council 9 of Manhattan, of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, from calling a strike of workers on jobs of the three boss painters.

The injunction was obtained by Schwartz and Fuller, Elkin and Goldman, and Forman and Minchowsky, all of Manhattan. These three concerns were among the 27 which two months ago obtained a similar injunction from Justice Callaghan restraining District Council 9 of the same union in Brooklyn from calling strikes on their jobs.

The injunctions are effective until June 15. The workers are demanding $14, a $2 increase.

The Village Atheist's Son Makes Good

By CHARLES PAGE in Chicago Tribune.

Charles August Lindbergh, the father of the new hero of the air, was born here in the days of the Civil war. In the light of his son's achievement it is interesting to recall that Lindbergh pere established an office and as now a record of business as that shown by his illustrious son.

Consider the other Lindbergh. A first generation Swedish immigrant. In Little Falls, the Lindbergh home, he was known for his radical and atheistical utterances. In spite of this he was elected to congress and remained there from 1907 to 1917.

Then America went to war, and Congressman Lindbergh wrote Why is Your Country at War.

In June 1918 the Chicago staff writer, Arthur M. Evans, wrote of Lindbergh's book: "The reader looks instinctively to see if it bears a German copyright. It doesn't, but it contains many choice morsels of thought that might be gobbled with relish in Potsdam."

In the same month the Tribune special correspondent in Washington telegraphed an attack made by Representative Miller in which Lindbergh was declared "because of the attacks which he made upon the American government a friend of the Kaiser whether he wishes it or not."

Why is Your Country at War contains the political creed of Lindbergh, senior. To publicly state such a creed in 1917 was considered political madness. I quote at random from the book.

"We have been dragged into the war by the intrigue of the speculators."

"The few now desire to cut off every possible avenue of escape from industrial slavery for the masses."

"The trusts are determined to control these problems in their own favor, and use every adroit method to parade the machine office-holders as the only 'true Americans in office.'"

"The system, however, will never be corrected by simply following leaders, for as I have explained, leaders are very valuable to big business, are quickly discovered by big business. Big business can afford and does buy them."

"The real problem is not so much how to end the war. . . as it is how to deal with the problem that causes war, that is, the 'special privilege' system itself."

"Of all cowards, no other is so cowardly as the average politician. . ."

"We must substitute reason for tradition—if we are ever to unshackle ourselves from the arbitrary domination of property privilege over human right."

"Unhesitatingly, I declare it to be the most solemn duty of the state to establish a system to liberate mankind from the existing industrial slavery."

"Are you a farmer—a wage earner—or engaged in any of the occupations required to be filled with industrious men and women in order to fulfil the many necessities of life? If you are—why do you let capital—a product of your toil, sit on the throne of human industry as the master of all—to determine your place in life and starve you for drudgery, even as you if it chooses."

For writing the book the political powers that be hounded Lindbergh senior. He was called "pro-German," "Hun" and all the frenzied epithets used during the war period. In Little Falls the Lindberghs were ostracized by the patriotic Little Falleens.

When Lindbergh ran for Governor of Minnesota on the Non-Partisan League ticket the book was widely quoted and used against him to prove his radical and atheistic tendencies.

"Read it, brother," said Lindbergh, "and you will find that everywhere, in all lands, at all times many dignitaries of the church. . . have been on the side of oppression." For this he was called an atheist.

The Hill railroad interests, Pillsbury Flour and the U. S. Steel spent millions to defeat him. In many counties patriotic organizations paraded to the polling places and publically burned League ballots.

And now Charles A. Lindbergh jr. has made good. Today he hobnobs with royalty itself.

The self same forces which united in 1918 to defeat his father today sing praises to the young man.

Politicians of high and low degree bask in the reflected glory of the intrepid airman.

They forget that during the trying war days young Charles stood loyally by his father all through the slander of the war mongers. They have forgotten that it requires courage to hold off a howling mob of infuriated jingoists.

Myron T. Herrick, ambassador to France and a member of the Ohio gang, describes young Lindbergh as follows: "Had we searched all America, we could not have found a better type than young Lindbergh to represent the spirit and high purpose of our people. He is the Lincoln type. Who can say more?"

Already Lindbergh's name is being coupled with U. S. Army propaganda. A leaflet has appeared on the streets of New York urging enlistment and bearing Lindbergh's picture on the cover.

Coolidge offered the aviator a naval escort on his return to America and Al Smith awarded him the Medal of Honor.

When he arrives in New York it is safe to say that it will be impossible to see Lindbergh for Tammany politicians.

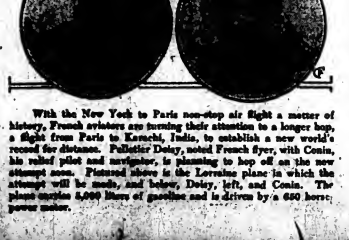
In the Non-Partisan League states Lindbergh senior is still spoken of with pride by his followers who remember the courageous stand he took in the face of a war-crazed citizenry.

No wonder the controllers of capitalistic press are suppressing sympathetic news about the airman's father. One Chicago daily said that such an article "would not be helpful now."



No wonder the financial pirates of the country who did their best to have the older Lindbergh mobbed don't want the public to know that "the spirit and high purpose of our people, the Lincoln type," is best represented in a profoundly radical family.

THERE are many reasons why a worker should die, but there are more why he should live. Those burdened with the slave mind will put up with the terrible monotony and merciless exploitation of a life of wage slavery. Those who have been awakened into class consciousness will join with their comrades to fight against the system that makes slaves of them. Others will escape into the business world if they can. Those who lose faith in the possibility of the world ever becoming a happy place to sojourn in, on the return journey to the earth out of which we were taken will contemplate suicide and some will do it. Fortunately the latter are not many. We can only express our regret for the sorrow that must have dined on the heart of Franz Bostrom during those last lonely years when hope faded from his vision and his once optimistic soul dried up like the bed of a river that changed its course. He is now at peace and the sordidness of life is behind him.

PARIS TO INDIA, NEW AIR GOAL

With the New York to Paris non-stop air flight a matter of history, French aviators are turning their attention to a longer hop, a flight from Paris to Karachi, India, to establish a new world's record for distance. Pelletier Doisy, noted French flyer, with Conin, his veiled pilot and navigator, is planning to hop off on the new attempt soon. Pictured above is the Levasseur plane in which the attempt will be made, and below, Doisy, left, and Conin. The plane carries 4,000 liters of gasoline and is driven by a 650 horse power motor.

PROFESSIONAL PATRIOTS

The amazing story of the "Red" scare, the 35-odd societies into which it grew, and the "wild impulses" of union-busting businessmen and their benevolent understudies. The methods of their propaganda against radical and pacifist organizations was also described, together with the sources of their support.

"Professional Patriots" was edited by Norman Thomas from material gathered by Sidney Howard, co-author with Robert Dunn of "The Labor Spy," and John Hearley.

All these organizations operate from single offices. There are no branch offices, except that of Boeschen of the Republic in Milton, Mass. All of the headquarters of those operating nationally are in New York or Washington. None has active local groups, and only occasionally do their chief representatives appear publicly elsewhere than in New York or Washington. They are highly centralized propaganda bureaus, working almost entirely by mail or through the press. This of course does not apply to the purely local organizations, like the Better America Federation, nor to the American Legion and the K.K.K. The Legion and the Klan

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

GOVERNOR Fuller of Massachusetts has announced the appointment of an advisory committee in connection with his investigation of the Sacco-Vanzetti case. Frankly, this business does not look good to me. The governor is a politician and fears that whatever decision he may make will have a detrimental effect on his political career so he brings up a few reserves who in all probability have no reason to fear the wrath of any section of voting Americans.

WHAT we fear most in this situation is the danger that this committee might surrender sufficiently to the popular claim in favor of Sacco and Vanzetti to commute their sentences of death to life imprisonment. This would be a greater and more gross miscarriage of justice than the farce presented in judge Thayer's court-room. Our comrades are innocent. They were framed up because of their activity in behalf of the workingclass. They must be freed. This is the time to inject new life into the agitation to Save and Free Sacco and Vanzetti.

AS I already noted in this column the capitalist press carefully avoided giving us any information about the reaction of British labor towards the breaking off of diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. But sometimes a good picture gets by a city editor when a written story gets the waste basket. An international Newsreel shows a monster demonstration of London workers with banners protesting against the action of the tory government and our latest exchanges give us the true picture of the wave of resentment that swept thru the ranks of the British workingclass when the Government of Forgers and Burglars broke with the Workers Republic.

IT is encouraging to note that the Soviet Union is not taking the British threat with a whimpering tone. Without any desire to indulge in heroics the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union have shaken their clenched fist—it's some fist at that; the muscle power of 150,000,000 people is behind it, also the brain power—at the Robber Empire and challenged the decadent aristocrats to do their worst. And the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union can count on the active sympathy of millions of other workers thruout the world, for hundreds of millions have a bone to pick with world imperialism and a whole skeleton with the British Empire.

THE armies of the Manchurian bandit, Chang-Tso-Lin are in disorderly retreat and we have not heard that the reporters who staked their reputations on the invincibility of the brigand's mercenaries have yet cut their throats. How the liars have been exposed. While those knights of the gaudy falsehood pictured Hankow in panic and the foes of the Chinese revolution getting ready to slaughter the leaders of the workers' and peasants' organizations, the Nationalist generals were reorganizing their forces on the heels of the perfidy of Chiang-Kai-Shek, in preparation for the northern advance. Now they are thinking up a new line. Frederick Moore, the famous prevaricator of the New York Times has had another lapse into silence. Perhaps, like old Ike Burns, he has gone into retirement to think up a new scheme.

LIKE buzzards when they smell a fresh killing, the armies and naval forces of the imperialist powers are moving northwards on the flanks of the Nationalists. Those human birds of prey are afraid that their rich pickings in China are endangered. What a calamity it will be for many a gaudy female parasite, whose keeper's pounds and dollars are invested in Chinese raw wealth and cheap Chinese labor if the coolies should begin to eat meat. In fact we will compromise with the vegetarians on spinach soup if the cooling provide the rice with company. Thousands of poodle dogs may go without jeweled earrings but millions of Chinese children will be saved from the river and from a worse fate as adult slaves.

CHRISTIANITY never showed up to a worse advantage than in China at the moment. Of course there are comparatively few people now that believe the Christian god has power enough to blow out a candle but there are many who believe that the dogs the missionaries have been handing out would make pacifists out of the Chinese. Not that christians are averse to the shedding of blood. When they shed blood, they shed it for some holy cause but when Chinese, Hindoos or Egyptians shed it, in behalf of their

FIGHT TO RESCUE SACCO AND VANZETTI!

SOVIET UNION COMMUNISTS DEFY BRITAIN

Will Make Invincible the Red Army

MOSCOW, June 2.—Central Committee of the All Union Communist Party has addressed the following appeal to all party organizations, workers, peasants and colonial comrades:

The most important political fact of recent days is the severance by British of diplomatic and trade relations with USSR. This is no casual fact but a continuation of the hostile policy which British conservative government has pursued since it came into power against the first proletarian state. The Soviet Union is the biggest obstacle in the way of the realization of the principle predatory designs of British conservatives. Precisely for this reason the conservative government has now passed to open energetic preparation for fresh attacks on the Soviet Union. This preparation has the closest connection with the deepening crisis of capitalism generally and British capitalism in the first place.

Building Socialism.

The USSR with one hundred and fifty million population having long since shaken off the yoke of the capitalists and landowners is building socialism in the Soviet country and presents an infectious example to the toiling masses of the Eastern and Western peoples, standing in the way of the predatory efforts of imperialism.

Menace in China.

The huge country of China with four hundred million people struggling to rid itself of the shackles of imperialism is creating for imperialism new insurmountable obstacles and lays there more sharply than ever before the contradictions of modern society. Contradictions between militant imperialism on the one hand and the proletarian dictatorship of the USSR and the national liberative revolution of China on the other hand show imperialistic policy rests on ground ever more tottering. There is a grave danger that the solution of these conflicting interests by acts of violence. This danger is becoming the more real that in the most important European states open, unrestrained reaction is actually supreme.

Drench World in Blood.

Chamberlain, Hicks, Chang Tso-lin and Churchill are heroes today. Conservative, imperialistic England is the sharp-shooter of the world counter-revolution. It crushed the General Strike, the heroic struggle of the miners and is now dealing summarily with its proletariat (Trade Disputes Act), strangling the Chinese revolution. It is the jailer of the peoples of India, Egypt, and South Africa, and is covering the whole world with a network of disgraceful espionage and intrigues reeking of blood and powder.

Policy of Peace.

The most important fact of today, the rupture of diplomatic and trade relations with the USSR, is but the culminating point of the dirty, criminal game of British conservative diplomacy and exposes the cards of Brit-

Two Wilkes Barre Girls Stripped and Murdered; Suspect Company Thugs

PITTSTON, Pa., June 2.—The brutal murder of two Wilkesbarre girls, Jennie Monica, 19, and Edith Fonza, 20, was revealed today when a mine employee found their bodies, unclad, in a field here today. The girls were slain after a terrific struggle.

Altho Wilkes Barre is in a district which is signed up with the union, numerous attempts have been made by companies to practically void these contracts, and the country is full of thugs the employers have imported.

Wife of President of Mexico Dies in U. S.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., June 2.—Senora Natalia Calles, wife of Mexico's president, died late today at a hospital here.

She went under the knife for a major operation last Saturday, and was believed to be well on the way of recovery when she suffered a sudden relapse. Three physicians and a nurse were at the bedside.

Rush Funds to Save Daily Worker

From many sections of the country come responses to our appeals for funds to enable us to weather the storm and continue publication of The DAILY WORKER. Workers who are familiar with the great fights through which we have gone during our existence realize that the present struggle to retain in this stronghold of the world's mightiest imperialism at least one English daily that cannot be silenced by the forces of reaction is their fight. From Detroit, Michigan, comes a check for two hundred dollars—money raised among the workers in the slave pens of that city. The Workers (Communist) Party nucleus in the Ford auto plant contributed $75 of the amount from Detroit. They have not forgotten the fight we put up against Fordism more than a year ago, and they want us to live to lead other fights.

Today our two members of The DAILY WORKER staff, William F. Dunne and Bert Miller, who are in prison, held without bail since last Friday, appear in court to receive their sentence on a verdict dictated by prejudice, bitter enmity against us because we are the defender of the interests of the working class against the employers, against the reactionary traitors to labor masquerading as leaders, against the rapacious imperialism of Wall Street in every part of the world.

We await a probable fine and further action of the post office authorities toward possible suspension of our mailing privileges. But in spite of everything we will keep the paper going if you realize the necessity of aiding us at this time.

Rush your contributions and defeat the conspiracy of the enemies of labor to silence us. Don't forget that the old bills you may now owe us must also be paid immediately, because every dollar now is worth much more than its face value in this crisis.

MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE, DAILY WORKER.

REPRESENTATIVES OF UNIONS MEET; DECRY INVASION

Demand Recognition of Nationalist Government

TOKIO, June 2.—Protesting against the dispatch of Japanese marines to Tientsin, representatives of labor unions and proletarian parties from all parts of Japan held a mass meeting in Tokio today.

The meeting urged the immediate recognition of the Hankow Nationalist government and demanded the immediate withdrawal of Japanese troops and warships from China.

Japanese labor has solidly opposed imperialist intervention. Japanese representatives played an important role in the Pan-Pacific Labor Conference which met in Hankow several days ago for the purpose of planning opposition to a new imperialist war in the Pacific and to imperialist intervention in China.

U. S. Force of 5,000.

SHANGHAI, June 2.—Fifteen hundred American marines left here for Tientsin today aboard the U. S. transport Henderson. They are the first of the force of 5,000 marines that is being rushed to Tientsin in preparation for the imminent fall of Peking.

Eight American warships are also sailing for Chefoo at the head of Tientsin Bay. The destroyers Pruit and Preble and the mine sweeper Bittern have been ordered from Tsingtao, while the destroyers Paul Jones, Noa and William B. Preston are sailing from Shanghai.

Plan War.

The imperialist powers hope to concentrate 15,000 troops at Tientsin within a few days. The whirlwind drive of the Hankow Nationalists thru Honan Province has made the danger of an open imperialist war against Nationalist China likely, observers say.

Great Britain has not abandoned her plans for the partition of China and the annexation of the rich Yangtze Valley, and will, if it is at all favorable, attempt to carry her plans into effect.

Strike in Salonika; Greek Tyrants Raise Cry of "Red" Revolt

Reports from Athens state a Communist uprising is taking place in Salonika, Greece, and that a group of Communists attempted to seize the governor's palace.

Greek Communists here declare that the characterization of "uprising" is undoubtedly employed to mean a strike in Salonika of large proportions in order to employ ruthless military tactics to crush it.

Brooklyn Co-ops Save Thousands For the Workers

The Finnish workers of South Brooklyn have met the problems of operative enterprise in housing and rising rents and high price of foodstuffs by the organization of co-food production.

The power quality of bakery products, and the exorbitant prices demanded by private shop-keepers during and after the war, prompted these workers to take the matter into their own hands to see what could be done to relieve the situation.

The result was a co-operative bakery, on 8th avenue and 42nd street, Brooklyn, which began operations in 1926, and in the seven years of its existence has increased its production almost 500 per cent, until now it is doing a yearly business of nearly half a million dollars. The superior quality of the bread and other products of this bakery has popularized it all over the city, so that seven trucks are kept busy on daily rounds through the five boroughs of New York City, and deliveries are made even to towns in New Jersey and up-state as far as Connecticut.

Fights Food Trust.

A "Finco" (co-operative trade-mark) 16 oz. loaf of white bread sells for the same price as the 12 oz. loaf made by the bread trust. The trust "loaf" is the standard size in this city.

Doom Still Hangs Over Heads of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti

BOSTON, June 2.—Friends of Sacco and Vanzetti today reiterated their warning that the doom of death hanging over the heads of the two staunch labor fighters is by no means removed by Governor Fuller's act in appointing an advisory committee.

They point out emphatically that the new committee will conduct its hearings in secret, star chamber sessions, just as the governor has been doing. Thus no opportunity has been left to counsel for the Italian workers to refute the vicious lies being woven anew to assure their death.

All three members of the new commision are conservatives of the accepted New England stamp. No matter how hard they strive for "impartiality" their own class bias and the class nature of the case will inevitably color their decisions.

Now as never workers must rally to the cause of Sacco and Vanzetti with the cry of "freedom or death," the same cry uttered by Vanzetti himself in his statement to the governor.

ARCOS OFFICIALS LEAVE LONDON AS RESULT OF BREAK

Moscow Soviet Approve Government Action

LONDON, June 2.—Officials connected with Arcos, Ltd., began their trip to Soviet Russia as a result of the diplomatic rupture with Great Britain. Today 35 Russians sailed on the steamer "Youshar." The former Chargé d'Affairs, M. Rosengolz and members of the Trade Delegation will leave tomorrow.

The British Foreign Office sent a note to the Russian legation announcing that all members of the staff of the embassy and Trade Delegation would be required to leave England, and that those remaining in England would be subject to special regulations.

(Special to the Daily Worker).

MOSCOW, June 2.—The plenary session of the Moscow Soviet, after hearing the report of Alexis Rykoff, President of the Council of People's Commissars, adopted a resolution entirely approving the Soviet government's action aiming for the preservation of peace, expressing readiness to support all measures for the defense of the USSR, and calling upon the population to organize effective methods of financial self-defense by ensuring the successful realization of state loans.

WOLL'S OUTFIT BOOSTS FOE OF SACCO, VANZETTI

Civic Federation Wants to Broadcast Wigmore

In an effort to drag Dean Wigmore of Northwestern law school, the only legal expert in the country who has been found to declare the Sacco-Vanzetti death sentence just and warranted, out of the obscurity of a Chicago methodist college, the National Civic Federation has written to Governor Fuller of Massachusetts proposing a debate between Wigmore and Felix Frankfurter, of Harvard.

Deriding as "propaganda" the efforts of the workers who have stayed the hand of Massachusetts "justice" from electrocuting Sacco and Vanzetti for six long years, Ralph Easley, chairman of the National Civic Federation's council, has asked the governor if he has "any objections" to the debate, which would be broadcast by radio.

But the Civic Federation, of which Matthew Woll, disrupter of the Furriers' Union, is acting president, fell into an open ditch in its letter when Easley commended the governor for not appointing a commission to review the case. Right on the heels of the Federation's pat on the back, Fuller did exactly that thing when he named three Bostonians as a committee to review the case.

"I only know what I read in the New York papers regarding it (the case)," writes Easley, "and since you did not take their advice to appoint a commission of impartial men;—as if there were any such thing in a case of this kind—to 'thrash it all out,' they seem to have lost interest in the matter."

Vicious and Incorrect.

Easley, Woll's man Friday, also takes a slap at the "rods" for saving Sacco and Vanzetti from the electric chair when he commended the governor as "giving a good lesson to the governments throughout the world which have been stirred up by their own Reds to make clemencies appeals to you."

LABOR SO ACTIVE REPRIEVES ARE PREDICTED SOON

But Struggle Must Be Vigorous to Free Them

Events of the last few days have proved that although Governor Fuller may not send Sacco and Vanzetti immediately to death, only that solidarity of labor in their behalf which has for seven years prevented them from being legally murdered can finally end their danger and their imprisonment. Meetings of workers all over the country have been held, but there must be more, and each of them must assert in thunderous tones—"Sacco and Vanzetti Must Not Die!"

Otherwise their seven years' purgatory will finally end in the flaming embrace of the electric chair.

BOSTON, June 2.—Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti may be granted respites from the execution of their death sentence, scheduled to take place in the electric chair at Charlestown State Prison on July 10

Governor Fuller has made no official announcement to this effect, but a reprieve is confidently expected following his appointment of a formal reviewing committee yesterday to assist him in investigating the biggest labor case of the 20th century.

Celestino Madeiros, also doomed to die soon for his part in the Wrentham bank robbery and murder, and self-confessed member of the gang responsible for the crime for which Sacco and Vanzetti were framed, is also scheduled to receive a reprieve. He holds within himself the explanation of the mystery concerning the South Braintree paymaster holdup and crime, fastened on the now famous Italian radicals.

Shields Fellow-Gangsters.

Madeiros has confessed his own passive part in the South Braintree murder but so far has refused to name positively the members of the gang. But they are known to be the Morelli gang, notorious Providence holdup men whom Felix Frankfurter of Harvard says are responsible.

President Lawrence Lowell of Harvard University, Judge Robert Grant and President Samuel W. Stratton of Massachusetts Institute of Technology have agreed to serve on the governor's advisory committee. They will act independently of the governor's own informal committee, consisting of himself, Lieutenant Governor Allen and Joseph Wiggin, personal attorney.

Grant was judge of the probate court and court of insolvency in Suffolk county from 1893 to 1923 and is

THE WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY AND THE CLASS STRUGGLE

By C. E. RUTHENBERG.

The Workers (Communist) Party is organized upon the basis of the capitalist system and the class struggle.

In the Workers (Communist) Party are organized those workers who understand the character of the struggle which the workers are fighting, and who are ready to unite their strength to give leadership to that struggle and to direct it along the road that will carry the workers forward to the Workers' and Farmers' Government and victory for the new social order.

In our country the class struggle has not yet developed to that sharp form which places the workers before the revolutionary struggle for power. The Workers (Communist) Party of the United States formulates policies for the immediate struggles for partial demands which will build up the power of the workers and prepare them for the REVOLUTIONARY STRUGGLE.

To achieve this end, the Workers (Communist) Party declares itself in favor of the following policies:

Support of the Workers' and Farmers' Struggles.

The Workers (Communist) Party supports and participates actively in every struggle of the workers and farmers against the capitalist class.

The Workers (Communist) Party enters into every fight which the workers make for higher wages, better working conditions, better conditions of labor. It endeavors to give leadership in these struggles, broaden them by bringing other workers to the support of those engaged in the struggle.

The Workers (Communist) Party fights with the farmers in their effort to secure relief from the unbearable conditions to which the capitalists are subjecting them.

It is through these struggles for their partial demands that the workers and farmers learn the nature of the capitalist system, the part which the government is playing in these struggle and the necessity of organizing their power for the fight against

TAX SWINDLE

Will Exempt Rich and Burden the Rest

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, June 2.—It is still impossible to say what the Senate will do with the measure and safely to predict that it will not do anything. Democratic leaders are letting the big boys know that all will be well in the matter of cutting down on their taxes next year. From various Administration sources have been authorized announcements that the "higher brackets" would receive no slashes, but in the past these have all been more or less not for direct publication.

Tax Program for Rich.

Now comes Senator David Reed, in senate life Secretary of the Treasury Mellon's attorney and public apologist by his allied mien and personal agent on the Senate floor in such matters as tax cutting and "explaining" the wholesale vote corruption in Mellon's home-state, Pennsylvania, with a frank pronouncement of what it is hoped the Administration can put through next session. Republican Senator Reed, who thinks it perfectly all right to spend some $8,000,000 to secure a senatorial nomination, the republicans proposed to abolish the remaining inheritance taxes, reduce by about $300,000,000 the corporation tax and cut to about 10 percent the surtaxes that the rich pay. He also hopes to be able to repeal some of the so-called "nuisance taxes," but only those effecting the rich, such as club dues and high admission fees.

Rob the Small Fry.

In simple language Senator Reed, who next to Senator Smoot of Utah, chairman of the senate finance committee, is the most important Administration member on that all-important committee, proposes to give those of incomes above $30,000 a huge reduction in taxes. The purpose is twofold, first to place the burden of income taxation on the small producer and secondly to prepare the field for a wholesale "shake-down" of the rich for the 1928 campaign.

Reed would say nothing about the "shake-down" for the 1928 political fight, but he very frankly declared that it was time that the rich "were given tax relief."

"In my opinion there ought to be no reduction of the rates on small incomes," Reed remarked, "the exemptions are high enough and there seems no necessity for further reductions in the rates or increase in the exemptions. The rates on incomes from $30,000 to $75,000 are out of proportion with the rates on other incomes. This class has only been brought down about 10 per cent since 1919. The rates on such incomes is too high and ought to be readjusted.

A Class Argument.

"American business would be aided in a reduction in the surtaxes. Money going to the government in taxes ought to be released for trade and business ventures. I favor a radical reduction in the surtaxes with the maximum at 10 per cent. I am also in favor of repeal of the inheritance taxes."

This naive reasoning, according to Senator Reed, applies only to the wealthy. That the man of small income might use his taxes for "business and trade ventures," does not follow, according to Senator Reed. Therefore only the rich will have their taxes reduced.

Standing between the reactionary republican administration and its plan to give the rich a luscious tax remittance will be the democrats, for the most part equally reactionary and anxious for big campaign contributions and the progressives who will be the balance of power. They have no hope for big campaign funds, but they are with only one or two exceptions, incompetent to make a strenuous opposition fight or ignorant of the fundamental issues.

Want Campaign Graft.

As a matter of fact as it now appears, Reed's program, which is that of Mellon's and Coolidge's, is most likely to get through. Both sides are hungry for campaign handouts and the Progressives have neither the guts nor the desire to make the fight necessary to prevent the boodle. They will utter a few complaints during the session and then return to their ballwicks and make strenuous campaigns about their heroic efforts in Washington against the "old party bosses."

The budget meeting which will be held June 13 is expected to disclose that the Treasury expects a surplus next year of over $300,000,000. It is the Administration's plan to return this amount in taxes to those of "the higher bracket" incomes—from $20,000 and upwards.

Rescue 8 in Fire.

Three women, a man and a baby were rescued by firemen and policemen from the upper floors of 7606 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn yesterday afternoon in a drugstore on the ground floor of the building.

SHOE WORKERS IN LONG FIGHT FOR REAL UNION

Brooklyn Bosses Bitter Enemies of Labor

"Rise and smite the tyrants" is the cry of the workers who have banded together in the ranks of labor defense unions, militant, or uniting control of unions, to fight for better conditions. They have been in many cities in bitter conflicts in contests with the bosses that a widespread persecution afflicts them in their struggles. Many of them think there is no use joining a union because they have lost hope of gaining anything thereby.

This attitude is easily understood in view of the history of the shoe workers, but it is suicidal to accept it. Again almost overwhelming odds the past two years a group of determined workers have held together and strengthened the Shoe Workers Protective Union, until it is a real influence in Brooklyn and New York.

Particularly instructive is the history of the betrayal of the shoe workers by a fake union organized by the employers, who hoped thereby to prevent a real union springing up.

Busting Up the "United."

In 1919 the Shoe Workers of Brooklyn, with the exception of the Goodyear factories workers, organized in the United Shoe Workers of America, about 11,000 strong.

The Goodyear operators were organized in an independent organization which had catered to the shoe manufacturers for the past 20 years by using their power to keep the lasters and other shoe workers unorganized, even going to the extent of striking against lasters and refusing to stitch their shoes when they would join a union.

In 1919 the manufacturers forced a strike on the "United," and with the "Goodyear Operators" as a nucleus, organized a union to break the strike.

The Bossed Fake Union.

This union was called the American Shoe Workers' Protective Union. This name was adopted for the purpose of fooling the Haverhill Shoe Workers who were organized 100% in the Shoe Workers' Protective Union. In this they were partially successful as when they went to that city for strike-breakers they made some of them think that it was a part of their own union.

The American Union controlled the workers from that time on in the factories of the manufacturers' association. There were many attempts to organize the shoe workers into bona fide unions but they all failed until 1924, when three locals here who had been in the United Union joined the Shoe Workers' Protective Union. The "Protective" was the first organization that was ever successful in winning the workers from the scabbery of the "American".

One of the first strikes which the "Protective" ever had, the "American", immediately through their president, A. Grady, signed up with the firm (Zwier & Grossman) and tried to fill the shop with scabs. The "Protective" from that time on has made steady progress in this line, having organized about two thousand workers in the trade and having agreements with some thirty manufacturers.

Up to 1923, the manufacturers had complete control of the American Union, an attorney sitting in every meeting of their Council to advise and steer them. At this period their funds were under the control of the manufacturers as it required the signature of one of the manufacturers on the checks to draw on their account.

About this time many shoe workers who had formerly refused to join the organization sent in applications and became members of the purpose of trying to wrest the union from the manufacturers. This continued until last fall, 1925 when the militants had become so strong that they had the same difficulty in putting over their agreement. The agreement of a year ago last November was the worse that had ever been thrust on, taking away every right that the workers ever had, causing many revolts to take place which convinced the manufacturers that the members could no longer be controlled and that they must rid the union of the militants.

The Miller Strike.

The fight was started by I. Miller and Sons discharging fourteen workers, including officers and board members of the fitters' union. This caused a walk-out of the entire crew of about 1100. Miller told Grady, the General President of the American Union, at that time, that if he would throw seven delegates out of the Council they could do business. Grady immediately called a special meeting of the Council and succeeded in having them expel the seven delegates, although they had no right to do it, as these delegates were elected by their locals and only the locals could recall them. When he reported to Miller he was told that that was not enough and that they must throw out the fifters officers [illegible] the fighters in those two locals, as most of the militants were in those locals. This was [illegible] for Grady to do. The result was that a general strike was advocated by Grady who had always held them from a strike in times when there was a chance of winning.

Sabotaged the Strike.

This strike was never intended to be won, and we have every reason to believe was a frame-up between the reactionary officials of the union and the manufacturers. The strike was declared about ten weeks before the season would open with the idea in view that after a few weeks under these conditions they would be willing to sign up under any conditions. The strike had not been on three days when Grady and other officials were trying to send back whole departments and crews oh the quiet and in many instances were successful. At the same time the agents of the reactionaries were holding meetings with the manufacturers at which it was proposed that they make an agreement with the American Union covering four locals which would leave out the fitters and lasters. This would leave the manufacturers free to hire whom they wanted in those departments. In that manner they would eliminate the fighters. Then the officials of the union would probably call their attention to the agreement calling for all employees to be members of the American Union and would be told to go ahead and organize them. They would then have had practically the same conditions as in 1919.

The plans did not work out. It is true that the strike was lost but instead of eliminating the fighters, only the fighters remained.

Reaction Defeated.

After the strike was declared off there was an election held on July 8th, in which Chester W. Bixby and Thomas J. Flood were elected general president and general secretary respectively, on the issue of amalgamating with the Shoe Workers' Protective Union. These officials took their offices with the understanding that no wages would be paid for the purpose of clearing up the affairs of the union and uniting them with the Shoe Workers' Protective Union.

Immediately after the election there was a meeting held in the office of Franklin C. Haven, between him and Reilly and Donovan, ex-agents of the Goodyear operators and the finishers and packers locals, ex-president Grady and William Ahearn, at which Haven suggested that they agree the manufacturers as he stated that they had been calling him up for several days to see if he could not help them to get another manufacturers' union. Franklin C. Haven is the attorney who secured the charter in 1919 for the "American" union and who for about four years attended with the council meetings and advised for the manufacturers. Since then an attempt has been made by these reactionary leaders to form what they call the Greater New York Shoe Workers' Union and they have already got a charter from the state.

Consolidate Two Organizations.

There has been an agreement entered into between the Shoe Workers' Protective Union and the "American" Union under the new administration to have the membership of the American transferred into the "Protective" and the members of the "Protective" to organize an association for the purpose of owning property to be incorporated and then this incorporation and the American Union which is incorporated, to merge together under the name, charter and by-laws of the new corporation. Already they have transferred several organized shops over to the "Protective". These shops were organized and had independent agreements as they were not in the Manufacturers' Association, but we cannot finish the work of clearing up the situation and establishing one organization of shop workers in this district unless we have raised the money necessary to square the bills which we inherited from the old administration.

Defeated Renegades.

After being defeated and discredited [illegible] and agents of the employer with the assistance of the bosses' lawyer, Franklin C. Haven, tried to use the old headquarters of the American union to reorganize the thing and sign agreements with the employers so they could oust the "Protective". Even in this they failed because they are so utterly discredited among shoe workers that no one would join the scabby outfit.

Progress Being Made.

The local organization, District Council No. 2 of the Shoe Workers' Protective Union, is making headway against almost insurmountable obstacles. If the national office at Boston would render the assistance necessary the shoe industry could be organized in a very short time and a real fight waged against the horde of petty bosses who try to make slaves of their workers.

All shoe workers should get into this organization in order to establish and maintain decent conditions for themselves and get a wage sufficient to enable them to support their families.

Holiday Collections

On Decoration Day, when thousands of workers were out in the various camps and summer resorts, some of them did not forget the struggle of the cloakmakers and furriers and made it their business to do something for the prisoners on their vacation. At Camp Freiheit, a committee put up a radio set which was sold for $50.00. Comrade Losoff of the Joint Defense Committee, was present at "Camp Freiheit," which is situated near Camp Nitgedaigct. He made an appeal in behalf of the Cloakmakers and Furriers and the collection amounted to $53.80.

Wales Wandering Once More

LONDON, June 2.—From Unofficial sources it was learned today that the Prince of Wales hopes to leave England for Canada on July 2, remaining in Ottawa as the guest of the Canadian government for a few days before leaving for his ranch near Calgary. The prince expects to be absent about two months. It is not considered likely whether he will return through the United States.

Coolidge Will Not Run

Calls on Wall Street Gets Little Business

WASHINGTON, June 2 (FP)—Leaving Washington, Coolidge went to New York, where he remained three days, the longest visit he has paid to the United States capital since he left it to become President. He spent the time golfing and talking with Wall Street.

The general consensus of opinion there coincided with official Washington life is dull and uninteresting. It will find, in his private life, every effort made by certain public men connected with foreign affairs of the United States to aid and assist him to the limit.

Had The Drop On Kellogg.

The point is, that Dennis created a lullabalee in Kellogg's office not so very long ago, by suddenly leaving his post in Nicaragua and sailing for the good old U. S. A., preceded by a warning that he had in his possession letters showing Kellogg directly involved in the internal affairs of Nicaragua. The latter is now a mere protectorate of the U. S., but then it was an independent country, with which Kellogg kept up a pretense of friendship. The documents Dennis had are said to have shown Kellogg in the act of creating a conservative reactionary revolt against the liberal constituted authorities.

Nervous Nell Sickens.

When he neared Washington, Kellogg became very sick, and went off on a vacation. Somebody else talked to Dennis, and now he is "going into business," without anything more heard of the documents.

Dennis, before his decision to be silent, said quite a lot also about the favoritism in the U. S. consular services. In fact, he published a letter on it.

Promoting The Rich.

The issue raised by Dennis was that consular officers were kept in low-paid and dishgrvous posts in the "mosquito belt" and in other difficult places, while younger men who had money and social pull were sent to European capitals to live a gay and idle life among tearooms and dance parlors. These "career men" of the diplomatic branch were pictured, by Dennis and by other consuls who did not permit their names to be used, as being slavishly devoted to British models in manner, speech and dress, and with being greedy for big salaries and no work.

Crisis Over.

When the Dennis letter was quoted in the press, Undersecretary Grew—in the absence of Kellogg—issued a brief but flatulatory statement in which he said that Dennis' letter had included many suggestions which might prove valuable, and that the department would be glad to consider and act upon them where possible.

Now that a good business berth has received Dennis, the crisis for the the "career men" in the diplomatic branch is over until congress shall see fit to investigate the charge that an oligarchy in the department is ignoring the Rogers law which placed the diplomatic and consular officers on an equal footing as regards promotion and pay.

TALKING of Egyptians, you will notice that when the Egyptian parliament voted to transfer the functions now discharged by the Sirdar, or British commander-in-chief to the Minister of War, the British government sent four warships to "impress" the parliament. Sir Austen Chamberlain, the hero of Locarno (where the doves of peace was let loose) speaking in the house of commons on the question declared that Britain was morally responsible for the protection of foreigners. Comment on this typical piece of imperialist hypocrisy would be like carrying filth to a sewer.

THERE has been a gratifying response to our appeal for funds to save The DAILY WORKER. The financial crisis was complicated by the conviction and imprisonment of our editor, William F. Dunne and business manager Miller. But strange to say——or is it?—our readers and particularly the members of the Party, instead of losing heart, getting discouraged or becoming pulloosophers of despair and doubt, went to their pocket books and sent us dollars. As O. Henry had it, in one of his delightful stories of delightful scoundrels, describing two confidence men in a barroom: "They cursed furiously and threw down dollars."

BUT our benefactors cursed at the enemy and not at us. This morning I opened a letter addressed to me personally and saw an artistic piece of green paper peeping out. It bore the legend: $7.50. and the letter ran quite modestly: "Excuse the familiarity, but I have come to know you quite intimately thru your columns. . . . We have just emerged from a disastrous strike. . . . In the meantime, heads up! The game is breaking our way in the East and the birth of a new social-order is visible on the horizon." This is the way Frank Brochian answered our call. This is the kind of language we like to hear. It is double barreled. It sheds up the printers and it gives the capitalists to understand that even tho we are standing on our toes in the dark, we will get on our feet again—with the aid of comrades like Frank Brochan.

WHILE it is true that we have stalled off the printers for the week the emergency is not over. To save The DAILY WORKER now would be a calamity and one week follows the next with monotonous regularity. And printers are just as human as you or I, brother. This was one of several suits filed against various contractors who erected the army cantonment but it was not known here whether the other suits had been discontinued.

"KINGS" SCHEME MEXICAN REVOLT

Rebels Admit Aid From U. S. "Organizations"

WASHINGTON, June 2.—That American business men are plotting the overthrow of Calles with the aid of the Hughes and that they are receiving the unqualified support of the State Department was clearly indicated today with the publication of a statement by Enes Capestran Jacques, notorious rebel, and disclosures made in a Mexican presidential decree further say department of the United States Government to purchase goods in the United States.

In announcing the failure of his rebellion, Gurza declares that "funds which were to have been forthcoming from an American organization have not been furnished." It has long been known that certain religious organizations and more especially certain oil barons have been planning to subsidize a revolt against the Calles Government.

That the State Department has been lending its support to these plans is clearly brought out by its refusal to permit the sale of American arms and munitions to the Mexican Government which needed them to suppress "religious" revolts supported and subsidized by American oil interests, political observers in close touch with the situation state. The State Department has also refused to permit the Mexican Government to import 8 commercial airplanes, it was learned.

Mexican Government Has U. S.

Pointing out the serious injuries to Mexico resulting from the policy of the State Department, President Calles issued the following decree Monday:

In view of the fact that the Government of the United States of America has established a systematic embargo on merchandise acquired by various dependencies of the Federal Government, a procedure whereby serious injuries are caused in the administrative conduct of said dependencies, since even how many of the articles already bought have not been received, the Executive in my name has decided to direct, in order to avoid the inconvenience caused by this unjustified delay, that from the date of the present decree all departments of State and administrative departments abstain absolutely from purchasing directly or indirectly in the said country furniture, machinery, articles of consumption and others in general intended for the administration of the public services and that such purchases be made in all cases from commercial firms established within the national territory.

For this purpose the Department of Foreign Relations will immediately issue definite orders to the Embassy and Consulates of the republic in the United States so that they may on no account make payment in contravention of the orders herein contained, which the Department of Finance and Public Credit will issue orders in the same sense to the financial agency of Mexico in New York.

PEACE: FIGHT ON IMPERIALIST WAR

Trade, Says Vuyo

Britain's break with the Soviet Union will throw more Soviet trade to the United States, is the opinion of Sokolnikov, the president and general manager of the All-Russian Textile Syndicate.

The All-Russian Textile Syndicate buys annually more than $35,000,000 of American cotton and needs textile machinery. "Irrespective of the situation in Great Britain," says Yonov, "the Soviet's trade with the U.S.A. will increase, but the rupture is bound to help the United States still more in this trade. I believe that Germany also will be benefited in the event the United Kingdom, through its Department of State, breaks off trade relations."

Of the growth of the Soviet Union industry he says: "Over 80 textile mills have been built or are under construction as a part of our textile program."

Succo and Vanz Memorial at Comintern Red Aid Congress

BERLIN, May 21. (By Mail).—The opening session of the Second Congress of the German Red Aid [illegible] which took place this week in the crowded Sport Palast, became into a tremendous demonstration of international proletarian solidarity. Many thousands of Berlin workers, communists, social democrats and non-party workers participated in the mass-meeting at which the congress was opened. The march past of the standard company of the Red Front Fighters League was greeted with great applause.

Comrade Wilhelm Pieck, the chairman of the Red Aid organization in Germany, welcomed the delegates and the representatives of the Red Aid organizations from other countries. The speaker then paid a moving tribute to the victims of the bourgeois reaction, to the tens of thousands murdered and imprisoned proletarian fighters. The great mass meeting rose spontaneously to its feet. The speaker concluded his remarks by appealing to those present to strengthen the Red Aid Organization with all possible means as one of the most important fighting organizations of the working class, particularly to the present moment when the international situation was tense and the danger of a new war at hand.

The following comrades, most of whom are in capitalist prisons, were elected honorary members of the Congress Presidium: the President of the International Red Aid, Klara Zetkin, Max Hoelz, Rudolf Margies and Streletsky (Germany), Sacco and Vanzetti (United States), Stefanoff (Rumania), Pavlov (Bulgaria), Rakosi and Szanto (Hungary), Bordiga and Grameci (Italy) and André Marty (France).

Following the election of the Presidium, the representative of the E. C. of the International Red Aid delivered a speech to the meeting in the name of the E. C. of the I.R.A. and of 11 million members of Red Aid organizations in all countries. Comrade Dmetrov spoke in the name of the Central Committee of the Russian Red Aid organization. He presented three flags to the German organization in the name of the Moscow, Kharkov and Samara district organizations of the Red Aid. His appeal to the workers to follow the example of the Russian workers and peasants' who had got rid of their oppressors for all time, was welcomed with great applause. Comrade Todria, the representative of the Central Committee of the Red Aid in Georgia then spoke and was welcomed with protracted applause. He also brought a flag from his organization and presented it to the German organization. Representatives of the Red Aid organizations in Poland, Denmark and Switzerland also spoke. The political prisoners in Warsaw sent the congress a flag and the political prisoners in Cottbus (Germany) sent a picture. After various telegrams a greeting was read and a number of resolutions adopted, the mass play "The Red Flood" was produced and greeted with great applause.

Chicago Committee for Hands Off China Calls Conference for June 12

Charging that the presence of 9,000 United States Marines on Chinese soil places the people of this country face to face with the problem of war and declaring that the present policy of the U. S. in China is one of intervention on behalf of big business, a committee of prominent Chicagoans headed by Clarence Darrow, Congressman A. J. Sabath, Dr. John A. Lapp and others, have called a conference of local organizations under the watchword, "Hands-Off-China."

Meets June 12

William H. Holly, provisional secretary of the Chicago Hands-Off-China Committee announced today that the conference will meet at 10 a. m. on Sunday, June 12 at Musicians Hall, 175 W. Washington St.

Prominent individuals representing liberal, labor and church opinion are members of the committee. These include, in addition to the above, President John Fitzpatrick of the Chicago Federation of Labor; Prof. Ferdinand Schevill; William A. Cunnes; Rev. Paul Hutchinson, Editor of the Christian Century; Miss Margaret Hiller of the Teachers' Union; Edward Nockels, Secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor; Christien Madsen of the Painters Union; Anton Johnsen of the Carpenters Union; Manuel Gomez of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League; C. T. Chi of the Chicago Kuomintang, and Miss Ethelyn Byrnton of the Women's International League.

Organized Committee

The Chicago Hands-Off-China Committee was formed a few weeks ago to arouse popular sentiment against intervention of any kind by the United States government in China. At a mass meeting held in Addams Auditorium on May 8, addressed by Miss Jane Addams, Miss Margaret Haley, Dr. Lapp and others, a strong protest was made against the presence of U. S. troops in China and the principle of "China for the Chinese" advocated.

Underfed Children of British Workers Join In "Empire Day" Fetes

LONDON, May 20 (By Mail). — "Empire Day" was recently celebrated here. The children of the working class marched past the Union Jack in their school playgrounds, and were made to salute the symbol of "their" Empire.

Out of these children, who number 6,000,000 (apart from cripples, mental defectives, blind, and deaf), according to the Ministry of Health report:

"2,619,350 children have to go to the school doctors during one year. Of these 800,000 require special treatment, 33,767 suffer from malnutrition, the remainder from tuberculosis, nervous diseases, defective vision, poor teeth, adenoids—all developments from malnutrition and overstrain. Over half of the children in attendance at elementary schools are below the normal in health."

Predict Riots as White Terrorists in Roumania Put Gag on Newspapers

BERLIN, June 2.—Wholesale suppression of Roumanian newspapers attacking the government, is reported from Bucharest.

The newspaper attacks are understood to have followed the appeal of King Ferdinand, who is again critically ill, for a coalition of parties.

According to reports received here there are fears that the newspaper suppressions will be followed by disorders, the white regime in Roumania is employing every terrolet device to suppress the growing criticism of its policies.

U. S. S. R. Communists Defy Tory Britain

ish imperialism which has inspired and organized the imperialistic campaign against the Soviet Union. While British imperialism systematically day after day was and is preparing war against the USSR, our Party and the USSR pursues a policy of peace. All testify to the peaceful policy of our Party and the Soviet Union. All know we did everything possible for preservation of peace. We want peace for the victorious construction of socialism and the realization of our great plans for the industrialization of the USSR. We want it in the name of a better life for the workers and peasants. We fought for peace, using all available means without giving in to predatory acts of the Conservative Government and manifesting the greatest coolness and patience. This is proven by facts known to all. The "incident" of the Chinese Eastern Railway (Chang Tso-lin's attack last year) the recent raid, robbery and executions in Peking, the police blockade of our Consulate in Shanghai, the torrents of abuse and calumnies against our country by vetal presses of the British Government Lords and the London City Pirates, the disgraceful diplomatic campaign against USSR by members of British government, the campaigns of forgeries and arrogant ultimatums, and lastly the bandit robbing of Arcos and violation of the rights of our Trade Delegation as guaranteed by British Government—to all these provocatory acts we replied by a policy of peace.

A Step Toward War.

All this makes clear the meaning in such conditions of the breaking off of normal relations undertaken by the Baldwin-Chamberlain Government, and the direction in which the policy of the British tories is developing. The act of rupture is unquestionably a step to war against the Soviet Union. This is clear to the most prominent representative of the British liberal bourgeoisie, Lloyd George ("Only arrow left is the thunder arrow—War"). This must then be still clearer to every proletarian and in the first place to every member of the All Union Communist Party. It must be clear to every worker and peasant why England is preparing war against us, arming neighboring states, provoking the break with the Soviet Union and brandishing the sword.

Labor Turns to Left.

The stabilization of British capitalism is ever more sapped by the growing contradictions within England herself as well as her colonies and dependencies. British imperialism wishes by force of arms to improve its affairs, which are in sad condition. The British proletariat is shifting leftwards, being revolutionized in spite of Hick's gendarmerie, Baldwin's hypocrisy, and the treachery of the MacDonalds and Purcells.

Failure in China.

British policy in China has failed. Her "prestige" in China can only be supported by Britain with guns. At the same time there is growing a warm sympathy toward the Soviet Union on the part of all peoples oppressed and enslaved by England. This is the source of the animal hatred of conservative Britain against the Soviet Republic. The instability of her own position drives Britain on the adventure of organizing war against the USSR. It must also be clear to every worker and peasant what kind of war; what designs the tory government has against the USSR; with what it wishes to present the workers and peasants of Soviet Russia. The immediate object of the rupture and the arrogant threats against the USSR is to stop the powerful economic growth of the Soviet Union or at least to stem the successes of Socialistic construction, successes which are infectious example to European and English workers, and causes the international bourgeoisie to tremble.

Want to Crush Revolution.

The most cherished aim in the crusade which Britain is preparing against Soviet Union is the liquidation of the Proletarian Dictatorship, the overthrow of the Soviet Power, the liquidation of socialistic construction and a return in the old regime making the USSR a colony of the British bankers and an agrarian accessory to international imperialism. To the workers of the Soviet Union this victory of the British Black Hundreds would mean denationalization of industry, returning the factories and mills to the Riabushinskys and Urquharts, taking back their eight hour work-day and making a gallows barracks of the workshops.

British Aim in Russia.

If in their own "home" country the conservatives have not hesitated to throw the English working class far back with their notorious anti-trade-union law, they would have still less reason to hesitate in an "alien" conquered country. To the peasants of USSR such a victory of the conservatives would mean a "second advent" of the landowners, serfdom, new Denikins and Wrangels, punitive expeditions, robbery of peasant lands (British imperialists are already doing this in China) and dark barbarity in the villages.

Would Restore Tsarism.

To the free toiling nationalities of the Soviet Union this would mean making them humiliated and enslaved "alien" nationalities, restoration of the gibbets of Tsarism, and the establishment of a regime such as British imperialism created for the Hindu peasants and Egyptian fellahs. Such are the designs of the enemy. The first duty of the workers and peasants of our country is to be on guard; to face the danger; to be ready with resistance. We must reply to the growing danger of war by still more powerful, still more intense efforts on the economic fronts. We must energetically raise the socialistic industry and raise the productivity of labor through carrying out the socialistic nationalization of industry. We must improve rural economy and transport; must raise and develop war industry for the defense of the country; must intensify the struggle against the plague of bureaucratism. We do not know and cannot know when the enemy will openly attack the USSR with bayonets, but undoubtedly British imperialism is ever more assiduously preparing to approach these terms.

Must Prepare to Resist.

The working masses of the Soviet Union must reply to these preparations with preparations of their own. In face of war danger this must be no "small," "quantitative" business when dealing with raising the economic, cultural, military and political might of the country. The productive work of every proletarian and peasant is a great addition to the defense of the proletarian republics. The separate efforts of millions thrown into the common pool will be the pledge of our success.

Make Army Invincible

Utmost attention must be given to our army and to questions of workers' and peasants' defense. All toilers, above all their Communist vanguard, must intensify help to workers and peasants' army and its care. It is necessary to strengthen the ties between the Red Army and the worker and peasant masses. It is necessary to intensify the work of volunteer sport organizations; to intensify the preparation of the whole party mass in the matter of military education. Every member of the party, every young worker and peasant must go through a course of this preparation.

Bolshevik Preparation

Be on guard; prepared for the defense of the country; prepared genuinely like Bolsheviks, firmly, unswervingly, without panic. Such is the task today. There is no room within the ranks of the All-Union Communist Party for slackness, looseness and annecessary good nature. Our party throughout the checkered career of its great historical way, has ever manifested itself as the inexhaustible source of revolutionary proletarian energy.

Our party has always everywhere manifested the greatest political farsightedness. Today as before, the members of our party must be a model to all proletarians and peasants; a model of energy, accurate work, workers' heroism. War may be forced upon us despite all our efforts to preserve peace. For this worst emergency, all toilers and in the first place the Communist Party, must prepare: not to waste time, but to raise economy, consolidate transport and defense; work still more energetically amidst the masses in the mills, workshops and villages—this is the paramount duty of all members of the All-Union Communist Party.

Defy British Imperialism.

If British imperialists pursue their policy, if they overstep another limit, if they start an open attack on our country, they will let lose an all-European war which will inevitably have as a sequel the greatest class battles. In these battles European capitalism will be destroyed and in the long run the Soviet dictatorship of the bourgeoisie will be replaced by a dictatorship of proletarian soviets. All the greater is the responsibility resting upon members of our Party. They will be heroic leaders of the international revolution.

London Workers Protest Breach of Relations

This picture shows a great parade by which thousands of British workers denounced the Tory raiding of Arcos House and the breach of trade relations with the Soviet Union. Banners criticize Baldwin and Joynson-Hicks. The police attacked the parade.

What's What in Washington

By LAWRENCE TODD.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—(FP).—Shall the American delegates in the naval limitation conference which will open at Geneva on June 20 submit to the British and Japanese delegates a plan for drastic reduction of the present cruiser and submarine strength of these three nations? Or shall the American proposal, with which the three-power conference will start, be simply one of standing still and forbidding any extension of the power that has been created in these branches of naval equipment?

These are problems faced by the conference which has been in session in Secretary Kellogg's office for almost a week. Admiral Hilary Jones, technical expert for the Navy, who has been attending the preliminary arms-reduction parleys of the League at Geneva, is leading the technical review of the world naval situation. Hugh Gibson, newly appointed ambassador to Belgium, now retired from the post of minister to Switzerland, is to be chairman of the American delegation, but he will be under instructions to make this a technical rather than a political conference of the three powers. Admiral Jonas will be heard more often than Gibson.

Power Of Press.

Hugh Wilson, who is the new minister to Switzerland, will be secretary of the American delegation, and probably will be made secretary of the conference. He has for some years been in charge of press relations at the State Department, but formerly was secretary of the Berne legation.

Secretary Kellogg has not disclosed whether a clean-cut proposal for percentage reduction or percentage limitation will be made by the American government at the outset, as was done by Hughes at the Washington conference six years ago. Yet European debate on the possibility that anything can be accomplished in the coming parley has shown that the British and French press anticipates a definite program from the Washington government. Only by laying down on the table, for immediate public inspection, a plan which will insure limitation, if not actual reduction of naval expenditure, will President Coolidge be likely to get any satisfaction out of his venture.

Benito vs France.

France has refused to take part, on the ground that she cannot submit her naval power, under present political conditions, to control from outside. French fear of Mussolini's alliance with Tory Britain is growing; only when the British Labor Party gains control of the House of Commons by a decisive majority will the French cease to feel that British power is allied with Italian Fascism to undermine the French position in Europe and Africa. When Mussolini at first curtly refused to discuss naval limitation, and later changed his attitude without a word of explanation, neither the British nor the French were surprised. They knew that his first declaration was a gesture for home consumption, and that his final endorsement of the parley was given in order to embarrass the French.

Now that Britain has broken with the Soviet Union, and all Europe is anxious as to the danger of a new war, Mussolini announces in his own Fascist parliament that "The Locarno powers are furiously arming"—as his reason for starting a new program of naval and army expansion.

False Hopes Through Court Decisions Permitting "Peaceful" Picketing

Many trade unionists hailed as a great victory for labor the decision of the New York State Court of Appeals in the injunction case of the scab Exchange Bakery & Restaurant Company against officers and members of Waiters' and Waitresses' Union No. 1, in which it was decreed that workers had a right peacefully to picket whether there is a so-called bona-fide strike in progress or not. The decision declares that:

"Picketing without a strike is no more unlawful than a strike without picketing. Both are based upon a lawful purpose."

This is of only limited advantage in New York in as much as it will prevent the Tammany police captains of various precincts driving pickets from the line because the bosses refuse to admit that there is a strike in progress.

But as far as guaranteeing workers the right to picket it is of no advantage. Under capitalism courts serve the interests of the bosses against the workers and the New York courts are no exception. Legally picketing has been permissible for years, but injunctions are issued just the same by flunkeys of capitalism who sit upon the benches. All that is required is a creature sufficiently low to commit perjury and swear that some picket assaulted him and an injunction is issued, without the defendant even having a chance to defend himself or to face his accuser in open court.

In spite of this decision injunctions are still one of the greatest weapons against strikers and must be fought until workers have the right to picket without interference from judges or police.

Sacco and Vanzetti Agitation Must Go On!

Since the announcement from the state house at Boston that Governor Alvan T. Fuller was conducting his own investigation of the Sacco and Vanzetti case the agitation for the release of these two victims of capitalist vengeance has died down. No more do we hear the indignant bleatings of the liberals who weep not for the victims but for outraged justice. They never were overly enthusiastic about these two radical foreign workers; their concern was only for the fictitious tradition of American fair-play. Their astounding inability to perceive the class nature of the case has caused them to cease all activity in behalf of the victims and wait for the final decision of the governor of Massachusetts.

But while they wait the insidious forces of capitalism with perjury on their foul lips and murder in their leprous hearts are concocting new "evidence" calculated to influence the rich Mr. Fuller, whose whole training impel him toward sympathy with the enemies of labor.

We warn the Sacco-Vanzetti Committee of Boston that has been conducting the defense not to rely too much upon Fuller. They should unhesitatingly let the whole world know the progress of the investigation. They should expose the miserable jurors that first returned the verdict against these two Italian workers on framed-up evidence and who now appear before Fuller with declarations that in their opinion the trial was fair. These jurors are tarred with the same stick as the other conspirators and there is more than a suspicion that they obtained their dirty pieces of silver for their verdict and are probably now on pensions which they will receive until the textile barons, the department of justice agents and the rest of the criminal gang that framed these men have carried out their murderous plot.

The working class that has thus far saved from the embrace of the electric chair these militant workers is not going to abandon its activity in behalf of these victims and is sworn relentlessly to continue the fight in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti until they are definitely removed from the shadow of the electric chair and restored to their places in the labor movement.

Woll in Role of Strikebreaker.

Matthew Woll, who divides his time between the job of acting president of the labor-hating Civic Federation and aiding the flunkeys of the bosses at the head of the International Fur Workers' Union and the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union can now be listed as the first scabby strikebreaker of the furriers' strike. He wants to prove to the bosses that he can be relied upon to do the work that ordinary scabs would shrink from doing so he comes forth with a threat, in the form of a circular signed by himself, that in case any of the furriers strike in response to the call of the Joint Board they will never be permitted to again work in any union shop in New York or any other city in the United States. It is not the bosses who make this threat, but their good man Friday, sometimes vice-president of the American Federation of Labor. The threatening circular is also signed by Woll's two partners in perjury who tried to frame-up the Furriers' Joint Board officials with the story of police bribery, Hugh Frayne and Edward F. McGrady, a pair of forlorn pie-card artists who also draw wages from the labor movement while doing the dirty work of the bosses that the bosses themselves would shrink from doing.

Woll and his cohorts know very well that the overwhelming majority of the rank and file of the furriers are infuriated at the strikebreaking and police spying activities of his gang and that they have determined to strike in spite of the efforts of the labor fakers to force them to yield to the demands of the employers. Infuriated at the militancy of the fur workers, Woll now tries atrocious. But the fur workers have had to fight the hired thugs and gangsters of the bosses, so they do not fear Woll and his stooges.

And when the fight is finally over and the shops are again filled into the union ranks the strikers will have the jobs and will enjoy decent conditions in spite of the treachery of the Wolls.

"Mr. Wu", with Lon Chaney & Renee Adoree

THIS feature [illegible] melodrama [illegible] of the Chinese [illegible] a land where [illegible] marvelous [illegible] according to the [illegible] Chaney [illegible] with young Americans and have to pay with their lives.

Added to this is the presence of some of the morality plays [illegible] for which the Chinese have always been given credit in the American mind. However, the tortuous turn out to be nothing worse than allowing the pretty young American's prosperous, double-chinned mama to decide whether she will let him be killed or his character violated as a penalty for his "defilement of the Mandarin's daughter. In the nick of time Mama finds a handy stiletto and saves the situation.

As a thriller the picture hardly gets by. No attempt has been made to give the story any background wider than the Mandarin's house. Many of the scenes are beautiful in the usual movie style. The only features of any distinction are the charming acting of Renee Adoree and the quiet forcefulness of Lon Chaney. —N. S.

The Stupid Police

(Reviewed By Sylvia A. Pollack.)

For those who enjoy mystery dramas, "Triple Crossed", playing at Wallacks Theatre, will be two hours of solid enjoyment. It is a member of the "Last Warning" school where actors are well distributed throughout the audience. In fact, only five of the more than 20 in the cast have their names on the program.

Among the most interesting parts of the play are those when the stupidity of the metropolitan police is shown up in the light of day. In one scene we see how the police in their determination to find someone who they can fasten the guilt for the usual murder of the mystery play, arrest a well known anarchist, who was unlucky enough to be present at the play the night of the murder.

The audience is kept constantly suspicious about their neighbors, for members of the cast are planted throughout the house and many unexpected humorous moments are portrayed off the stage.

The end of the play is weak, as usual in mystery plays. But if one feels like being amused, one could do worse than visiting "Triple Crossed".

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Freedom For Sacco and Vanzetti.
Editor, The DAILY WORKER:

The silence and secrecy which is displayed at the present time by Governor Fuller of Massachusetts in the investigation of the frame-up of Sacco and Vanzetti, gives the workers some cause for alarm and concern. Especially when we see the New England fascists, and professional patriots working persistently day and night to "get" these "Reds." The black reactionary alliance are plotting and poisoning every avenue of expression of sympathy with a view of eventually stifling all aid for these victims.

Also, do we see them in their numerous clubs, actively engaged in scheming by ways and means to stop Governor Fuller's hand and allow these workers to be sent to the death-chair.

In view of these indicative conditions the working class throughout the length and breath of the country, must intensify their efforts, to demand of Governor Fuller an open and public investigation of this case. And that all the files of the Department of Justice and the present mountain of evidence for the defendants be placed upon the table, before an impartial tribunal.

The workers already know that these two labor supporters are innocent of their alleged crime. But to vindicate this and to show that they were framed up, they ask for an open and unbiased review.

The workers must not wait for July 10th, the day of execution, that will be too late. They must not slacken their protest.

Fraternally Yours—Mark Stone.

To the Editor of The DAILY WORKER:—Some time ago, Station WGL presented to the world unimpeachable evidence of radio censorship, when Mrs. Mary H. Ford's speech expressing approval of Denmark's neutrality during the war, and its leaning toward the abrogation of armed force, was deliberately cut off. I was therefore considerably amazed when, by mere chance, I came across a talk from the same station of such liberal nature that, I am sure, every reader of The DAILY WORKER will be interested in listening to it. The talk, or rather series of talks, is delivered by A. Kanovich, is philosophical in import, and entitled, "The Will to Beauty."

Among other things, he said, "No scheme leading to the elimination of poverty can ever be successful without the introduction of Socialism." His findings of some charitable organization, which investigated the conditions of school children on the lower west side. It was found that 40 per cent of the children went to school without breakfast. 25 per cent had a piece of bread and some black coffee, the rest an egg in addition to the afore-mentioned nourishments (?). This in our great and prosperous country. In view of these facts, the business man is asked to contribute to charity; he does, that is, he presents gratis out of his kind and christian heart a very small portion of the enormous profits he has exploited the poor hard working people of.

These broadcasts take place Sunday at one o'clock. WGL further stated, in a complete reversal of their policy as exemplified by their earlier actions, that they are in favor of free speech, and invited the questions of their hearers.—S. W. Kass, New York City.

What Are the Teachers Waiting For?

For two years the school teachers of New York City and State have been waiting for a salary increase. Sporadic efforts have been made to, Teachers City Fathers and the State Legislature of the necessity for an increase; but these astute politicians who hold their power by the grace of political machine, think only in terms of political and economic power.

They know that school teachers are practically unorganized; that such organization as there is, is weak and scattered; that school teachers do not "play politics."

Will it be necessary for a mass migration from the profession to take place in order to force a raise, as was the case on the last occasion?

Increased duty schedules, increased pupil loads, higher standards; in other words, greater speed-up, and the unvarnished autocracy of the machine,—these are making the teachers doubt if theirs is, after all, the best possible profession. It remains to be seen whether this will result in driving them elsewhere, or if they will realize that they have most to gain by organized effort.

Are the teachers so busy teaching that they have no time to learn?

Mass Meeting in Central Opera House N.Y. - Today

The conspiring class has the electric chair all ready to burn the life out of its hated foes, the two labor organizers, Sacco and Vanzetti. Labor alone has saved them thus far.

THE WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY AND THE CLASS STRUGGLE--A WORD FROM RUTHENBERG

the capitalist class and the capitalist government.

Make the Unions Militant Fighting Organizations

The Workers (Communist) Party supports all genuine labor unions and endeavors to strengthen them through urging the workers to join them.

At the same time it carries on a struggle within existing unions to transform them into militant fighting organizations for the workers' interests and to amalgamate the trade unions into powerful industrial unions which can more effectively fight the workers' battles against the great trusts and corporations which today control industry.

Organize the Unorganized.

But today in the United States there are only four million workers organized in the trade unions, while fifteen million industrial workers and many agricultural and other workers are outside of the trade unions, in the ranks of the unorganized. The organization of the great mass of unorganized workers in the basic industries of this country into labor unions is one of the big problems before the working class.

The Workers (Communist) Party will carry on a persistent campaign for the organization of these workers. It will raise this question inside of the existing labor unions and at the same time carry on a direct campaign for the organization of the workers where no organizations now exist.

The organization of the workers in the steel industry, the metal-mining and smelting industry, the automobile industry, the great manufacturing industry, the textile industry, the rubber industry and the strengthening of the existing unions in other industries must be achieved in order to place the workers in a position to make their struggle effective against the capitalists in their struggle for a higher standard of life.

The Organization of a Labor Party.

The workers and farmers of this country still, to a large degree, are supporting the political parties of the capitalist class—the Republican and Democratic parties.

The next step in developing the class consciousness of the workers is the organization of a mass labor party of the workers who, in alliance with the farmers, will carry on a struggle against the capitalist parties in the workers' interests.

To achieve this end, the Workers (Communist) Party is actively carrying on a campaign for the formation of a Labor Party (in some states, a Farmer-Labor Party exists which the Workers (Communist) Party supports). Such a party should unite all existing workers' organizations, trade unions, workers' political parties, workers' fraternal organizations and co-operatives and should be formed by the calling of conferences of delegates from these organizations.

The Workers (Communist) Party supports the formation of local and state labor parties with the view of eventually crystallizing a national labor party. While the labor party will fight for the immediate political interests of the workers, there must be an organization of those workers who are fully conscious of the nature of the struggle against the capitalist class and capitalist government, and who are prepared to carry the struggle forward to the final victory. The organization of these workers is the Workers (Communist) Party. The The Workers (Communist) Party will affiliate with the labor party, maintaining at the same time its right to carry on its work in support of its full Communist program as outlined in this statement.

Fight For the Negro Workers and Against Imperialism.

The Negroes are not only a part of the most bitterly exploited section of the working class, but they are in addition, oppressed as a race.

The Workers (Communist) Party supports the organization of the Negroes for their fight against exploitation as a part of the working class and against the special discrimination to which they are subjected. It demands complete social equality for the Negro.

The Workers (Communist) Party will aid in organizing the struggle against American imperialism by the oppressed peoples who are being exploited by the capitalists of the United States. It will aid in uniting the people of Porto Rico, Cuba, Mexico, Central and South America, the Philippines in a struggle for freedom from the American capitalist exploiters.

The Communist International

The Workers (Communist) Party is affiliated with, and is a section of the Communist International. The Communist International is the world-wide leader of the class struggle of the workers. It is an association of the Communist Parties of all the countries of the world.

Join the Workers (Communist) Party

The Workers (Communist) Party invites every man and woman who is ready to accept the above program of struggle against the capitalist class and capitalist government, both as to its immediate forms and the ultimate revolutionary struggle for a Workers' and Farmers' government to join the Workers (Communist) Party.

An application blank for membership is printed on the last page. Every member of the Workers (Communist) Party must agree to participate actively in the work of the party. The dues are fifty cents per month and there is an initiation fee of fifty cents which should be sent with the application.

It is only through building a powerful Communist party which can unite and lead all phases of the struggles of the workers and farmers that the victory of the Workers' and Farmers' Government can be won and the Communist society established.

EVERY MAN AND WOMAN WHO IS READY TO HELP BUILD SUCH A PARTY SHOULD JOIN THE WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY.

Commerce Commission Has to Stop Trust That N. Y. Central Planned

WASHINGTON, June 2.—Railroad consolidation received another setback today when examiners of the Interstate Commerce Commission recommended that the proposal of the New York Central to acquire the Big Four, Cincinnati Northern, Evansville, Indianapolis & Terre Haute, Michigan Central and Chicago, Kalamazoo & Saginaw Railroads under a 999-year lease, be denied as "not being in the public interest."

Call "Hands Off China" Conference in Chicago

CHICAGO, (FP)—May 30.—The Hands-Off-China conference, following the recent huge Chicago mass meeting, is scheduled for Sunday morning June 12 in Musicians Hall where the Chicago Federation of Labor holds its meetings. Pres. John Fitzpatrick and Sec'y. Ed Nockels of the federation, Clarence Darrow, Jane Addams, Anton Johnson and Margaret Haley are among the committee members calling the conference. Wm. H. Holly of 100 W. Monroe Street is secretary of the committee.

NARROW NATIONALISM TO BE EXPLAINED AT BIG MEETING

Gather Tonight at the Central Opera House

New York workers will gather tonight at Central Opera House, 67th St. and Third Ave., to raise their voices in protest against American intervention in China and to celebrate the recent victories of the Hankow People's Government.

The meeting is also called to explain to the workers of this city the true character of the Chinese revolution and the forces that play their part in it. This is particularly necessary because of the net of lies that has been spread around the Chinese revolution by the bourgeois and socialist press.

The speakers will be Scott Nearing, Bertram D. Wolfe, H. M. Wicks, Alexander Trachtenberg, Juliet Stuart Poyntz, Rebecca Grecht, Chas. Krumbein, M. J. Olgin, a Chinese speaker and L. Plath for the Young Workers League. Jack Stachel will be chairman.

Wm. F. Dunne will speak if released from jail by that time. Dunne, one of the editors of the Daily Worker, together with Bert Miller, business manager of the Daily Worker, are now in jail pending sentence due to a frame-up on the part of the patriotic societies of this city in an attempt to destroy the Daily Worker because of its service to the labor movement and its anti-war character.

Admission to the meeting is 25 cents.

Albany to Hold Meeting For Release of Sacco and Vanzetti, June 8th

ALBANY, N. Y., June 2.—A Sacco-Vanzetti Protest Meeting is scheduled to take place Wednesday June 8, 8 p. m., at the Sons of Italy Hall, 120 Madison Ave. Arthur Garfield Hays, prominent N. Y. City attorney and member of the Civil Liberties Union will be the principal speaker of the evening.

Albany is one of the few cities in the country where not a word of protest on the Sacco-Vanzetti case has been uttered by any prominent liberal minded individual. The reactionary labor leaders have absolutely refused to do anything in the matter. The Central Federation of Labor showed the way and the bureaucratic machines of all the local unions followed. No delegations have been addressed to them by the Sacco-Vanzetti Conference asking them to cooperate.

The meeting will be held under the auspices of the Sacco-Vanzetti Conference of Albany with the following organizations represented:

Workmen's Circle Branch 320, Jewish National Labor Alliance, Workers (Communist) Party, International Labor Defense, Women's Self Educational Club, Sons of Italy, and Independent Order Sons of Italy.

Texas Governor in Move to Prohibit Voting of Negroes

AUSTIN, June 2.—One of the main points of Governor Moody's message to the Texas legislature dealt with the suggested revision of the primary election law of the State.

Texas, in common with the majority of the southern states, has kept up a pretense of allowing Negro citizens to vote in the primary elections, at the same time depriving them, by some political hocus-pocus, of any actual voice in the elections.

The United States Supreme Court has held that under the present law Negroes cannot be barred from voting in Democratic primaries. The upholders of "law and order" in Texas, therefore, must devise some means to circumvent the ruling of the Supreme Court and, with the help of Moody, will endeavor to have a measure passed through the legislature giving the democratic party, which is practically the only political party which is permitted to function unhampered in the South the right to exclude Negroes from the primaries.

Fire Razes Cross Island Log Mill; $40,000 Loss on Short Notice

Fire breaking out at the Cross Island Log Mill and Lumber Company plant at 2:30 a. m. yesterday destroyed the mill and its machinery entirely. The entire loss is estimated at $40,000. The mill will be rebuilded, which means that those men will have to look for jobs elsewhere. Such is the security enjoyed by workers in the unorganized slave pens of the auto industry.

Women's Council Is Actively at Work In Williamsburgh

The working women of Williamsburgh are waking up. The class struggle in the United States is reflected in Williamsburgh also. Every uprising of the working class receives the helping hand of our Women's Council. Our aim is to have the women in the factory and in the home join the council to help the working class gain better houses, schools for their children and better working and living conditions for their class.

The public schools in Williamsburgh are in very bad condition. They are so overcrowded that children between the ages of six and nine are continually crowded out and transferred to schools far from their homes, over dangerous crossings, such as Broadway, Flushing Avenue, and other congested streets. In many of the schools water-closets are in the yards and children suffer from colds all winter long. In some of the schools the children are forced to work by artificial light, and defective eyesight and constant headaches are the rule.

The Williamsburgh Women's Council is organized to meet these daily problems that confront working women and children, in a constructive way through planned and organised effort. Every working class woman, whether her days are spent bending over the machine in the workshop, over the cookstove and washtub in the home, should join this organization. Meetings are held on Tuesdays, at 29 Graham Avenue, G. Gordon, secretary.

Brooklyn Co-ops Save Thousands for Workers and the unsuspecting public fondly believes that it is getting the same value. "Finco Health Bread is shipped to all parts of the United States, and is recognised as superior even to the imported products.

Also Operate Restaurant.

The Finnish Co-operatives include a restaurant and a market, both of which have won the support of the neighborhood by their efficient service, cleanliness, honesty, and above all by the low prices, which have been reduced to operating costs.

The consumers have been allowed to participate in the profits. For the past two years a rebate of 4 per cent has been given on all purchases.

Do Educational Work.

Educational work is an important phase of "Finco" activities. An educational director, supported by a committee representing 5,000 members, has arranged lectures, picnics, entertainments, the distribution of special educational leaflets, etc., and edits a small paper, "Your Forum", which appears bi-monthly. A picnic was recently held in Ulmer Park which was attended by 3,000 enthusiastic supporters.

The Brooklyn Co-operative Trading Association is a 100 per cent working-class organization, and recognizes the part the co-operatives must play in the class struggle. It has freely donated its products and money to struggling workers' organizations, such as the Passaic textile strikers and the western mine victims.

Thus far, the co-operative work in this district has been largely in the hands of the Finnish workers; but a strong movement is now on foot among the Scandinavians, and it is hoped that before long a strong, united movement, embracing all the workers in south Brooklyn, will be able to drive the profiteer from this field.

Co-operative housing has also been carried beyond the experimental stage in south Brooklyn. Some 30 houses are now being operated, ranging from 16 to 60 apartments. In each case, a small investment has enabled the co-operator to get the most modern conveniences and best locations at rents from 40 per cent to 50 per cent lower than those demanded by profiteering landlords. Apartments that rented in 1919 at $35 to $50 have been cut to from $20 to $30 at a time when the general trend of rents is still upward in a rising one. It is estimated that the 500 families occupying these apartments effect a saving of $240,000 yearly, in rents.

One-fifth of a million dollars each year out of the landlords' pockets and into the pockets of the workers! Does it pay? These 500 families find that it does.

SCAB COAL MAKES FENCES IN WHOLE TOWN OF MINERS

Paisley Outfit Makes 700 Prisoners

PUCKETT CREEK, Pa., June 2 (FP).—What used to be the country mining town of Puckety Creek, sometimes known as Parnassus or Kinloch, near Pittsburgh, is now to all intents an industrial prison stockade. Starting early in May the Valley Camp Coal Co., a Paisley concern, has put a close woven wire fence all around the mine and town. The fence is about 10 feet high with strands of barb wire strung inside the property line at the top, making it impossible to climb over and out from the inside.

700 Prisoners.

The town houses 700 union miners and their families. When the Jacksonville agreement expired April 1 the mine was shut down for a month and then tried to operate openshop. It was the first attempt by the operators to break the union front in the Allegheny valley. The miners stood pat, however. They are imprisoned in the wire stockade unable to go out unless they want to stay out for good. They are living in the company houses and will probably be evicted if they keep up their solid union front.

The company got 10 outside strike-breakers and is trying to get more but the imported labor quits when it learns of the situation from the pickets and straw up the wire pen the company has constructed. Of the 10 imports 3 have quit and 10 pit bosses, who had worked cordially with the union, pulled out.

On the first day of openshop operation almost 1000 pickets from other camps were on hand outside the wire gates. Powers Hapgood and Tony Minerich of the progressive miners and 3 organizers of the Lewis administration are among those active. It was the first real sign of life since April 1 in Dist. 5, the Pittsburgh soft coal territory.

The union is working hard to upset the openshop attack as it wants to keep the Allegheny valley from becoming a Pennsylvania edition of the West Virginia non-union terror reigns.

Ohio Miners Rally to Defense of Vanzetti and Sacco in I. L. D. Meets

BELLAIRE, O., June 2.—Five hundred miners at the Miners' Temple unanimously adopted a resolution calling upon Governor Alvan T. Fuller to grant Sacco and Vanzetti an unconditional pardon.

Adolph Pacifico, Vice President of Snh District 8 of District 6, U. M. W. of A., was chairman of the meeting. Carl Hacker, attorney for the International Labor Defense was the principal speaker and spoke at length about the witnesses used by Massachusetts in the prosecution of conviction against Sacco and Vanzetti. He concluded with an appeal for membership in the International Labor Defense, under whose auspices the meeting had been arranged. Fifteen new members were obtained for the I. L. D.

John Clinque, President of the 8nh District spoke in the Italian language and also pleaded with the miners to keep up the work of protest for their brother workers.

Urge Big Loan to Nicaragua as U. S. Crushes Liberals

BOSTON, June 2.—A loan of $20,000,000 to Nicaragua was urged by Whiting Williams, "industrial investigator," before the Boston branch of the Foreign Policy Assn.

Williams, who has just returned from a nine-weeks stay in Nicaragua, declared that this amount would be sufficient for the settlement of the country's debts, enable the Nicaraguan government to build a railroad system.

U. S. Control Secure.

The American Anti-Imperialist League in recent statements has predicted that heavy loans would be arranged soon by American financiers as the final effort to completely subjugate the Latin-American country.

With the Liberal forces disarmed and routed by U. S. marines, the present government under the puppet president, Diaz, will offer a fruitful source of investment for American capitalists, the League pointed out.

Big Bill Thompson Gets Sec'y of War To His Flood Talk

CHICAGO, June 2.—Variously interpreted as a scheme to withdraw attention from the South's demands for an extra session of congress on the flood, or as a mere stunt to exalt the name of Mayor Big Bill Thompson, who called it, and by the naive as a real attempt to do something about the Mississippi River, the flood control convention opened today.

Control of the conference rests in the hands of the private "super-power" concerns, and there are a sufficiency of self seeking politicians there to stop any unwelcome resolutions unless public pressure grows too strong.

May Start Discussion.

The real hope, in so far as there is one, that something will appear as a result of the talking orgy in sight, lies in the presence of a few sincere advocates of the dam and spillway program. How much they will be allowed to say depends on the interest taken by the onlsiders. The insiders will decide what is to be "resolved."

Among those present are Secretary of War Dwight Davis, with some generals, and Frank R. Reid, head of the flood control committee of the house. They insist that they are not in Chicago for political purposes. Mayor Thompson has taken the opportunity to denounce the talk about an extra session of congress.

A COMPLACENT ONEAL LIES THAT UNREAL CLASS HISTORY.

By Scott Nearing. (Vanguard Press. 8vo. Cloth. $2.50.)

If some Oneal were to say that Jesus Christ was a myth, and not the man whom the masses were qualified for blaspheming, nothing, that assuredly, James Oneal would be the foremost historian in the world. I will not attempt to reply to such lie, or slander, or implication, in the above-mentioned book of the Socialist Party of such Oneal's, who is now writing a history of almost equal size.

Oneal, in his opening chapter, attempts to draw an analogy between the "International Brotherhood" of Bolshevism and the Communist International. There is not even a superficial resemblance between the two. At other times, the C. I. has declared against "putschism," and feared the superiority of the various Communist parties first winning over the majority before proceeding to the conquest of power. This is quite different from the Bakunin-ish conception of regarding the masses as "mere fodder for the prosecution of their mad schemes of absolute power by an insignificant minority." But Oneal knows this, but in his blind hate of the militant proletariat this lackey of the bourgeoisie is willing to outdo his masters in villification.

Further on in the first chapter he speaks of the factional fight within the ranks of the Socialist Labor Party in 1877 between "the advocates and opponents of the theory of force." This is lie Number 2. The fight did not rage over the question of force at all, but between the Marxists and the anarchists, with the former fighting the generally reactionary philosophy of the latter and especially their absurd "propaganda of the deed." Again we are convinced that Oneal knows better than he writes, but, as usual, he shows his charming orientation towards his friends and fellow saviors of capitalism—the Department of Justice boys.

When it comes to an account of the struggle of the 1919 left wing of the S. P. against himself and his associate lieutenants of capitalism, this creature manifests himself in all his glory.

On pages 55 and 56, this fervid apostle of democracy, shamelessly tells of the infamous methods used to retain the S. P. control in the hands of the petty socialist party Tammany Hall of which Oneal is a worthy representative. Let us quote the scoundrel's own words. (The following refers to the session of the National Executive Committee of the S. P. just prior to the 1919 convention):

"All important issues were decided by a strictly partisan vote of eight to two. The important actions taken were: (1) The suspension of seven foreign language federations and referring this action and the reasons for it to a special national convention; (2) the revocation of the Michigan State charter; (3) instructing the Executive Secretary not to tabulate the vote cast in the referendum for party officials and 'to call in all the original ballots of the federations in question, send them to the national office, and that a committee be elected to investigate the whole question of the election and report to the national convention'; (4) that a national Emergency Convention be called, to meet in Chicago on August 30; (5) that the membership be urged not to initiate any referendums on controversial questions, as they 'can only be settled after consulting a mass of testimony and documentary evidence, which cannot possibly be sent to the party membership and which are essential to intelligent decisions'; (6) that members in Michigan opposed to the two objectionable actions taken in that state be organised so that they will not be deprived of representation in the national convention; (a very small minority in favor of religion and opportunists who could be relied on to stand by Oneal & Co.); (7) refusing a request of the two left wing members that they be permitted to print a statement in the party's 'National Bulletin' regarding their position on questions decided by the executive."

And yet Oneal talks of democracy. The only thing lacking in the above procedure was to pass a resolution that henceforth only lackeys of the bourgeoisie should be elected to the National Executive Committee of the socialist party.

In spite of all this a certain fraction of the left wing decided to continue the attempts to capture the S. P. from within and concentrated its efforts on electing delegates to the national convention. But, when they came there, the Oneal-Branstetter-Stedman gang had their democratic friends (the Chicago police) threw them out. How does the worthy socialist charlatan explain this? Very simply!

"The Chicago Police Department sends patrolmen to all large gatherings and they were present at the socialist convention. They also appeared at the other conventions. Passions were at a high pitch at the opening of the socialist convention as the left wing had announced its intention to capture the party. Many of the delegates were meeting in conference in the same building. Left wing delegates began to appear at the entrance to the socialist hall at the hour for calling the convention to order. A disturbance followed and the police ejected the left wingers."

The above is illuminating indeed, hnt permit us to ask a few questions, Mr. Oneal. How did it happen that the police ejected only left wingers? Do left wingers possess peculiar physical characteristics by which they may be distinguished? Or—did your unspeakable gang instruct their friends as to who was and who was not to be thrown out? Think up a good lie next time, James Oneal.

And so we could follow this "history" for page after page, hnt, no doubt, the reader is already convinced that "American Communism" is the work of a petty bourgeois liar, who will descend to any depths in order to vent his spleen against the revolutionary workers.

There are, however, a few more points to be touched upon. One characteristic of Oneal's "work" is his frequent admission of all "right" tendencies in the various Communist parties. For instance: "During the factional struggle (1924-25) a third faction had appeared, the leader of which was Ludwig Lore, editor of the 'New York Volkszeitung', a German daily. This faction became known as 'Lovejoy'. It had attempted to combat the romanticism of the two leading factions and bring them to some knowledge of the reality of American life" (p. 219).

As dearly as our hero loves the right wing elements, so viciously does he vent his puny hate upon the "Worker's Challenge," 1922 organ of the United Toilers. And, like Postum, "there's a reason." The reason being that the "Challenge" consistently exposed, with irrefutable proofs, Oneal as a liar, a charlatan, and an objective agent provocateur. (Whether he is subjectively so, we leave to his fingerprints.) So, let us recall to Mr. Oneal's attention his cowardly silence, when the editor of the "Challenge", after exposing him to the extent of a full newspaper page, hurled at him a defy to take the negative of the proposition: "Resolved that the socialist party is not based on the principles of Marxism."

Let us pass over Oneal's pretended inability to understand the distinction between political prisoners in the U. S. A. and imprisoned murderers and paid socialist revolutionary and menshevik flunkeys of imperialism in Soviet Russia. Let us pass over his perversion of the united front tactics of the C. I. Let us pass over his own bald account of the betrayal of the labor party movement by that aggregation of labor fakers, petty bourgeois, pie card artists, gangsters, careerists, social workers, tabloid journalists, lawyers, doctors without patients, and preachers without pulpits known to infamy as the socialist party leaders. There still remain a few remarks to be made about this book.

On the question of organization Oneal is hopelessly confused. He pokes fun at the Communist International for its centralised discipline, thereby revealing his ignorance of what every Pioneer knows, the international nature of the class struggle. In his dissertation on the shop nucleus form of organization this clown displays his buffoonery in the following sentences: "In fact one has to read with very clear attention to understand the complicated and cumbersome structure which is proposed as a substitute for the comparatively simple form of political clubs, of which all political parties have consisted—the planting of cells in shops and factories and in the streets might well serve an oppressed class in the old czarist bureaucracy, where political organization and voting were unknown—but it appears cumbersome and unworkable for political parties in the modern 'democratic' countries."

Aside from the weird English and the equally weird political science in the above, Oneal clearly shows that for him capitalism is an eternal system, and that the workers are to be regarded only as voting cattle who are to decide, once every two or four years, whether an out-and-out bourgeois or his S. P. lieutenant is to repress them.

While opposite of democracy also attempts an excursion into the field of ethics (don't laugh). In the one passage in the book in which he is very critical of Wm. Z. Foster, he condemns him for the statement that, in the class struggle, the end justifies the means, that the working class must use any effective weapon that is at hand, regardless of its "legality" or "morality." Aside from the theoretical aspect, the spectacle of this executive of Sigman, (his member of the 1919

Albert H. Gary, T. Coleman DuPont, William B. Fleming, Albert Fall (of the Senate), and others, are among the financial supporters of the organizations which are spreading hate propaganda in the United States.

The aims of these organizations as organs for suppressing radical and liberal opinion and trade unions are being explained in this series.

IX.

National Civic Federation.

This, the most elaborately organized of the national agencies, has nine departments, each devoted to study and action. A well-known journalist who studied them has listed them with comments:

Correct: economics and business represents.

Welfare—opposing industrial welfare legislation and favoring "company" welfare.

Immigration—opposing it.

Women's—opposing minimum wage, etc., and radicalism in all forms.

Workmen's compensation.

Social insurance—against it.

Study of revolutionary movements—against them.

Public health education.

Industry—founded in joint honor of August Belmont and Samuel Gompers, and devoted to industrial progress through industrial peace (and vice versa).

The Woman's Department has as one of its objects:

"Americanism—To understand the meaning and intent of this form of government and of the various radical activities tending to undermine and destroy it. To use such accurate knowledge to actively oppose destructive propaganda and to aid in all efforts toward stabilising constitutional Americanism.

"Naturalization— . . . To support legislation authorising the enrollment of aliens.

"National Defense—To stand for a trained and equipped Army and Navy adequate to uphold the principles of Democracy and Liberty as expressed by this government. To urge and to stimulate the protection and preservation of chemical industries and chemical research as they affect the home, the health, the industry and the defense of the country." (The Woman's Department distributes a pamphlet entitled "A Plea—To American Women" which is an appeal to aid in the protection of this industry.)

This concern for the chemical industry may perhaps be accounted for by the fact that Mr. Elon H. Hooker, president of the Hooker Electro-Chemical Company (and of the American Defense Society, by the way) is on the executive committee of the Federation.

Of the Welfare Department, headed until recently by the late Louis A. Coolidge, Treasurer and Director of the United States Shoe Machinery Company, Mr. Easley says:

"There is perhaps no better antidote for radical attacks on present institutions than intelligent genuine and wisely directed welfare work."

Ambitious Program.

The Department on the Study of Subversive Movements, headed by Condé B. Pallen, one of the editors of the Catholic Encyclopedia, offers the most pretentious program. Here it is:

"a. A sub-committee on socialist doctrines and tactics dictated to the preparation and distribution of literature and the organization of a training school for speakers. (We have tried without success to find the training school.—Ed.)

b. Sub-committees to make intensive studies of the extent to which revolutionary forces have penetrated into labor, the church, the press, philanthropic agencies, social agencies, foreign groups, women's organizations, public employees, negro groups, agriculture, colleges, public schools, and other fields.

c. A sub-committee to study text books on history, political economy and civics used in high schools and colleges.

d. A sub-committee on Soviet propaganda in the United States.

e. A bureau to evaluate federal, state and municipal official statistics as well as socialist deductions from same.

f. A committee on the fundamentals of our Constitution and their application to everyday life, including the limitations of free speech, free press and free assembly.

g. A sub-committee on a survey of industrial, political and social progress and constructive recommendations."

The Federation's efforts against radicalism are by no means confined to this department. There is a special committee on the "Limitation of Free Speech" headed by Archibald E. Stevenson, attorney for the "Lusk Committee" appointed by the New York state legislature in 1919 to study radical movements. Its Industrial Department published a report headed "Free Speech a Nuisance." The announcement of the Department on Current Economic and Political Movements sent out by Mr. Easley was a typical anti-radical blast, serving up the same dish under another name. He promised "data for social and religious bodies" to "thwart the detailed program to capture these self-same movements, as worked out by Moscow with uncanny cleverness."

Easley A Figure.

In fact, all these departments and committees are merely machinery for Mr. Easley's use. He is the dominant spirit. He speaks through them all. And whatever is uppermost in his fears becomes the Federation's concern. The radicals have been chiefly on his mind since the war, together with those who defend free speech

The Left Wing in the Garment Unions

By MARGARET LARKIN

The flimsiness of the great strike of 1926 has been the subject of unending misrepresentation both in the capitalized and right wing press. Accusations have been hurled at the Joint Board leaders which are altogether unfounded. Margaret Larkin today discusses those charges and offers complete refutation of them.

FINANCES OF THE STRIKE.

Of all the "charges" against the Joint Board officers, that of having "extravagantly wasted" the Union funds in the General Strike, has been most frequently used by the officials of the Right Wing in explanation of the expulsions. Since the public had no way of ascertaining the truth of the matter, it was easy to broadcast a general impression that money had been mishandled and possibly even embezzled, in order to obscure the real issues at stake.

Even a casual examination of the facts, however, proves conclusively that the "extravagance" charge, like the "Communism" charge, is without basis.

All of the finances of the strike were under the control of a Finance Committee, of which Abraham Baroff, Secretary-Treasurer of the International, was the Chairman, and on which every important local, including the Right Wing locals, were represented.

The money expended was allotted to the committees in charge of various departments of the strike. Actual disbursements were made by checks signed by Joseph Fish, then Secretary-Treasurer of the Joint Board and a member of the Right Wing.

The total amount expended for the entire strike period of twenty-four weeks probably was three and one half million dollars, with Committee appropriations proportional to the amount spent during the twenty weeks reported upon to the General Strike Committee.

The last report of strike expenditures made to the General Strike Committee before the expulsions took place, covered twenty weeks of strike, from July 1 until November 18, 1926. The total amount expended during this period was $2,794,000.

Modest Payments.

Of this amount $1,370,000 was spent for strike benefits, which was distributed, after the eighth week of the strike, on the basis of $5.00 a week for single men and $8.00 a week for family men. These amounts were later increased to $7.00 and $10.00.

It is worthy of note, in this connection, that none of the officers of the Right Wing of the cloakmakers accepted any pay at the strike benefits, week of the strike excepting $10.00 a week for expenses. Right Wing officers, including President Sigman, received their full pay, and did not even donate 20 per cent to the strike fund, as did all workers who were sent back to work in settled shops.

Outside of strike benefits, which must be discounted since it was paid directly to the workers, the expenses of the twenty weeks of strike amounted to nearly a million and a half dollars. Of this sum, the Right Wing Chairmen of two Committees spent $779,212; the Left Wing Chairmen of three Committees spent $908,091; and $261,857 was spent for general expenses which cannot be assigned to either group.

In other words, of the funds which passed directly through the hands of Committee Chairmen, the Right Wing Chairmen spent twice as much as the Left Wing Chairmen; and of the entire funds of the strike, only about one-seventh was in the hands of members of the Left Wing at all.

Sigman's Charges Flat.

It is apparent that President Sigman's charges of "wasteful extravagance" in the conduct of the strike are entirely without foundation.

The three Committees headed by Left Wing Chairmen carried on the important mass work of the strike.

The Picket Committee, headed by Joseph Goretzky, made its principal expenditures for the "coffee and cake" committees, so called because the active workers, who picketed New York shops night and day, received only $15 a week for their meals. In the fifteenth week of the strike, this was raised to $20. These workers were not paid strike benefits.

The Hall Committee, headed by Joseph Boruchowitz, kept its expenditures very low in comparison with expenditures for this Committee in other strikes. This was due to the fact that its several hundred members gave all of their time to the work of the Committee without salary, receiving only $10 a week for expenses, and no strike benefit. This amount was later raised to $15.

The Organization Committee, headed by Nathan Kaplan, spent nearly ninety percent of its appropriation for payment of professional accountants who investigated the books of settled shops to see that no scab work was done. Nearly a quarter of this amount was recovered from employers for the work of the accountants.

There were four Committees headed by Chairmen from the Right Wing. Of these, the Finance Committee and the Settlement Committee made no large disbursements. The Out-of-Town Committee, and the Law Committee, that for other experts nearly one-half of the strike funds, outside of strike benefit, did not need to use large masses of people, as did the Picket, Hall, and Organization Committees.

That the 1926 strike was an economical one, and that those departments over which the Left Wing had control made even greater savings than did the Right Wing departments, is shown by a comparison of recent strikes and stoppages:

	Strike 1921, 8 weeks	Stoppage 1924, 2 weeks	Strike 1926, 20 weeks
Hall Committee	$60,000	$43,000	$100,000*
Organization Committee	17,000	26,000	92,000*
Picket Committee	43,000	100,000	200,000*
Law Committee	25,000	49,000	179,000
Out-of-Town Committee	42,000	59,000	476,000

N. E. C. of the S. P. prating about fairness, morality, etc., is enough to make even the yokels who support his "New Leader" laugh, and surely no lower order of intelligence is humanly conceivable.

In that little Marxian study, "Underground Radicalism," John Pepper profoundly analyses the S. P. According to him the S. P., having for practically all of its real proletarian elements is now mostly composed of workers who have become petty bourgeois led by the Tammany Hall of Oneal, Hillquit, etc. The great ambition of this gang is to emulate the German so-called Democratic and become the pets of the labor aristocracy. But, due to historical conditions, this is an impossibility. Therefore, the objective logic of its position forces the S. P. to become the willing tool of the labor bureaucracy. At the time it was made, I heard even some members of the Workers Party object to this analysis as too harsh. If there is any such naive ones now, let them read the chapter on the T. U. E. L. in this book and their doubts will be dispelled. Even though, in some parts of the book, Oneal seems to have a peculiar regard for Foster (resenting him as personally all right, but regarding his entrance into the W. P. as a mistake) nevertheless he takes him (Foster) and the T. U. E. L. to task for the attack on such treacherous labor fakers as Lewis of the Miners, Hutcheson of the Carpenters, and the infamous hangers-on of the Jewish yellow socialist Forward.

Can this charlatan sink any lower? Strange as it may seem, yes! Whenever one talks the S. P., or one of its noted "practical leaders" has finally touched bottom, he finds out, that, in the interval, it has already sunk to a lower depth. Even bourgeois professors, pulpit pounders, lawyers, and editors today acknowledge that Sacco and Vanzetti were framed. Aye, even the reactionary Sons of the American Revolution did not dare to give their approval to the proposed legal assassination of these two workers at their convention just held at Richmond, Va. But, listen to what the editor of the "New Leader", the member of the N. E. C. of the S. P., the theoretical light of that aggregation has to say on the subject. "The I. L. D. . . . has devoted much of its time to collecting funds for the purpose of obtaining legal aid for Sacco and Vanzetti, two Italians convicted of murder in Massachusetts, and by many who have investigated the case believed to be innocent." (Bold face mine—T. H. S.)

With this, intellectual nausea compels me to conclude. Only one question remains to be answered. Why was this book written just at this time? Undoubtedly as a "theoretical" supplement to the "practical" attack of the class collaborators on the left wing in the unions.

If any worker is interested in a first hand study of political depravity then this book is worth even more than $1.50 to him. If, however, he is desirous of learning something about the American Communist movement, then the book is worse than useless to him. He had better purchase the tales of Baron Munchausen and read more entertaining and better constructed lies.

—THOMAS H. STONE.

The Anti-Communist Yote

EDITOR'S NOTES

By ALEX BITTELMAN

IT should be obvious to all friends and supporters of a labor press in the United States that the present attack upon The DAILY WORKER has for its solo purpose the stifling of a voice which for several years has made the enemies of labor feel highly uncomfortable. The defense of our paper must be the concern of all true friends of labor.

There are too few militant labor papers in America. All too few. And to permit the enemies of labor to destroy The DAILY WORKER—because this is the intention—is to permit the employers to seriously weaken the workers and to hamper the development of the American labor movement.

The severity with which the "open-shoppers," super-patriots and hypocritical upholders of capitalist morality have seized upon the occasion is explained in the first instance by the fact that The DAILY WORKER is a Communist paper. But this alone does not tell the whole story. It is, of course, true that a Communist paper is at all times pretty much undesirable from the capitalist point of view. But such a paper begins to appear positively menacing to the capitalists when it succeeds in establishing itself as a loyal, and consistent fighter in the everyday struggles of the working masses. This is precisely the crime of which The DAILY WORKER is guilty in the eyes of the capitalists. It is for this "crime" that our editor and manager have been jailed and the paper threatened with destruction.

Defense of The DAILY WORKER is defense of a militant labor organ. It is a duty which no American worker can afford to shirk or ignore.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S speech at the Arlington cemetery contained nothing new from the point of view of American imperialist policy. It is the same old tune played in the same old way that we have been accustomed to hear from spokesmen of American capitalism since native imperialism came into age. The sense of the oration is: talk peace and prepare for war.

Read this quotation from the speech:

> However we wish to pursue the paths of peace, however much we are determined to live [illegible] terms of good will both at home and abroad, we cannot escape the fact that there are still evil forces in the world which all past experience warns us will break out from time to time and do serious damage to lawful rights and the progress of civilization unless we are prepared to meet such situations with armed intervention.

This carefully worded sentence treats of "evil" forces at home and abroad in the same breath. It makes no distinction between the "evil" that may come to the American capitalists from the competitive designs of, say, British capitalists, and the "evil" effects that may result from a successful strike of workers for decent wages, say, the present strike of the coal miners. It is the same to Coolidge as it is to the big American capitalists. All those interfering with the "lawful rights" of the capitalists to exploit the workers, whether American or foreign, and to amass profits are "evil" forces which must be dealt with by armed intervention.

Another point worth commenting on is Coolidge's conception of evil. When the British capitalists are manipulating to maintain their hold upon the markets of Latin America, it is a clear manifestation of evil. But when the American capitalists are engaging in the same manipulations to displace the Britishers and establish control for themselves, or when the American navy invades Nicaragua, crushes its independence and imposes there the rule of American bankers, it is nothing more than the realization of lawful rights and progress of civilization. The Hottentot is still alive.

When the three-power limitation of armaments conference opens this June in Geneva, we will be treated to another exhibition of capitalist peace comics. Japan is coming there with a demand for the neutralization of the Panama canal, in which it will undoubtedly be supported by Great Britain. The latter will be anxious to "patch" things up with Japan without seriously alarming or offending the United States. While our "own" imperialists will confidently put their fook on Japan's neutralization schemes, demand that the other fellow disarm, and very likely make a determined effort to kick English imperialism out of the West Indies. Which is all fully in accord with the pursuit of "our lawful rights" and the promotion of the "progress of civilization."

COOLIDGE'S refusal to call an extra session of Congress to provide effective relief for the Mississippi flood victims is developing into a first class political scandal. The Washington government is perfectly satisfied that all is being done while hundreds of thousands of men, women and children continue to suffer misery and starvation as a result of the flood disaster. A typical example of capitalist justice and fair play. Because the Republican administration has grounds to fear political complications if Congress is called in extra session and because Coolidge is afraid to be confronted there with the necessity of speaking out on the third-term issue, hundreds of thousands of people must suffer agony and torture. This is how the wealthiest capitalist class in the world is administering public affairs.

The efforts of several, midwestern capitalist politicians to secure action from Congress on prevention of future floods may or may not bring the desired results. But the burning question of the moment is immediate and adequate relief for those most seriously affected by the disaster. What is being done about that? How much Zaloney and equal treatment is being given to the poor and helpless by the agencies now administering relief? These are questions which cannot be dismissed with general appeals for relief.

It is time that the organized labor movement made an effort to investigate conditions and find out as to what is actually taking place in the area affected by the flood. It is just as urgent that the organized farmer movements raise their voice in the matter and present a program of action which would protect the lives of the ruined farmers and their families. Coolidge third term ambitions must not be permitted to stand in the way of something adequate relief to the workers and farmers stricken by the flood disaster.

THE Philippine Islands are again on the agenda of the capitalist press of this country. This time an attempt is being made to adapt British tactics in China to the needs of American imperialism in the Philippines. For the first time, in our recollection, a direct charge is being made against the leaders of the Filipino Independence movement that they are in communication or alliance with the Communists.

Feeling, presumably, that this charge by itself may not justify the imposition of more terroristic pressure upon the Filipinos, Rear Admiral Kittelle confirms a report "that certain Indiscia proposed and discussed a plot to destroy the naval ammunition dump at Cavite, near Manilla." The two stories are skilfully linked together in the newspapers, and thus a "sinister conspiracy" against American is brought to light. With General Wood on his way to the United States to get authorization from Washington for more power to crush the Philippines, these alarmistic stories are clearly designed to harm the independence movement.

Which is exactly in line with British tactics in China. And very likely these will prove just as effective in the Philippines.

WILLIAM GREEN, president of the American Federation of Labor, finds it extremely difficult to keep his peace of mind. The Soviet Union simply would not let him rest. Hence, he has again delivered himself on the proposed American labor delegation to Russia.

The reader will recall the terrific attack launched by the reactionaries at the Detroit convention of the A. F. of L. upon Coyle, editor of the Journal of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and his associates for their proposed plan to visit the Soviet Union and study conditions. The attack was nothing short of a frenzy. But the storm had blown over,

WHAT THE IRISH DID

By V. A. JACKSON (London)

GEORGE LANSBURY'S reminder of the parallel between the Irish national struggle and the Ulster protest in the Westminster Bill derives point from the reactionary "Ulster" resolutions of the days of Parnell.

It is no longer possible for an opposition group in Parliament to make use of the Irish question as Parnell did. It is impossible for a Parliamentary leader of the Irish people to temporize with the ruling class, to play off one contentious issue against another in the hope of their political favor and to the detriment of the enthusiasm of those who obey him.

The characteristic Irish method of obstruction will not succeed to any great length, in opposition to the measures of coercion. It was a method appropriate to the days of a powerful Irish Party, able practically to compel such a state of congestion in the House of Commons as to force the Government to submit to a threat.

That same period saw the method of moving the adjournment of the House on the slightest pretext, thereby compelling the Government to submit to the obstruction rather than allow the matter to undermine business.

"Mind the business," . . .

"Mr. Speaker, I rise to order. I submit that this question is not in order, and I ask you to rule whether it is in order or not."

"I am not prepared to give a point of order at this moment."

"I submit that the question of the Irish Members

DAILY WORKER EDITOR SENTENCED TO PRISON

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

WHILE Benito Mussolini is sharpening his stiletto and threatening to plunge it into the heart of Europe the government of the Soviet Union uses the language of peace. And yet our "peace loving" press sings low on Mussolini's sabre-rattling, while it attributes every disturbance outside of an earthquake to the Soviet Union. There is a reason, as a famous advertiser used to say.

NOT even the unprecedented action of the British government in raiding the Trade Delegation of a nation with which the government was on friendly terms, at least officially, goaded the Soviet Union into even a threatening attitude. Conscious of its strength it could afford to adopt a policy of dignified resentment and this attitude has won it the approbation of all fair-minded persons, but most important of all the support of the workers who have most to gain by peace and least of all from a capitalist war.

FROM things serious to things more or less so. Thus we take the liberty of again calling to your attention the fact that the Reverend Doctor Benjamin "King" Purnell, of the House of David, a religious cult, is prancing around the columns of our capitalist press after a reasonably long absence. If we get Benjamin right, his idea was that those who took him seriously, particularly members of the fair sex, would live forever. All they had to do was to obey Benjamin and "Ben" would do the rest. He did, only too often, so he is in trouble.

NOT that quite innocent persons don't get into the meshes of the law occasionally. For instance we have our comrades Dunne and Miller who are in jail because somebody wrote a poem that got published in The DAILY WORKER which was not to the liking of our local rulers and their stoolpigeons. But that is a different story. Purnell was only running a religious business calculated to dope the brains of the masses while Dunne and Miller were getting out a radical publication designed to open the minds of the workers. If Benjamin used a little discretion or paid enough protection he would be still playing to full houses.

"KING" Benjamin's place of business is or was in Benton Harbor, Michigan, quite close to a little house where several of us spent a short time in the fall of 1922 after the raid on the Communist convention in Michigan. All we were doing was discussing how best to organize the workingclass movement. The "king" was engaged in the business of ruining American womanhood, after first taking their dough. The "king" is still outside and so are we, yet dollars to whiskers, the capitalist will be more lenient to this plogs deffler of sacred things than to radicals.

ONE of Benjamin's greatest drawbacks was an excess of hirsute adornment around his thyroid gland. He wanted to escape, when the hounds of the law sniffed too closely to his harem, but his whiskers stood in the way. A barber might suggest that a good shave would solve the problem but the "king" would not be the old cave man he was without the foliage. Instead he decided to wrap a horse blanket around his forest. This along with a corset was to be Benjamin's armor in braving the hostile world. But treason was in his camp, and a jealous woman was the means of his downfall. Here we leave "Ben" to his fate. But ain't religion grand!

SHOPS TIED UP IN WALKOUT OF ALL WORKERS

Arrests Follow Vigorous Picketing

A tremendous success. That is the report of all Joint Board leaders and members of the Strike Committee following the walk-out of New York City fur workers in response to the call issued early yesterday morning.

"The response was far greater than was expected," said Ben Gold, chairman of the Strike Committee and manager of the Joint Board. "We are delighted with the result."

As the fur workers came to their shops yesterday morning, still carrying the memory of the enthusiastic "mobilization" meeting held at Cooper Union and Manhattan Lyceum the night before, they found members of the General Picket Committee on the job before them and leaflets were handed out calling the "General Strike of all Fur Workers for 8 o'clock, June 3.

Instead of going up to their shops, the workers started picketing their own shops, and for over an hour the fur market was crowded with thousands of men and women peacefully picketing and thus showing their determination to defend their union against both their bosses who have violated the agreement, and the traitorous International officials who with leaders of the A. F. of L. are trying to destroy the organization which the workers have struggled for so long to build.

We Must Raise the $500 Fine and Appeal Funds

William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, has been sentenced to thirty days in jail and the Daily Worker Publishing Company has been fined five hundred dollars as a result of the prosecution initiated some months ago by a number of patriotic societies. Strenuous efforts were made to prejudice the case against the defendants by showing their records in the Communist and labor movement in order to secure a heavier sentence. Due to the splendid support which we received from comrades everywhere, we were enabled to put up a stout and effective defense.

The fine of five hundred dollars comes at a most difficult time when we are in the midst of the expenses involved in the legal side of the case and when we are still confronted by heavy printers' bills. To this is added the fact that we must appeal the sentence in order not to allow such a dangerous precedent to remain on the books. An appeal is expensive. We feel that the comrades who responded so wonderfully thus far will not fail to continue their efforts with redoubled energy so that we may carry the case through to complete victory. Rush contributions in as fast as you can. We count on all comrades to keep up the splendid pace that has already been started.

GAMBLERS BET ON LIFE TERM IN SACCO CASE

Foreshadow Decision of Governor Fuller

BOSTON, June 3.—Gamblers here are betting even money that Sacco and Vanzetti will be given life imprisonment.

The gentry who hang out in newspaper offices and hotel lobbies downtown are cashing in on information which they claim comes from "inside sources" concerning the probable fate of the two Italian radicals facing death in the electric chair on July 10.

While their sources can hardly be verified, the gamblers and sports are ready to put up hard cash on their wagers—and these fellows are not in the "game" for charity.

In the eyes of both Sacco and Vanzetti, life imprisonment for a crime they did not commit is worse than electrocution. Sacco particularly has been emphatic in declaring that he favors death "at any time" in preference to continued imprisonment.

The new advisory committee has done nothing yet on the case and no one knows when it is going to function. Two of the members are college heads and are overwhelmed with the all-important job of turning out some more intellectuals for use in white collar jobs in factories and offices.

Judge Robert Grant, the third member, is a thorough-going reactionary who in his literary gems has been a great friend of the courts. The defense fears that Grant will be overpowered by his desire to whitewash Judge Thayer and the supreme court

Let Workers' Families Jump in Case of Fire, Declares Chief Realtor

"Let 'em jump", declared Stewart Browne, representing New York realtors at the hearings yesterday of the state commission considering revision of tenement laws, when he opposed construction of fire escapes in workers' tenements.

Browne revealed wholesale violation of the spirit of the law requiring landlords to have hose in halls for fire protection.

"Some buildings have fire hose 20 years old," he declared. "The hose would burst if it was ever used in a fire. But the owners are obeying the letter of the law; they do have hose."

Browne objected to changes in the zoning law and called for the abandonment of water tanks on the tops of buildings.

He was sitting, half asleep, in the "bull-pen" when they brought us in to be handcuffed and led us to the cells.

A huge Slovak and a construction worker, he had been arrested for putting a slug instead of a nickel into one of Chadbourne's subway turnstiles while on his way to his job.

He had his battered dinner bucket with him and every little while he would lift up the cover and look inside in a puzzled way.

He got ten days in the workhouse.

Chadbourne, accompanied by Barney Baruch has gone to Europe after testifying that he has bought up millions of dollars worth of transit stock in expectation of a fare increase.

"Don't eat any of these jail prunes," said the white haired "cokey" who keeps his overcoat on day and night because he claims he once did thirty overtime days because the jailer would not want for him to put it on after he had been ordered released.

"They're full of worms that won't stay in your stomach. These worms ain't like tapeworms. They got to have air. They crawl up in your throat and steal the air away from you."

"The last time I was here I ate prunes for supper and they had to call the ambulance and take me to the hospital early in the morning."

"All night long I had to stay awake and keep swallowing, but early in the morning they tired me out and nearly passed out."

"Cokey" made one convert. The old man whom the keepers say never steals anything but neckties, and who claims that he once woke up in the workhouse with a mouthful of bedbugs when he had a cold and slept with his mouth open, went over and poured out his prunes in the corner where they sweep the garbage.

But he did not capitulate to greater talent completely.

"But prune worms has got to taste like prunes," he said. "Now you take a bedbug and he tastes like a bedbu.. Of course bedbugs in your mouth don't steal your breath, but you just don't feel like you wanted to breathe any more."

Cokey magnanimously conceded the point.

Slim and brown, dressed in the uniform of an usher for a big uptown theater, he spoke English with the peculiar clipped accent of the West African Negro.

He had finished a course at Amherst last spring, he said, and was waiting to hear from his father in England before leaving the United States after being here for five years. He was born in Togoland.

Coming to New York from Massachusetts he had taken a job as usher to pay expenses. In Massachusetts he had a permit to carry a gun, because he was working in an all-night restaurant.

A few days after he came here, his room was burglarized. He called in the police and they found his revolver which the thieves had overlooked.

The policeman he had called upon for protection arrested him and charged him with violation of the Sullivan anti-gun law.

A. F. L. DEMANDS SOVIET RAIDS IN NEW YORK

Department of Justice Cool to Suggestion

The American Federation of Labor called yesterday for the repetition of the Arcos raids in London by raids on "all Soviet offices in New York City."

The demand was made by Edward McGrady, special representative of the A. F. of L. in a formal statement.

McGrady is a member of the A. F. of L. committee attempting to break up the Furriers' Union here and turn over the remnants to the fur bosses. Within a few hours after the Joint Board had called the city-wide strike of furriers, he declared he would ask the Department of Justice to raid Soviet offices here.

"I am going to demand," he said, "that the Department of Justice make a thorough investigation of Soviet agencies in the United States.

"I am going to call for action similar to that of Great Britain. I refer to the Arcos raid, in which the British Government seized documents showing Russia had been carrying on a subversive movement.

"This fur strike is under direct orders from Soviet Russia. The American Federation of Labor has hoisted the American flag over the fur industry, and, by God, it is going to stay there."

Department Ignores Him.

The Department of Justice, immediately after the Arcos raids, announced publicly that there were no grounds for similar fishing expeditions against Russian-American trading organizations. Neither Amtorg, the official trading organization nor the Russian-American Textile Syndicate would comment on McGrady's statements.

Contempt Charge On Cloakmakers Argued

The contempt charge made against left wing leaders of the Cloak and Dressmakers Joint Board for violation of the injunction taken out by the Dress Manufacturers, Inc., was argued yesterday before Judge Mitchell L. Erlanger, in the supreme court, Special Term, Part I.

Louis B. Boudin appeared in behalf of the union. The decision in the case will not be rendered for a week or ten days.

Exploit Butter and Egg Men.

Theatre box office men exact a 25-cent personal fee on tickets sold to likely looking butter and egg men, it was revealed in the income tax hearings yesterday on several big taxevading agencies.

Everybody takes a rake-off on tickets, it was testified, with the ballots paying $10 to $20 for the better girlie-girlie leg shows.

BERT MILLER SENTENCE SUSPENDED; COURT IMPOSES HEAVY FINE ON PAPER

Dunne's Record in Behalf of Militant Labor Held Against Him by Judges

William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, must serve 30 days in the New York workhouse. This was the sentence imposed yesterday morning by Justice Featherstone, Murphy and Kelly, sitting in Special Sessions, in connection with the publication in The DAILY WORKER of a poem entitled "America" by David Gordon.

Handcuffed, he was returned to the Tombs Prison where he will remain pending appeal to the higher courts.

Blow To Paper.

The new tactics to be utilized by its enemies to crush The DAILY WORKER were revealed when a fine of $500, the maximum under the law, was imposed upon it for the publication of the poem.

The $500 which The DAILY WORKER must now pay comes as a terrific blow, and its existence becomes more precarious than it ever has been since the commencement of the persecution against it by professional" patriotic societies. It establishes a dangerous precedent for further attacks against the radical press of the United States in utilizing this means of impoverishing it.

Miller "Sufficiently Punished."

In suspending sentence on Bert Miller, business manager of The DAILY WORKER, Justice Murphy for the court declared that "the guilt of defendant Dunne was greater inasmuch as he was the editor of the paper and responsible for its contents."

With surprising candor the judge declared that as far as Miller was concerned "the seven days which he has already served in the Tombs Prison will be considered sufficient punishment."

Dunne and Miller were brought handcuffed into the court room from the Tombs prison where they have been held without bail for the last week.

Preliminary to their sentence the probationary officer of the court read a detailed account of their "radical activities," especially that of Dunne who, the investigator declared, has for a long time been active in the American labor movement, "especially the radical and Communist side."

Dunne's "Record".

He also read telegrams and letters from police authorities in Butte, Mont., where Dunne was many years the editor of the "Bulletin," and from numerous industrial centers throughout the U. S. where he was active in labor struggles.

Dunne had been arrested a number of times, he declared, but had never been convicted.

The court investigator reported that he had no record of Miller ever

FIGHT TO FREE NEGROS HELD AS PEONS IN SOUTH

By ART SHIELDS

(Federated Press).

The escape of James Felton, fugitive peon, from a cotton plantation near Lexington, Georgia, may lead to a general probe of peonage in the South. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is stepping into the case and intends to bring Felton to New York to give his story the widest possible hearing.

Five other Negro peons who attempted to escape were knocked on the head with axes and then shot, says Felton. He was more lucky. After three days in a swamp without food he came to a firm land and finally reached Danville, Va.

"They had 45 men and 25 women when I left," he said. "Some of them escaped from the farm and others in the sawmill. We got the same food three times a day, peas and corn bread. We could not sing, write letters or talk, same as when we did not work fast enough we were whipped with a strap."

The Negro's hands are badly scarred. Hot Babbitt metal was poured over them to make him work faster, he says.

Feng Sweeps On; Yen To Join Nationalists

BULLETIN

HANKOW, June 3.—Eugene Chen, foreign minister, has dispatched a sharp note of protest to Japan, pointing out that the landing of 2,000 marines in Tsingtao is a reversion to Japan's old policy of coercion.

SHANGHAI, June 3.—A detachment of 1,700 American marines have already left the Philippines for Shanghai. It is reported that they will be sent to Tientsin to join the 1,500 marines who have already left for Peking.

A dispatch from Manila states that the army transport Chaumont is expected there tomorrow to take an additional detachment of marines stationed at Olongapo to China.

Plans for the disposition of a force of 16,000 imperialist troops are being perfected at Tientsin, it is stated.

Northern Workers Sympathetic

The situation is regarded as an extremely delicate one by the imperialist powers. Peking is "menaced" not only by the rapidly advancing troops of the Hankow Nationalists but by the large number of Nationalist sympathizers within the city.

Workers in Peking and Tientsin are only kept from openly espousing the Nationalist cause by the terrorism of Chang Tso-lin. The execution of labor officials in Tientsin which is in the hands of Chang Tso-lin's subordinates is a matter of almost daily occurrence.

Feng Controls Honan

HANKOW, June 3—Detachments of General Feng's troops are sweeping out the rearguard of Chang Tso-lin's retreating army from the Chengchow district, according to reports received from the front. Honan Province, south of the Yellow River is now in the complete control of the Nationalist troops.

It is reported General Yen Shi-shan, commender-in-chief of the Shansi army, will join the Nationalists in their drive against Peking.

Women Join Struggle

The awakening women of China have thrown themselves full-heartedly into the struggle for the emancipation of their country and have even gone to the extent of joining the Hankow Nationalist army.

A regular woman's traiging corps has been established here. The women have regular army uniforms. They are primarily engaged at present in giving first aid at the battlefront.

partment of Commerce. "Without foundation," he calls them. The reports were made by Walter White, assistant secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, after an extended tour of the flooded area.

If Hoover will talk to General Curtis T. Green, commander of the Mississippi National Guard Troops, in the flood zone, he will get abundant evidence of Negro slavery. Green talked freely to White.

Negro refugees—who make up 90 per cent of the flood sufferers—will be returned only to their former landlords, on identification by the landlords, the general said.

The Tombs edition of The DAILY WORKER has made its appearance.

According to the oldest keeper, this is the first event of its kind in the history of the prison, and the editor and business manager are the recipients of warm congratulations.

The general program of the Tombs DAILY WORKER is "Liberty, (in capa) Life and Pursuit of Happiness." Among its immediate demands is a One-Hour Day for keepers and trusties—from 12 Noon to 1 P. M. It is stipulated that this period shall also be their lunch hour and that during this time all gates, doors and sacrifice of the prison shall be unlocked. A penalty of fine or imprisonment, or both, is to be enforced against any keeper or jailer who eats a lunch within one mile of the Tombs.

The attempted suicide by hanging of fellow-prisoner furnished the first number with a story which Harvey O'Connor would have characterized as "great stuff." Application for police cards having not yet been O. K'd, the editor was unable to be on the scene, but a trusty whose nose for news is as keen as Sylvan Pollack's, but who lacks his long and varied journalistic training, covered the story for us in a very satisfactory manner.

We were moved to compliment this young Cub (a "dip" of necessary size) for the enterprise he displayed in securing a picture of the hangie—hangor, which had been taken in Sing Sing, by frisking him before he had recovered consciousness.

Thanks to this triumph of reportorial energy, the Tombs edition came into the corridor with the lifelike picture of the principal actor in this tragic drama proudly pasted on its first page, scooping every other paper in the city.

Some criticism was caused by the fact that in the rush of getting to press we inadvertently left the Rogue's gallery number on the photograph, but these few complaints quickly were drowned in a great wave of approval of the masterly way in which the Tombs edition of The DAILY WORKER had handled this great human interest story.

The bitterest criticism, strangely enough, came from the man whose terrible plight we had trumpeted to the sympathetic public. But as he had been handcuffed in his cell to prevent further suicide attempts, we ignored his verbal letter to the editor.

We have a good working knowledge of picturesque profanity, but we must confess that he used a number of words and phrases which were new to us and which we were unable to translate.

With the exception of this regrettable incident the Tombs edition went over big.

Features of the first number include:

Exclusive (in The Tombs) photograph of the anti-British imperialist demonstration in Moscow, pictures of "Jimmy" and his father and mother with a news item stating the arrival of the Swain Edition had spoken to many meetings of farmers and workers with Lindy's father in Minnesota, and a Women's Page. The regular Editorial of The DAILY WORKER has a position, and has a vocal and emphatic volume that is capable of taking complete charge of this department. All applications must be made in person to the editor.)

A number of poems were sent in for the first edition, but all were rejected by the editor with a shudder in which the business manager joined.

The subscription rate to the Tombs Edition of The DAILY WORKER is one package of Camel cigarettes per week.

No subscriptions for a period of more than 99 years are accepted.

The United Cigar Store Company paid him $24 per week for a work day of 10 to 11 hours with split shifts every other week. Pay day was two days ahead, he was 23 years old, it was June, he had a date with his girl, but no money, he failed to "ring up" forty-five cents, and—the company spotter caught him.

He has worked steadily for the United for two years, his record is clean, but here he is in the Tombs with bail fixed at $500—which he cannot raise.

His girl came down to see him—then two thick screens in a visitors' row amid a devil's din of visitors' and prisoners' voices—and he came back to the cells sobbing his heart out and trembling in every muscle.

If you work faithfully for the United Cigar Store Company (the retail wing of the tobacco trust) you may, after years and years, stand with your feet planted on the golden pinnacle of $40 per week.

That is, of course, if the "spotter" never catches you forty-five cents short.

District 2 Miners Preparing Now for Strike in Summer

Recall Phillips County

"If there is such a thing as retribution some of the southern plantation owners are getting it," said White. He told of one plantation in Mississippi where the Negro lands have not seen a penny in 5 years. The owners' properties were covered with raging waters, flowing at many miles an hour when White passed through.

And the waters were also over Phillips County, Arkansas, where a thousand Negro cotton farmers were killed in 1919, when they formed a peaceful farmers' union.

SACCO and VANZETTI SHALL NOT DIE!

Hughes in Hot Attack on Traction Fraud

Writes Letter to His Friend, Hylan

Samuel Hirshfield, ace undercover operative in the John F. Hylan city administration, who was appointed to the important 12-year job of chief of Hylan's main traction investigation, is trying to revive the political corpse of Hylanism. Little Davie, between jobs as county strike picketer for pal Tammany, and Tammany's policemen indulges in literary communion by writing letters to his former chief.

Both Hylan and Hirshfield are grandnazis of the Tammany machine. Their only mistake was that they imagined themselves against them the machine. From the days of their youth they associated officers they lost all sense of political perspective and imagined they could with impunity defy their creator, Tammany Hall.

Get the Boss's Rush

When Tammany made a deal with the traction barons and tried to indict Mayor Hylan and his administration to aid Governor Al Smith in a fight to raise the fare of the millions of city workers who have to travel in the subways, the mayor kicked over the traces and refused to be a party to the swindle.

Hylan's fight against Tammany was not because he is the servant of the "common people," he loves to talk about, because he is and his boss, William Randolph Hearst, who really forced Tammany to accept Hylan, were the political agents of the land sharks, the suburban soft-drivers real estate agents who were opposed to higher fares because it would make it more difficult for them to sell their "special homes for workmen," to the slaves of the city.

A bitter fight ensued in which the traction interests defeated the real estate interests. Politically it meant the defeat of Hylan by Walker.

Revive the Traction Fight

The traction fight has recently been revived, obviously for political effect upon the fortunes of the boss of Tammany, Governor Al Smith. One of the staunch Tammanyites, Mr. Samuel Untermeyer, investigator extraordinary, has had charge of the investigation and Magistrate Hirshfield hastens to assure the public that the so-called "discoveries" of Untermeyer were unearthed by him during his term of office.

Casting about for the best means of placing himself and his pal, "Red Mike" Hylan again before the public, Magistrate Hirshfield writes a letter to Hylan praising the work of the investigation and, incidentally, berating the Interborough, Untermeyer, Smith, Tammany and Walker, which follows:

Enormous Dividend

"New York, June 1, 1927.

"Hon. John F. Hylan,
9 East 40th Street,
New York, New York.
"My dear Judge:

"According to the press of today, Mr. Samuel Untermeyer just discovered that the Interborough Rapid Transit Company had between the years 1915 and 1919 paid out subway dividends aggregating 187½%, or within 12½% twice as much as the Interborough Company's total investment.

Figures Are Old Ones

"Nearly eight years ago, when the subway corporations made application for an increased fare, as Commissioner of Accounts, I furnished these figures to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, and the same were made public at that time in the course of the public hearings held by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment under your presidency, as Mayor. It was in that investigation that we found that the law firm Guggenheimer, Untermeyer and Marshall received from the Interborough Rapid Transit Company $25,818.72 as counsel fee in the now famous Admiral Realty Company law suit, said to have been cooked up for the purpose of having the courts pass upon the legality of subway contract No. 3; the contract under which the I. R. T. received the city built subways and the city thus far received nothing in return.

Untermyer Was Bondholder.

"I also remember that according to our records, Mr. Samuel Untermyer, his son, his nephew, and his law partner owned an aggregate of $186,000 worth of Interborough bonds and that the estate of the late Andrew Freedman, of which Mr. Untermyer was executor, owned $928,091 worth of Interborough bonds.

Washing Dirty Sinners.

"It occurred to me that while this traction investigation is now being conducted at the Criminal Courts Building, under the direction of the head and front of the B.-M. T., large stockholder in the I. R. T. and the reputed financial backer of Governor Smith's successful aspirations, is being examined as a witness, it would be of interest to delve into the story of how you were favored out of the investigation by Governor Smith because of your stand on the transit question and your insistence upon the five cent fare. In the summer of 1926, it was said, I do not now recall by whom, that before your decapitation had been decreed upon a conference alleged to have been attended by Mr. Chadburn, Boss Olvany of Tammany Hall, Tammany Sub-Boss Flynn of the Bronx, Walker and one or two others was had at a certain place. The Walker campaign managers seemed to have plenty of cash during the primary fight for the governorship and later in the general election; the corporation controlled republican legislature passed the amendment giving the Walker administration additional $300,000,000 to finish the subways you began to build, and everything seems to have been running along smoothly except to Hylan, when suddenly this investigation was started by Governor Smith's State Transit Commission with the great Investigator Untermyer as counsel. Does it mean war to the hilt, or is it simply shadow boxing?

"The people would undoubtedly like to know whether the traction magnates were double crossed, or the reason for the apparent break between the aforementioned worthy confreres.

"Yours truly,
"(Signed) DAVID HIRSHFIELD."

More Tammany Graft.

Although professing expert knowledge of the traction tangle, Hirshfield missed the important point of the whole investigation—the enormous graft that is involved in the whole affair. As a result of the newest traction scandal both republicans and democrats at Albany have approved a three hundred million tax exempt bond issue for the purpose of constructing more subways. These subways will be built by the city and the traction grafters who obtained dividends to the amount of 187½ per cent in a period of four years will gain the benefits derived therefrom. The whole "investigation" is worse than shadow-boxing. The traction barons do not object to being called names if only they get what they want and in this case they are getting it. Tammany, in turn, will get nice fat campaign contributions from the corporations to boost Al Smith for president.

Don't Mention Wages.

In all the investigations thus far conducted nothing is said about the wages of the traction slaves. The strike of last year, which Jimmy Walker and his police force helped to break up—and which Tammany judges issued injunctions against, was the excuse for the traction barons to plead poverty. They declared that they could not pay the living wage demanded by the strikers. The facts again brought out by the investigation proves that they can pay wages, and the workers on the subway and elevated lines should smash the company union called the Brotherhood and organize a real union and again put up a fight against the slave drivers who amass enormous profits off the starvation wages of the traction workers.

Breaking Chains, Movie Of Russia, In Newark

NEWARK, N. J., June 2.—"Breaking Chains," a motion picture which portrays life in the Soviet Union, will be shown here Saturday, June 4, at Krueger's Auditorium.

Illinois Wins Point Over Lakes.

WASHINGTON, June 2.—The supreme court today eliminated New York's contention of sovereignty over water power rights on the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers on the New York Boundary from the Chicago-Lakes diversion case on motion of ex-cer E. Carlstrom, attorney general of Illinois.

Fur Council Is Formed

At present, an hat loses repeatedly several hundred dollars in the course of a year's operation. Wall Street financiers who have seen it is continuing any American worker and discharging capitalistic interests.

The "Big Four" are abstract conception, that is to say, the machinery whereby the workers who make them in this form of life is taken over the management and direction of these organizations and run them to their own advantage.

Ford, Firpo, Flynn.

To this end the field worker must lend himself. At present his use is the old one of a controlled creature. He is used as an implement of attack and opposition. If he would free himself from the position in which he now finds himself it is imperative that he organize a protective union not only for the benefits which will accrue to his own advantage but in the interest of the 40 million policyholders who are victimized by the open system.

The right to organize is given to these groups of workers who effectively do organize. After the organization is completed all talk of "right" disappears.

Can Most Public.

The industrial field worker enjoys a condition which exists in no other industry or business. He has contact with practically the entire "public." Each agent calls at about 200 families every week. In each family there are six months' of policies. His customers are mostly workers who understand the value of trade unions, if they themselves are not active members they are sympathetic to unionization.

The first move towards organizing an insurance field workers' union is to acquaint the insuring public that such a move would be in the interest of the policyholder.

Thrice Too High.

Every agent of the "Big Four" knows that the premium rates charged by these companies are exorbitant. In some cases they are more than 300 per cent too high. Every agent knows that the ten year accumulation clause is murderous in its application. It should be granted after two years. If the insuring public were acquainted with these facts via the agent, there would be an immediate wave of sympathy in his direction.

In his own interest the agent must agitate to abolish the "legee and change" system by means of which he is penalized and fined for conditions over which he has little control.

Abolish "Timee" System.

When the "timee" system is done away with practically all of the evils to which he is subjected will automatically disappear. The fear of the legee charge gone he will no longer work at night to maintain insurance in force; which was written years ago by other agents and on which he received no salary.

in his admonition of the "secret" capitalist courts.

Only Advisory.

Just what investigation the new committee can do is mystifying decidedly to the unsophisticated. The new committee, composed of Presidents Lowell and Stratton of Harvard and "Boston Tom" with Grant will act in a strictly advisory capacity, it is expected.

Three defense witnesses, James J. O'Neil of Boston, a lawyer, and Lena Allen and Harry Kaziensky of Quincy were questioned by the governor. Judge Cosillo of New York expressed his interest in the case of a letter. Filipo Turati, head of the Italian Socialist Party, whose headquarters have been transfered to Paris, asks "mercy" for Sacco and Vanzetti. His cablegram, curiously worded, reads:

"Your refusal to intervene will kill more than two men for years in torment; this refusal will kill the mutual trust between civilized nations; it would open a gulf of bloodshed between Europe and America, which the waters of the Atlantic would not efface. We feel sure, sir, that you will pronounce the word of mercy which the world expects from you."

Sixteen hundred more names, asking a commission to review the case were forwarded by the New York Nation. The Buffalo Sacco-Vanzetti conference, representing 41 labor bodies asks freedom while the Working Men's Labor League of Vancouver, B. C. wants unconditional pardon for the two workers.

The Parkhead Socialist Sunday School of the Glasgow, Scotland, Labor Institute ask a retrial. A cable from Haarlem, Holland asks intervention "in the gracious name of Jesus Christ."

The Swiss section of the European committee to save Sacco and Vanzetti is appealing for signatures to a petition asking a new trial.

Keep Preachers in Place.

Thomas W. Boynton, former state attorney general, denounced efforts to obtain justice for Sacco and Vanzetti as an interference with the courts. The idea of a fact-finding commission to review the evidence nettled him especially.

"I recently told a minister quartered at my home," he declared, "that the ministers and the church should mind their own business with regard to the Sacco-Vanzetti case. I told him that coming from the clergy such a move for a fact-finding commission would be comparable to the demand for a trial by a mob on the street."

Night Wingers in N. J. Fur Hearing Arrested in Court

NEWARK, N. J., June 3.—Eight wing members of the furriers got the surprise of their lives today when they came down to court to watch their socialist attorney, Henry Cowen put the screws on the strikers of Local 25. After great preparations, lots of influence exercised over judge and county officers, they found that not only were the cases of the six strikers postponed until the September Grand Jury session, but on evidence presented that the right wing gangsters were the parties really guilty of slugging, six of them were arrested in open court.

Among the reactionaries who were thus placed on the defensive was H. Serkin, vice-president of the International. When the judge got a look at him, he refused to let him out in the custody of his attorney, and held him on $100 bail, "because he looked like a typical gangster."

When Serkin was placed in his cell, union men drew away in disgust, refusing to be associated with a loathsome character.

Mother Bunch.

When the left wing furriers came up for trial, a motley assemblage of police, A. F. of L. representatives, detectives and a socialist attorney were on hand. Henry Hilfers, A. F. of L. representative in New Jersey, joined arms with Henry Cowitz, the socialist attorney and the chief of police in trying to send the workers to jail.

John Larkin Hughes was attorney for Local 25. He obtained the continued freedom of the pickets on $200 bail, with the exception of Jacob Shulman and Hyman Rothberg, whose bail was raised to $300 each.

The right wingers arrested in court were Serkin, Sam and Max Adelman, one a professional scab and the other a gambler, Frank and Sam Wenarsky, both scabs and Milton Corbett, the former business agent of Local 25, who was charged with absconding with $40,000.

Meskowitz Released Because Judge Thinks He's Punished Enough

Herman Meskowitz, Young Workers League member, released from jail several days ago after serving one month of a six months sentence for distributing Hands Off China leaflets was let out because one of the three court of special sessions judges who sentenced him believed "that he had been punished enough."

When Meskowitz was released no reason was given by the authorities, the opinion of the judge being obtained after an investigation by Chas. M. Josephs, International Labor Defense attorney.

Brooklyn Eager to Hear Truth About Sacco and Vanzetti

All Brooklyn knew today about the great Sacco-Vanzetti demonstration planned for Sunday afternoon at Arcadia Hall. Thousands of DAILY WORKERS and more thousands of leaflets and announcements had been broadcast through the borough by the Sacco-Vanzetti Brooklyn Conference in its energetic campaign to hold one of the country's biggest rallies for the two Italian workers in Brooklyn.

NEXT MILLS SENTENCE SUSPENDED; COURT IMPOSES HEAVY FINE ON PAPER

...Judge George L. Dunne of the Military Order of the World War, the attorney for the prosecution gave ... attack on The DAILY WORKER, ... was evident, had commissioned with the investigator in his report to the court.

Dietz, he asserted, had called to his attention a copy of "Red Cartoons," consisting of drawings appearing in The DAILY WORKER during the past year. Obviously calculated to influence the court, the investigator cited several drawings in the collection which he described as "objectionable." The worst offender, one was a cartoon on Sacco and Vanzetti, which, he said was "disrespectful to Judge Thayer and the courts of Massachusetts."

The DAILY WORKER teaches class consciousness and class hatred," the investigator concluded.

Obscenity Charge A Smoke Screen.

Before sentence was passed Joseph R. Brodsky, defense lawyer, characterized the entire proceedings as a badly disguised attempt to muzzle the organ of the Workers (Communist) Party.

That the 'obscenity' charge is entirely fictitious," he declared, "is obvious in view of the fact that the original complaints were made by the Military Order of the World War and the Knymen of America."

The DAILY WORKER has been publishing serially for the past 10 days the book entitled "Professional Patriots." The activities of the principal patriotic organizations now functioning were described, and the methods of their secret service given.

"The issue must be kept clear," Brodsky continued. "This prosecution was begun because of the position and economic views of The DAILY WORKER. This paper is the organ of the Workers (Communist) Party of the United States. The law of this country has not challenged its right to exist.

"This paper," Brodsky asserted, "is the spokesman of the workers of the United States. It should not be grouped in the same class with publications capitalizing so-called 'immoral literature.'"

Will Appeal Sentence.

In sentencing Dunne to the workhouse, Justice Murphy declared that "this should serve as a warning to all radical and Communist elements that they cannot express their ideas in any way they please."

The case will be appealed at once, Brodsky declared. In the meantime Dunne was returned, handcuffed, to the Tombs where he will remain until he is sent to the workhouse.

Gordon Now in Tombs.

Immediately after the sentence had been imposed, David Gordon, 18-year-old author of the poem "Anarion," who had been freed in $500 bail was convicted by the same court and remanded without bail to the Tombs for sentence next Friday.

No Reason to Question the Real Issue.

If anyone was so gullible as to doubt the real motive behind the persecution of The DAILY WORKER co-editor and manager that doubt is surely now dispelled by the events in the courtroom yesterday when the investigator for the court, in presenting what purported to be the records of Comrades Dunne and Miller, devoted most of his time to emphasizing the revolutionary character of our publishing house. He even went so far afield as to drag in as evidence the volumes of "Red Cartoons" that we have published. He especially emphasized the working class activities of Comrade Dunne over a long period of time in the West.

That it was not the individuals before the court who were on trial, but The DAILY WORKER as an organ of the revolution was made plain by the sentences imposed. In addition to jailing Comrade Dunne for thirty days on the pretext of publishing a poem that he knew nothing about, the Daily Worker Publishing Company was fined five hundred dollars. The courts know very well our financial condition. They know that five hundred dollars at this time may mean weal or woe to us—that our financial condition is menacing our very existence—so they hope to hasten what they hope will be our demise. Out of the hard-earned funds that have been donated at such heroic sacrifice by our comrades and supporters we now have to pay five hundred dollars as a fine. We are also compelled to appeal the verdict which means an added expense of possibly greater than the fine. This legal defense is imperative because if we let this verdict stand it is a precedent that will be usd against us on the slightest pretext.

The threat to the life of our paper is still grave and editorially we appeal to all our supporters to continue their efforts in order that the enemies of labor will still have to fear the power of our press and the workers will still have an organ of militant working class expression.

The U. S. Marines in Tientsin.

Only a person hopelessly bereft of reasoning power, only a dolt who believes that the United States government is anything other than an imperialist bandit ravaging every part of the earth where it can gain a foothold will believe that American troops in China have been moved from Shanghai to Tientsin, the great port near Peking, for any purpose other than intervention against the Chinese revolution. American forces everywhere are recognized as agents of tyranny, of a depraved despotism that has few equals in the history of the world.

Just as American marines have stifled free government in Nicaragua and placed at the head of a fraudulent government, Diaz, a scullion of Wall Street bankers, so they are now in China with exactly the same purpose in view. While the motive is the same the methods of achieving its ends are different. China is not Nicaragua. There are more powers than one involved in China, which imposes upon the American forces the necessity of proceeding with caution. In Nicaragua only the imperialism of the United States placed the iron heel upon the necks of the inhabitants. There it is a simple matter of using force and terror to the utmost without fear of coming into conflict with any rival imperialism. The perversion of the principles of the Monroe doctrine, begun by William Jenninga Bryan under the Wilson administration, continued and further developed by Charles Evans Hughes under Harding and brought to full fruition by the petty despot, Kellogg, under Coolidge, enables the Wall Street brigands to claim the exclusive right to exploit the South and Central American republics. In China American imperialism has to reckon with the power of Great Britain, fighting desperately to maintain its empire against overwhelming odds and forced to stake its all in a mad crusade against every threat to its domination at home and abroad.

In the first imperialist combination against the Nationalist liberation movement in China the American diplomatic corps and the militarist commanders played the game of Great Britain. Britain took the lead in that drive. But Wall Street would not permit its agents to play the British game. They have their own special policy, a line that is directed toward dominating China with the same undisputed tyranny that is now exercised in Nicaragua and other countries groaning under the oppression of Yankee imperialism. Today it is the American forces that take the lead. Brigadier General Smedley Butler has been given command of the marines not only in China but in the whole Far East. He shifted the Shanghai forces to Tientsin to be ready to strike a blow against further Nationalist advances on Peking, and has ordered to Shanghai marines from the Philippine Islands. This maneuver, to release Philippine forces for service in China, also accounts for the recent ferocious attacks against the trade unions and the Nationalists of the Islands, so they can be terrorized into submission during the Chinese drive. The American forces are the first to move to Tientsin—yesterday the sixth regiment of marines, 1,600 strong, was dispatched thence on the transport Henderson, while the tenth regiment artillery force, 400 strong, accompanied them. The Americans are followed by the British forces under command of Major General John Duncan. Japanese forces are headed for the same point. In face of the Nationalist threat to imperialism the predatory powers hold in abeyance their own inner conflicts and unite against the common enemy.

No amount of sophistry from Washington can conceal the fact that the occupation of Tientsin is an act of aggression, of intervention and war. Like all imperialist depredations against colonials and semi-colonials, war is actively conducted, but without the formality of an official declaration.

More than ever it is essential for the working class of this and other imperialist countries to insist that the governments of their countries get out of China and permit the Nationalist liberation movement to dispose of its own counter-revolutionary enemies, thereby paving the way for a stable government.

Although the differences between the imperialists are temporarily laid aside the moment they again feel that the liberation movement is arrested, they will resume the old conflict between themselves that can end only by endeavoring to decide the issues upon the sanguinary field of battle. Even now, while professing to co-operate, they each endeavor to use the situation for their own advantages.

Force the butchers to withdraw all forces from China!

Fight against the threat of another world war!

The British Trade Union Bill and Its Place in the Framework of World Imperialism

Its Lessons for the American Labor Movement

ONE ASPECT OF THE BRITISH "NO STRIKE" BILL

During the great coal strike and short general strike that preceded it the British Parliament illegally suppressed strike activities. But the Englishman loves his laws, and parliament is busy trying to make such action legal in the future. The Trades Union Bill, now before the house of commons, makes most strikes illegal, and general strikes positively the next thing to treason.

The attack of the Tory government on the working class comes at a time when British imperialism are engaged in one of the most far-reaching imperialist adventures in their history. It comes at a time when scores of thousands of troops have been landed in China for the purpose of shattering the Chinese revolution and the partitioning of China as a colony of the imperialist powers. It comes at a time when war is actually being waged without a declaration of war . . . the treachery and cowardice of the labor leaders . . . and their open support of this imperial brigandage present . . . a situation wherein the British government has been . . . left free to pursue its offensive in all directions unhindered. . . . The government . . . therefore launched its trade union legislation with a twofold object in view. It calculated that it would act as a means of diverting the labor movement from attending to the issues of the Chinese Revolution on the one hand, and on the other, it could fetter the unions against mass action of any kind before it would be possible for sweeping changes to be made in the leadership of the trade unions. (J. T. Murphy, member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Great Britain, International Press Correspondence, May 12.)

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

ARTICLE I

THE Trade Union Bill, the latest weapon which British imperialism is trying to forge for use against the workingclass, has been treated so far in the American press as a purely British problem.

It is exactly the reverse. It is the latest manifestation of the world offensive against the trade unions which is a necessary part of the capitalist program for repairing the damages of the world war—called variously "reconstruction," or "stabilization" or "rationalization of national economy." It has as its first objective the weakening of workingclass organization to the point where it can no longer resist effectively the offensive of the capitalists and their govergment and prevention of trade union participation in working class political activity.

IT is only in method that the British Trade Union Bill differs from the outright fascist control of the trade unions as in Italy, the control of the unions thru the activities of parliamentary reformist leaders as in France and Germany, or the worker-employer cooperation schemes, legalised in the Watson-Parker bill as in the United States. (In the Uulted States, where the process of decay of the capitalist system is present only in subdued form, the methods of attack are distinguished under a phraseology of friendliness but have nevertheless a deadly purpose which coincides with the fact that American capitalism has never acknowledged that trade unions have a legal right to exist. It must be remembered however that there is also a powerful subjective factor at work here—the fact that American capitism has observed and drawn serious lessons for its future conduct from the extension of the trade union movement in Europe following the war and the revolutionary struggles which have arisen there as the working class realised its increased power.)

IT is the political activity of the unions which is under attack and the extension of this activity into direct conflict with capitalist government which the British bill is designed to suppress.

There is the additional motive of crippling any widespread action of the whole trade union movement, or joint action by its various sections in securing better wages and working conditions or resisting wage cuts, etc.

An examination of the bill itself shows its undisguised hostile and suppressive character. It is divided into eight parts, seven of which detail the offences under the act and the penalties established and one part which interprets the other seven.

THE seven provisions of the bill are as follows:

(1) All strikes, except those dealing with simple questions of wages, hours, etc., are outlawed. These also become illegal if they take the form of sympathetic strikes affecting other workers than those originally involved.

(2) Scabs are given additional protection.

(3) Picketing is outlawed.

(4) Severe rules governing the use of union funds for political purposes are set up.

(5) Government employes are prohibited from joining any but civil service unions or engaging in political activity.

(6) Provisions for union labor in municipal contracts, etc. are declared illegal and municipal employes and other public service workers are severely penalized for stopping work without due notice.

(7) The attorney-general is given wide powers in enforcing the provisions of the bill.

THE first provision of the bill practically abolishes the right to strike. It first states clearly that if a strike has any other object than that of advancing the economic interests of the workers in one trade or industry, that it is by virtue of this fact illegal.

Second, if the strike is "designed or calculated" to bring pressure to bear upon the government or upon the community "or any substantial section of it." It likewise becomes illegal.

But this is not all. The decision as to the legality or illegality of a strike rests with the courts.

THE declarations of the strikers as to their intentions have no weight. A judge or jury (composed of property-holders, "ratepayers" is the English term) decides first the object of the strike and second if it is "coercive" or not.

It is easily seen that, under the bill as proposed, the only guarantee that a strike has of not being declared illegal is that it is ineffective. In other words, strikes which the capitalists feel certain will be defeated because of their small size and lack of militancy are the only kind of strikes which will be tolerated.

A STRIKE to free political prisoners would be illegal. A strike of transport workers to aid coal miners—or vice versa—would be illegal. A strike to force consideration of unemployment relief, a strike against war—all protest and sympathetic strikes are to be made illegal.

Likewise a strike in the coal mining industry, the transport industry, the electric light and power industry, in telephone and telegraph, etc. becomes illegal because the courts will inevitably decide that it is designed or calculated "to intimidate the community" or "a substantial section of it."

THE penalties provided for taking part in an illegal strike range from a fine of ten pounds ($50) to three months imprisonment after conviction in a magistrate's court to two years imprisonment after conviction following an indictment.

The language of the bill is that any person who "declares, instigates, furthers, or takes part" in an illegal strike is subject to the penalties of the law.

It follows that those who speak in favor of such a strike, or who write in favor of it are equally liable with strikers.

NEITHER can a union, whose strike has been declared illegal, claim immunity from suits for damages as was formerly stipulated in the Trades Disputes Act of 1906.

The next portion of the bill dealing with the right of scabs supplements the provisions outlawing strikes. It follows logically that if a strike is illegal that a strike-breaker is a person who is performing a great service for the "community" and must be accorded the full protection of the law.

Under the proposed law the unions are therefore prohibited from expelling or in any way disciplining a strikebreaker—no matter what the ordinary rules and procedure of the union may be. If in spite of the law, a scab is expelled, the courts can order him reinstated and the union to pay him damages.

THE third provision, that dealing with picketing, is one of the most drastic features of the bill. Any picketing that is carried out, to use the language of the bill, "in such a manner as to be calculated to intimidate," is illegal and punishable by fine or imprisonment or both.

Not satisfied with the ironclad character of the phrase quoted the bill interpets the word "intimidation" to mean:

"To cause in the mind of a person a reasonable apprehension of injury to him or to any other member of the family, or of violence or damage to any person or property, and the expression 'injury' includes injury other than physical or material injury, and according the expression 'apprehension of injury' includes an apprehension of boycott, of loss of any kind, or of exposure to hatred, ridicule or contempt." (Emphasis Mine.)

IT is manifestly impossible under such conditions to picket legally and picketing is therefore abolished.

To strengthen this provision of the bill another clause makes it illegal even to watch a house for the purpose of persuading any person not to scab. A fine of $100 or three months imprisonment is the penalty for such an "offense."

IT is when the bill begins to deal with the funds for political purposes collected by unions that the British rullingclass shows where the shoe pinches most. It is evident from the language employed that this section of the bill, which is a direct blow at the Labor Party, is framed to lay the basis for a deal with the reformist elements who are undoubtedly willing to accept other features restricting the strike powers of unions in order to preserve as much as possible of the trade union election machinery.

AT present any member of a trade union is free to apply for exemption from assessments for political purposes. But under the new provisions every member of a union must signify in writing his willingness to contribute to the political fund—on a blank form provided for in the bill, a clause of which kindly informs the member that he can withdraw his consent at any time.

No political assessment can be collected from a member of a trade union who has not given his consent in the manner stipulated. Whereas the previous procedure was for a member to notify the union that he did not wish to contribute, now he must notify his union that he IS willing to contribute.

ALL funds for political purposes must be kept separate from other money, and the minutest details of all transactions filed with the Registrar of Friendly Societies. The government thus has a check on all phases of workingclass political activity involving financial expenditures.

Here the reformists will probably accept a compromise. That is they would be willing to define "political funds" as those which are used only in elections and thus agree with the government that the wider political activities of the labor movement such as demonstrations, relief for political prisoners, agitation against imperialist adventures, aid to colonial labor and revolutionary movements, etc. should be banned.

THE section of the bill dealing with civil servants, i.e., government employes, makes workers in this category virtual slaves of the British oligarchy. They are prohibited from membership in any union which is in any way, directly or indirectly, affiliated with any political organization. They are allowed to belong only to unions whose membership—or affiliated membership—is composed of government employes.

The Perennial Revolt.

We have with us again "Ladees and Gentilmin" that most remarkable phenomenon of this misinformed age, the never-dead, never-alive "revolution" against the government of the Soviet Union.

This strange phenomenon rarely deserts its favorite haunts on the Polish and Lithuanian border.

It usually crawls forth from its lair whenever Leon Trotsky or Zinoviev or any other individual or group in opposition to the general policy of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union come in for criticism at the hands of the central body. This happens quite frequently but not more frequently than the yarns of a revolt.

As usual the capitalist correspondents stationed in Riga and London have the G. P. U. (they still call the Soviet political police the Cheka) arresting "followers of Trotsky." Of course this is a lie made out of whole cloth.

A few days ago the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union issued a strong statement against Trotsky and his group for openly assailing the policies of the party on the Chinese and British questions. At a time when the U. S. S. R. was being attacked by the British empire and that government was engaged trying to organize a world war against the Soviet Union and a united front against the Chinese revolution, the Central Committee decided quite correctly that Trotsky and his followers were guilty of a serious breach of discipline in opening an unauthorized discussion over questions already settled.

No sooner did this news get out than the capitalist correspondents had a revolution clicking off their typewriters. This is about the explanation of the latest "revolt."

It will have the usual run in the papers—about forty-eight hours. Then it will pass away, as all things do sooner or later.

WE learn as the result of an investigation that our local transit barons have been paying tremendous dividends to their stockholders during the past few years, while they were threatening to pass the hat to the public in the form of an increased fare. In fact quite a number of skeptical people were on the point of believing them so consistent was their cry. In four years the Interborough paid 187½ per cent. This will put a damper on the move for a fare increase, but unless it gives the transit employes encouragement to jump and get some of this surplus coin, the greater part of its value will be missing.

CALVIN Coolidge is not saying much nowadays but he is allowing Mrs. Coolidge to say less and look her best. A recent portrait of Mrs. Coolidge that appeared in a soaked-in-One-oil republican sheet was captioned: "The lady that runs the white house efficiently." Thousands of women who were supposed to revolutionize things when they got the vote will say: "Isn't she a dear," and cast their votes for her husband. Coolidge may not be a great man, but he is a good judge of the great American sap.

THIS is the kind of thing that makes many workers pessimistic, "Aw, you can never do anything with them," they will rave. But we should not forget that over in Russia, if you will pardon us for taking note of a country that comprises one of workers and peasants took off sixth of the earth's surface, millions their hats to the Czar up until right close to the Revolution. They are not doing it now because there is no Czar. Some day the American workers will not be voting for a G. O. P. or "donkey" candidate. There won't be any.

What the Daily Worker Means to the Workers

A Few Encouraging Contributions to Our Emergency Fund.

A coal miner from Illinois sends $5.00 to The DAILY WORKER fund. "I would not feel loyal to the labor movement or to the working class," he says, "if this contribution were not made. I wish I could give more. As a coal miner, I realize the truth that comes to the workers through the Workers Press is very dangerous to the capitalist oligarchy and their system. Let's have more truth."

WARNS OF DANGER OF IMPERIALISTIC ATTACK ON U.S.S.R.

The Third International Appeals to Workers.

MOSCOW, June 5.—The plenary session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International has adopted a manifesto addressed to the workers, peasants and soldiers of all the world, and all oppressed peoples, wherein it points out the growing danger of a new war. It says:

"In China the worker and peasant masses are rising against unrestrained foreign capitalistic exploitation. The Chinese revolution is drawing capitalism from its condition of temporary stabilization and deepening the crisis.

"Echoes of the struggle in China are finding response in other colonies, Indonesia, Indo-China and India. The imperialists, although torn asunder by contradictions, in face of the revolt of the colonial peoples, are attempting to rally a united front to crush the Chinese revolution.

"The wrath of the capitalists is first of all directed against the workers of the Soviet Union—the republic which shows the toiling masses the way towards freedom. To preserve the rule of the bourgeoisie over the colonies and the regime of exploitation of the working masses of the European countries, the stronghold of the proletariat—the workers' state—must be levelled to the ground.

"The raids on the embassy in Peking, the consulate in Shanghai and the trade mission in London is aimed to provoke war against the Soviet Union. The revolutionary steadfastness of the revolutionary state showed all the world that the U. S. S. R. is pursuing a policy of peace and forced British imperialism to assume the initiative in a rupture of diplomatic relations. This act signals the greatest danger for the world proletariat.

Mobilize Against War.

"It is necessary to mobilize all forces against war and for the support of the proletarian state threatened by the joint forces of world capitalism. In recent years at Locarno, Leghorn, and Geneva, British imperialism has succeeded in engineering a bloc of imperialistic states against the U. S. S. R. It will undoubtedly obtain from Hindenburg's Germany, in the name of the League of Nations, permission for marching through Germany troops and munitions for the struggle against the Soviet Union. Imperialism has most energetically created around the U. S. S. R. a hostile cordon of its vassal states, where military dictatorship and terror against the proletariat and peasants is rampant.

"In Poland and Lithuania, owing to coups d'etats subsidized by London, and in Ronmania with the favorable assistance of Mussolini, power is in the hands of governments which are obedient tools of Chamberlain's. At the moment of the rupture of diplomatic relations with the U. S. S. R. the British government was celebrating its reconciliation with the Poincare war government. It is true that in the united front of the imperialistic states, fragile Germany and Italy are already bringing up the problem of a new repartition of the world. The Mediterranean Sea and the Balkans are a constant focus for intrigues and rivalry, with dispredators snatching world booty from one another. However, these conflicts are actually in the background. The Italo-Yugoslavian conflict showed Britain knows how to subdue rapidly any struggle arising between capitalistic states, and to rally them in a united front against the common enemy—the working class and its proletarian state. War against the Soviet Union means war against the proletariat. In preparing war imperialism compels at the same time a struggle against the working class and its organisations. Therefore its laws against British trade unions, arrests of members of the Communist Party in France and England, growth of fascism in Germany, fascistic terror in Italy, executions of revolutionaries in Poland, Roumania, Bulgaria and Lithuania. The Second International deserts all actions against the U. S. S. R. and as in 1914, international social democracy wishes to use the working class for war. Still more dangerous for the toiling masses than the open cynical defection of the right wing social democratic leaders are the fallacious pacifistic illusions of the left leaders of social democracy in the trade unions, lulling the working masses with the opium of sentimental pacifism, instead of mobilizing them for the struggle against war.

Increasing Danger.

"The capitalistic regime inevitably engenders war. The struggle for

Five Hundred Dollars Fine, "The Limit of the Law"

This is the sum which must be immediately raised to pay the fine imposed by the capitalist court upon our DAILY WORKER. In addition there is the heavy expense involved in the appeal of the case of William F. Dunne, who was sentenced to thirty days in jail, and Bert Miller, who received a jail sentence of a week. The term may appear short, but the fact that a conviction stands against the members of The DAILY WORKER staff, is far more important than the length of the sentence. These convictions must be reversed in order to protect our paper.

Action on the question of our mailing privileges still remains to be seen. We are not in a position to judge just what action the postal authorities are going to take, but we must be prepared for anything.

The comrades throughout the entire country are awake to the danger confronting our paper. They are rallying behind us with truly magnificent support. Not for a moment must we let up. Not for a moment must there be a break in the splendid response which is coming to The DAILY WORKER'S emergency call.

SOVIET WORKERS KEEP U.S.S.R. SAFE FOR ALL TOILERS

4th Congress Pledges Union as Haven

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

(Special to The DAILY WORKER.)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R. (By Mail).—"The construction of Soviet motors for airplanes has equalled not only airplane construction in capitalist Europe, but also in America."

As Clement Yoroshloff, People's Commissar for the Red Army and Navy, and chairman of the Revolutionary Military Council, made this statement, an ovation of applause broke simultaneously from all sections of the great gathering of 1,500 delegates attending the Fourth All-Union Congress of Soviet Workers, Peasants and Red Army Deputies assembled in the Bolshoy Theatre here, workers' republic on view.

There is a Soviet movie showing conditions under czarism and at the present time, one of the scenes being laid here in the Great Academy (Bolshoy) Theater. In the picture the czar crouches in his royal box as the throng shows disapproval of his favorite ballet dancer. But tonight, in the same royal box, a score of foreign diplomats from as many capitalist lands, sit silently surveying the scene, some of them accompanied by their women folks. Their home governments have sent their war fleets and armies against the Chinese revolution, and are plotting a new attack on the Soviet Union, creating a situation that is uppermost in the minds of the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union.

They cannot help but feel uncomfortable as this Soviet Parliament thunders its approval of every step taken towards the defense of the victories gained by the Bolshevik Revolution. The Japanese ambassador, more stoic than the rest, sits motionless almost as the proceedings go on.

The news of the sessions of the Soviet Congress was prominently displayed in all the capitalist press as it came eastward across Europe.

Red Fleet Gets Ovation.

The question of the economic conditions of the country had been taken up and discussed. The Industrialization of the Soviet Union and its agricultural problems had also been reported on. Tonight Voroshiloff was reporting on the Red Army and the Red Fleet. Unprecedented enthusiasm greeted Voroshiloff, who has the place formerly held by Franze and before him, Trotzky. The praesidium of 85 members, leaders in far flung sections of the Soviet Union, including a dosen women, land in the applause. It is taken up by the closely packed tribune. It sweeps out over the orchestra pit, occupied tonight by journalists, the capitalist and Soviet writers being divided in two separate sections. It is taken up and grows to thunder proportions in the main body

Chicago Bakers Renew Existing Scale of Wages

CHICAGO, June 5.—The 1,500 members of the Chicago bakery workers' local will continue to receive the present scale after June 15 under the contract just signed. This insures a wage of $41.50 a week for one class and $39.50 for the other class of bakers, and the 8-hour day.

The employers had insisted on a $2.50 cut.

Two Greek Deputies Jailed When Striking Workers Are Attacked

ATHENS, June 5.—Two members of the Greek Chamber of Deputies are among the 12 Communists arrested when police attacked workers at Salonika.

Communist leaders have addressed an ultimatum to the Govarnor General of Macedonia, demanding the release of the prisoners and the resignations of the Governor General and the Chief of Police.

The arrests followed a police attack on striking tobacco workers who demonstrated in front of the governor's place at Salonika.

ROLE OF COMPANY GUARDS TAKEN BY SIGMAN'S AGENTS

Members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union are to become the "company guards" of the bosses.

This was made clear when the right wing officials in a confidential appeal, to some of their active followers, urged them to stage a "demonstration" in front of a number of shops in the dress market.

The Joint Board of the Cloak and Dressmakers' Union called a strike in these shops recently because some of the workers were being discharged for refusal to register with the reactionary union. The present action of the International officers is considered surprising, in view of the fact that Morris Sigman, its president, declared last week that "there are no strikes in the dress shops."

The Joint Board charges that the present move of the right wing officials is a brazen effort to make members of the International into hirelings for the employers by attempting to interfere with the regular picketing.

Among the shops to be picketed this morning by workers of the Joint Board is Carson Bros., 247 West 38th Street, where the business agent appointed by the right wing had 20 girls dismissed for refusal to register with the International union.

Gov. Len Small Must Return Part of Spoils

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 5.—The long pending interest suit against Gov. Len Small ended in circuit court here today, following a lengthy conference between attorneys for the state and defense and circuit court Judge Frank W. Burton.

A final decree under terms agreed upon outside of court calling upon the governor for payment to the state of $650,000 would be entered July 15.

WASHINGTON, June 5. (FP).—13 years after its enactment by congress, the law designed to abolish the alley tenements in the national capital has been virtually knocked out in the district court of appeals. The scandal of the conditions under which many thousands of persons, black and white, were crowded into these slums in the rear of middle-class residential property was the only reason why congress passed the law.

POLITICS MIXED IN CHAMBERLIN BERLIN FLIGHT

Cal Slapped Germany in Lindbergh Trip

BERLIN, June 5.—With Clarence Chamberlin and Charles Levine in their Bellanca plane scheduled to arrive here at midnight, the entire city was aroused to greater intensity than any time since the insurrectionary movement of 1923.

Great political importance is attached to Chamberlin's ignoring Paris and Brussels to come straight through to Germany. Although young Lindbergh expressed a desire to go through Germany to Scandinavia, U. S. Ambassador Herrick throttled his ambition and steered him to London. Than President Coolidge practically ordered him home, cutting short his European trip by a full two weeks.

German national feeling, aroused at the Herrick-Coolidge slap, has pinned its hopes on Chamberlin as the New York-Berlin flyer who will put Germany on the aerial map as a competitor to Paris, Brussels and London, which cashed in magnificently on Lindbergh.

BERLIN, June 6 (Monday).—A report from Cologne at 1:30 o'clock this morning said that Chamberlin was sighted between Rotterdam and Amsterdam, in the Netherlands, at 11:30 p. m. central European time Sunday night (6:30 p. m. New York daylight saving time. The Columbia is expected to cross the German border at any minute now, and may arrive here within an hour.

Brooklyn Workers Want Freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti

Freedom for Sacco and Vanzetti was demanded by over 1,000 workers who rallied to a mass meeting held yesterday afternoon at Arcadia Hall, Halsey St. and Broadway, Brooklyn. The meeting was held by the Brooklyn Sacco and Vanzetti Conference.

Resolutions were adopted demanding the immediate release of Sacco and Vanzetti; urging the calling of a national defense conference and a message of greeting to the two prisoners.

The meeting was presided over by Anthony Merlino, vice president of the International Journeymen Barbers' Union; Carlo Tresca, editor, Il Martello; Molasaye J. Olgin, editor, the Hammer; John Tartamella, manager, Barbers' Union, local 918; Forrest Bailey, director, American Civil Liberties' Union; Ray Ragozin, International Labor Defense; Leo Pruseika, editor, Darbas and a representative of Congressman La Guardia who told the assembled workers that the New York representative favored the cause of the two Italian workers.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., June 5.—Mell Gore, convicted slayer of W. H. Cheek, Atlanta storekeeper, was electrocuted at the state prison here today.

Ruby Ray, now serving a prison sentence for complicity in the fatal holdup, made a desperate effort today to save the youth by declaring she was the one who fired the shot. Gore, however, denied this.

Industrial Unions and a Labor Party, Advice of Australian Visitor

WASHINGTON, June 5 (FP)—If American labor really wants to secure legislation and administration that will safeguard its industrial rights and rapidly advance its conditions, it must establish and build up a labor party, in the opinion of Miss May Matthews, an attache of the Australian Industrial Delegation to the United States. She gave this advice to an informal group of questioners after she had spoken at a dinner in her honor given by the Women's Trade Union League in Washington. The Delegation, sent by the conservative federal government of Australia to study economic conditions in America, includes several members of the Labor Party, of which Miss Matthews is a leader in the city of Sydney.

Industrial unionism has been found most efficient in Australia, and would be equally successful here if seriously tried, she said. The rapid improvement of labor legislation, of educational opportunities, public health measures, public ownership and social insurance and other safeguards to the common good, she credited to the effective organization of labor on the political and industrial fields.

British Capitalism to Lose $75,000,000 Orders from Russia

The following statement on American trade with the Soviet Union in the light of the Anglo-Soviet break was issued by Saul G. Bron, Chairman of the Board of the Amtorg Trading Corporation, the largest organization in American-Soviet trade:

"I have received numerous inquiries as to how American-Soviet trade will be affected by the breach in Anglo-Soviet relations. While it is still too early to give any figures in detail, my correspondence of the past few days indicates that there should be a decided gain in Soviet government purchases here.

Great Traffic.

"Last year Soviet Union purchases in Great Britain aggregated about $75,000,000 and in Canada during the current year, about $3,000,000. It is obvious that re-arrangements of a business of this volume, under unexpectedly changed conditions, cannot be affected in a few days. I am ad-

Arrest Mexican Killer of American Merchant

MEXICO CITY, June 5.—Javier Diaz, charged with shooting and killing Arthur Brewer, an American coal merchant and former Harvard football player, has been arrested, according to despatches arriving here from Guadalajara.

The press reports the shooting as having taken place last Wednesday in a quarrel over business matters.

The American embassy and the consulate general have not been officially notified of the shooting, and it is believed they will make no official representations unless instructed otherwise by the state department.

U.S. Czar of Haiti to Fight for More Gravy

PORT AU PRINCE, June 5.—General John H. Russell, American high commissioner in Haiti, who has faithfully protected the interests of the sugar barons and the National City Bank in the little "republic", is returning to the United States to lay before Secretary Kellogg "irrigation plans", which will open up 100,000 acres of land to the Illinois financiers.

State Department Swaps Agents to Safeguard Investments; Feng May Upset Plans

Appeal for Funds to Aid Wounded Troops; Mme. Sun Yat Sen Heads Red Cross Drive

WASHINGTON, June 5.—The successful drive of the Nationalist armies on Peking has forced the state department once more to change its Chinese policy. In a statement issued to the press yesterday, Secretary Kellogg indicated that should Chiang Kai-shek's troops capture the Northern capital, Washington would extend the same form of recognition to the right wing Nationalists as has hitherto been extended to Chang Tso-lin.

This change of front is in line with the policy of American finance capital which is anxious to see some group unify China so as to guarantee the "open door" and American investments. Chiang Kai-shek's treachery and the imminent fall of the Northern stronghold has given the state department an opportunity to swap its Chinese agents. The legal subterfuges involved in the change were explained by Secretary Kellogg as follows:

Prior to the revolution of 1911 the state department recognized the Peking government because it was the only government speaking for the whole of China. Later recognition was extended to whatever government happened to occupy Peking merely because it was on the scene. But this recognition, Secretary Kellogg explained, was conditional and not absolutely de jure. It was never extended to Chang Tso-lin or any of the other war lords as such, he said.

American Minister MacMurray and the American consuls, he pointed out, are authorized to do business with any of the governments in China if American "interests" require it. In case the capital of China is established at Nanking, the American legation would be moved there, and the conditional recognition hitherto extended to Peking would be extended to the new capital.

Forget Hankow Nationalists.

It remains to be seen what American bankers and the state department will do should the Chinese capital be established at Hankow, whose troops are more likely to smash the reactionary stronghold at Peking.

Raise Funds For Red Cross.

In an appeal for funds to aid soldiers wounded in the Nationalist fight for the liberation of China, the American Committee for Justice to China, 105 Fifth Avenue, has issued a circular letter to its friends stating:

"We have received a cablegram from Anna Louise Strong, who has reached Hankow. She says that 10,000 were wounded in the recent fighting and they are coming into Hankow at the rate of 100 a day. The League Sanctions Murder of Syrian Rebels by French

The League of Nations has officially blessed the reign of terror carried on by the French imperialists in Syria, it was learned today as the result of the publication of the report of the Council of the League to a petition by Syrian Nationalists. The League's reply was made public by refugee Syrian Nationalists who have established a bureau of information at Cairo, Egypt.

Referring to the Nationalist complaints that revolts have been crushed by French with the most ruthless cruelty, the reply of the council states: "The painful accidents of which some of the inhabitants of the mandated territories were the innocent victims are so much more regrettable since they affect a population administered in the name of the League of Nations."

After a hasty dismissal of the complaints of the Nationalists, the council expresses the pious hope "that the politics followed in Syria will always be of a nature to inspire in all inhabitants the conviction that their legitimate interests will always be the object of prompt and effective protection on the part of the authorities."

RED CRY OF A. F. L. EXPOSED BY GOLD WHO TELLS FACTS

Picket Associated Dress Shops Today

"The charges that the fur strike was called for 'Communistic' purposes have been made by American Federation of Labor officials simply to prejudice the New York courts and police, and public opinion in general," said Ben Gold, manager of the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union yesterday.

"Matthew Woll and McGrady know that such charges are simply nonsense, but they realize that this old familiar 'red' cry is effective in misleading the public and obscuring the real issue in this strike. They know that demands for raise on Russian furs, and absolutely unfounded statements about the 'unseen hand of Moscow,' have no bearing on our union situation, but are useful to divert attention from the facts.

Does Not Fool Workers.

"While this 'red heresy' cry may mislead the public, it does not fool the workers. They know that this fur strike was called because the employers in the Associated broke their contract with the union. Just a year ago, at the end of our 17 weeks' strike, an agreement was signed between the Associated and the New York Joint Board Locals 1, 5, 10 and 15." It was signed by Samuel N. Samuels for the Associated, Ben Gold for the Joint Board and Dr. Paul Abelson, impartial chairman in the fur industry.

Strike Necessary.

"If the Joint Board should break this agreement, the employers would promptly lock out the workers. Now that the Associated has broken the agreement, a strike has been made inevitable. Other employers have lived up to their agreements; the Associated will have to do the same. This strike, which was called to enforce a legal contract, can be settled just as soon as the Associated manufacturers decide to recognize the agreement they signed with the Joint Board, live up to all its terms which they have been deliberately violating in the shops, and stop interfering in internal union affairs."

A mass picket demonstration is to be held this morning before all shops of the Associated Fur Manufacturers, Inc., after which the workers in individual

"On the contrary I ever that the said strike was forced upon the workers in the industry; that it is being conducted by them for the protection of their vital economic interests, and that their struggle is not only legitimate but highly meritorious, and one that should commend itself to the sympathies of all right thinking men."

Discussing the findings of the Governor's Commission, President Sigman deemed in his affidavit, that "The recommendations, which undoubtedly are the result of careful and painstaking investigation and of a conscientious effort to remedy some of the evils of the industry, fell considerably short of satisfying the most substantial demands of the workers. Our Union, after very careful consideration of the Commission's recommendations, reluctantly reached the conclusion that they were entirely inadequate to remedy the most crying evils under which the workers suffered. We accordingly invited the principal organizations of employers in the industry . . . to confer with us on terms of a new agreement. The jobbers' association (The Industrial Council) responded to our invitation and met in conference with our Union. The Industrial Council, however, refused to consider our requests point blank and stated that it would not even as much as discuss any proposition outside of the recommendations of the Governor's Advisory Commission. Our Union thus found itself forced to declare a strike in order to bring about the necessary improvements in the conditions of the workers."

Sigman Himself Refutes Charges.

In the affidavit, President Sigman himself refuted the charges of the employers that the strike was led by "Communists." He said:

"The moving papers (to secure the injunction) seek to represent the present strike as something different from the ordinary labor struggle; as a sort of sinister movement against law and order led by communists for political purposes. I absolutely deny the said statements. 'The defendants are not, as alleged, 'communists recently from Russia.' They are workers of many original races and nationalities, residents and citizens of the United States who are not concerned in this struggle about anything but an opportunity to earn an honest and modest living for themselves and their families. Whatever the individual political persuasions of any Union official may be, they do not and cannot enter into the present controversy or influence the conduct of the workers in any way. The pending strike of the cloakmakers of the City of New York is solely and exclusively an economic trade union struggle."

The charges of President Sigman and other International officers, after twenty-two weeks of co-operating in [illegible] were [illegible] that "[illegible] Communists" [illegible] were not [illegible] in good faith.

After about six weeks of the strike, and workers in some independent shops were ready to settle on union terms, the Communist Party, by the Administrative Committee, which was headed by Salvatore Ninfo, Chairman, and David Dubinsky, Secretary, both of the Right Wing. With the approval of the General Strike Committee, of which President Sigman was a member, such shops were gradually restricted to work. All at the end of twelve weeks of strike, there were but from 4,000 and 5,000 workers in the shops who regularly contributed fifteen percent and later twenty percent of their wages to the strike fund. The Union took special precautions to prevent the settled shops from making work for jobbers that were struck, so as to safeguard the strike. Every shop that was settled signed a supplementary agreement that permitted a representative of the Union to check over all work made in the shop, in order that none of it might be made for houses against whom there was a strike.

At the end of twenty weeks of struggle, a settlement was effected with the Industrial Council, or "inside manufacturers," in conferences at which President Sigman, Salvatore Ninfo, David Dubinsky, Morris Hillquit, Louis Hyman, and others acted as spokesmen for the Union. The new agreement was signed by Morris Sigman and Morris Hillquit for the International and Louis Hyman on behalf of the Joint Board.

The settlement was then conceded by all to have obtained far better terms than those proposed by the Governor's Commission. The forty-hour week was won; increases in wages of from four to eight dollars were won in every craft where the Commission had recommended increases of from two to three dollars; recognition of examiners which the Commission had denied was won. Most important of all, the right of the employers to reorganize their shops up to ten per cent was greatly restricted. The commission had restricted such reorganization to firms employing thirty-five workers, but the settlement further restricted it by the addition of clauses stipulating that employers must also guarantee thirty-two weeks of work a year and that they must pay a recompense of an additional week's wages for workers discharged under its provisions. Thus an employer could not take on extra workers he did not need for the last few weeks in the season so as to fraudulently claim the privilege of reorganization, but must employ at least thirty-five workers for at least thirty-two weeks before it could be granted him.

Negotiations with the American Sub-Manufacturers Association for a settlement were begun, and the employers, with the example of the "inside manufacturers" before them, seemed to be in a frame to make concessions. Only one point remained in dispute, when suddenly the negotiations collapsed. Subsequent developments indicated that the right wing had interfered to further its own purposes within the union, and had promised the association better terms if it would wait longer. The association declared a lockout, which, however, was never effective, and upon this largely imaginary excuse, Sigman seized control of the strike, announcing at the same time that it was lost, that it had been "illegal" from the beginning, and was the result of the destructive work of the "Communists."

Fugitive Threatens to Expose Slavery

By ART SHIELDS.
(Federated Press)

The escape of James Felton, fugitive peon, from a cotton plantation near Lexington, Georgia, may lead to a general probe of peonage in the south, if the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is stepping into the case and intends to bring Felton to New York to give his story the widest possible hearing.

Five other Negro peons who attempted to escape were knocked on the head with axes and then shot, days Felton. He was more lucky. After three days in a swamp without food he came to firm land and finally reached Danville, Va.

"They had 48 men and 25 women when I left," he said. "Some of them worked on the farm and others in the sawmill. We got the same food three times a day, peas and corn bread. We could not sing, write letters or talk, and when we did not work fast enough we were whipped with a strap."

The Negro's hands are badly scarred. Hot Babbitt metal was poured over them to make him work faster, he says.

Hoover Covers Up.

Reports of Negro peonage in the Mississippi delta are verified at by Herbert Hoover, secretary of the Department of Commerce. "Without foundation," he calls them. The reports were made by Walter White, assistant secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, after an extended tour of the flooded area.

If Hoover will talk to General Curtis T. Green, commander of the Mississippi National Guard troops, in the flood zone, he will get abundant evidence of Negro slavery. Green talked freely to White.

Negro refugees—who make up 80 per cent of the flood-sufferers—will be returned only to these former landlords, on identification by the landlords, the general said.

"We don't want our labor supply deranged," the general explained. Labor agents who solicit Negroes for other jobs are kept out of camp. Negro labor is at a premium now, because of the wholesale migration to the north in the last few years.

Owners Get It.

"If there is such a thing as retribution some of the southern plantation owners are getting it," said White. He told of one plantation in Mississippi where the Negro "hands" have not seen a penny in five years. The owner's properties were covered with raging waters, flowing at many miles an hour when White passed through.

And the waters were also over Philips County, Arkansas, where a hundred Negro cotton farmers were killed in 1919 when they formed a tenant farmers' union.

Needle Trade Defense

The Soviets Invade Coney Island.

A Cablegram from Riga, states that the Soviets are preparing to invade Coney Island, drive out the bourgeoisie and establish Soviets there with an army of 25,000. Do not ask for the source of the news. Perhaps it was London. In spite of the fact that England found various documents about the "plans of the Soviet Government," it could not find the plans for the invasion of Coney Island. The cablegram even states the definite date when the invasion will take place. This will be on July 16th, and will be led by the Joint Defense and Relief Committee. The army will consist of shoemakers, cloakmakers, furriers, dressmakers and all other workers as WILL CONGREGATE AT THE CONEY ISLAND STADIUM.

SACCO and VANZETTI SHALL NOT DIE!

[illegible] Head and Pilot Are Rescued [illegible]

Boston, June 5.—Pale from the ordeal Charles Lindbergh, the nation's national guest and flight [illegible]

That was the series given here last night by Lt.-Col. Dana T. Gallup of the 110th Cavalry, during the talk as chief speaker at the recruiting dinner given by Battery H, 324th Coast Artillery at the cadet armory.

Gallup asked the recruits to follow the "deed of Capt. Lindbergh," himself a national guardsman and fight the efforts of "American bolsheviki to overthrow the institutions of the country."

Gallup did not mention that Senator Lindbergh, the aviator's father, was repeatedly denounced as a "traitor" and almost mobbed for opposing U. S. entry into the World War.

British Capitalism to Lose by Recent Break

vised that existing contracts made in both countries will be scrupulously fulfilled as far as the Soviet Union trading organizations are concerned. The offices of the Soviet Union trade delegation in Canada have already been closed and the uncompleted commitments have been turned over to Amtorg for completion.

Baffled Trade Ending.

"We are already receiving tentative orders from Moscow that would ordinarily go to England. The next few months will give an indication of the extent of such diversions. In this connection it is interesting to note that during May Amtorg placed the greatest number of orders in the United States during any month since its organization three years ago. These orders amounted to $8,500,000. This increase was not influenced by events in England. It is also interesting to note that purchases of American cotton valued at upwards of $35,000,000 by the All-Russian Textile Syndicate during the past seven months established a new record for that company.

No Change of Plan.

"I am in a position to state authoritatively that the break with England will have no effect on the economic plans for the current year in the Soviet Union. Orders to be placed abroad for industrial expansion will suffer no curtailment. The financial position of the Soviet Union in connection with commitments and trade is well taken care of.

"In accordance with the plans for industrial expansion in the Soviet Union for the coming year, we may look for considerable increases in imports and orders abroad. There is every indication that these plans for enlarged foreign trade will be fully carried out. There is also every indication that the break with England will facilitate the effort being made by Soviet Union industrialists to deal directly with American firms, through the authorized selling companies here, eliminating the European middle-man, and to enter into closer relations with the American technical world.

"To sum up: The secure position in connection with Soviet trade plans for this year, the industrial program for the coming year, the record increase in orders placed here and the curtailment of trade with Britain, all these show the direction to be taken by Soviet Union trade with the United States."

STRATON AGAIN TRIES TO STOP ATHEIST JOKES

Was Asked to Abandon New Testament

There are some things even judges of capitalist society cannot tolerate from the other apologists of capitalism. One of these is the Rev. Zeno Bosch Straton, notorious fundamentalist pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church and apostle of ignorance and superstition.

Having trimmed his long hair that he wore for so long, probably in an attempt to resemble as nearly as possible the Sunday school picture of Jesus Christ, the eminent bible-thumper appeared before Magistrate McKinley in the West Side Court Saturday and tried to have a complaint against Charles Smith, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism.

Resented "Sex" Magazine.

The eminent divine declared that Mr. Smith had mailed him a magazine called "Sex" recommending it as a substitute for the New Testament. This shocked his sensibilities.

Magistrate McKinley refused to hear the Straton complaint because the Saturday routine is concerned only with petty crime.

When Straton learned that the magistrate would not hear his complaint he arose from his obviously uncomfortable seat among drunks and vagrants, and strode inside the rail to a point between Leonard Snitkin, counsel for Smith, and the amusing John P. Sumner, chief of the Society for the Suppression of Vice who was there in behalf of Straton. Fixing his ministerial, if somewhat bleary eye upon the magistrate, Straton waited for recognition of his austere presence. But he was ignored as the court proceeded to examine a battered individual with a black eye and broken nose. So the Calvary Baptist pastor retreated again to his seat among the down-and-outs.

Besides the irrepressible Mr. Sumner, Straton also had his assistant pastor with him as well as his son who is serving his apprenticeship to god in a Philadelphia spook shop.

The magistrate informed Straton that he would have to take his case back to Magistrate Maurice Gottlieb who told him a short time ago, to "ignore the charity of forgiveness I have heard you preach in your church more than once."

Would Enlighten Straton.

Mr. Smith of the "Sex" stated that he would like to win Straton away from the ideas of sex as taught in the New Testament.

The next hearing is set for June 21, when Straton will try, for the sixth time, to punish Smith for asking him to read and think. That may quite probably be construed as an insult to any fundamentalist.

Warns of Danger of Imperialist Attacks

peace is tantamount to a struggle against the regime engendering war; a struggle against the capitalistic regime as such. The struggle for peace in a capitalistic regime (unless it become mass revolutionary struggle) is a lie, an illusion, preparing the war for a bloody tomorrow. In face of the daily increasing danger, close your ranks for a fierce and ruthless struggle against war depredators who are preparing war. You are stronger than all and you will win if you close united whole ranks of all exploited against exploiters. Awaken, arise! away with cowardice. Close front against those who, within our own organisations spread pessimism and disintegrate our forces. War is pending.

"Only by mass action, protest meetings, powerful demonstrations and opposition strikes; by developing resolute mass struggle, will you succeed in defeating the onslaught of capital, and repel the imperialistic jackals. Defend the Chinese revolution, manifest by millions of muscular hands to form an unassailable Prevent the transport of troops and barrier of defense to the threatened Russian revolution. Imperialists are preparing war to crush the revolution. Your reply must be preparation for revolution to crush war and destroy capitalism which alone makes war inevitable. Unite and rally thousands, millions in your Communist revolutionary organisations and Communist fractions. Form with your midst social patriotic leaders preaching sacred unity with exploiters. Gag those who are lulling you with pacifistic rubbish. Prepare for the great struggle; do everything necessary for victory."

Topics of the Tombs

By S. B.

Prisoners, indeed, are the things to whom all the evils in the universe are due—if we are to believe the newspapers.

Crime, with its attendant disorderliness, the newspapers hold responsible in the Tombs for the last week, was given an indeterminate sentence. This is a fleshly dressed lady, habituate of the more profitable business and of his fat percentage by and from the 16 girls "working" in his place during the record visit of the Apostle Paul.

He admits that he went out on the street and "insulted for the joint."

He took to himself a new wife a short while ago and promptly gave her the job of supervising the activities of the other inmates. He did not say so in so many words but one cannot escape the impression that he forced his wife to attend to the wants of customers when the other inmates were engaged.

When he was greatly hurt and downcast by the fact, as he explained in detail as we were waiting in the ballpen to be taken back to our cells, that the probation officer had read out in what he thot was an unnecessarily loud voice, the intimate details of his career.

He didn't have to tell the whole world about it," he said. "It's enough when the Judge and D. A. hear it. I pleaded guilty last week just because there was hardly anybody in the courtroom and I thot it was a good time to get it over with. Now look what I get this morning. .Some of these Reparation officers are worse than judges."

The little Chinaman in the next cell kept busy all day long. From somewhere he got a scrub-rag and every day he went over his cell until it shone.

He washed the floor after it had been mopped by the trusty. He washed the walls as high as he could reach. He washed the water and drain pipes. He washed the little bench that is in every cell and the bars of the cell door.

He took great interest in the Chinese pictures in the June number of Current History, cheerfully pronounced the Chinese words on its cover for us again and again and gravely commented that "Generally good people."

What he was here for I do not know and he could not or would not tell me except that he was to be sent back to China.

"Four is all you get," said the doctor, "and you must swallow them now."

There was a verbal battle, Cokey protesting that he would simply vomit them up again, the doctor demanding that he take them all.

Suddenly Cokey surrendered. He put the four pellets in his mouth, gulped three or four times and beamed on the doctor.

We resumed our interrupted journey to the ball-pen, where Cokey rescued three pellets from some recess of his mouth and did them up carefully in a bit of newspaper.

He takes the "cure" on the island where, he says cheerfully, it is much easier to get dope then in the Tombs.

He was released today with his ten days in the Tombs as sufficient punishment.

Otherwise he would probably have gone crazy.

Jails, hospitals, forecastles, barracks, tombs—all smell alike.

Some say it is bad air or dirt that is never reached by broom or soap and water that gives them this odor. Others say that places where men and women are confined against their will soak up the protests that may not even be voiced and utter them in the only way that steel, brick and mortar may speak.

Whatever it is one never forgets the odor.

Nearing Punctures Democracy Pretense In C.C.N.Y. Debate

"Where's your democracy in India, China, Nicaragua, Cuba, the Philippines?" asked Scott Nearing in his debate against Arthur Garfield Hays Friday night at the Lewisohn Hall in the College of the City of New York.

On the topic "Is Democracy Suited for Modern Life?" Hays said "yes," and Nearing said "no." Hays acknowledged we did not have perfect democracy in America, but he urged a return to the ideals of Thomas Jefferson, the father of democrats.

Jeffersonian Democracy cannot stand up against the machine guns, battleships, armies and navies of 1927," Nearing declared. "This country, and the whole world is ruled by plutocracy and not democracy—which is out of date."

While Hays devoted himself to condemning both the Soviet Government of Russia and the Fascisti government of Italy as undemocratic, and criticising the U. S. government for its imperfections as a democratic state, Nearing gave a concise analysis of the ruthless economic imperialism which rules the world today, and declared that a complete economic change to a Communist society, is the only solution for the situation.

Dr. Frederick B. Robinson, president of the College of the City of New York acted as chairman of the debate which was held under the auspices of the Social Problems Club and the Douglass Society.

Courts Cling to Italian Worker As U.S. Tries Frame-up

After serving two-thirds of his sentence before he was sentenced, Mario Benci, Italian radical suspect, was set free yesterday, having completed his 60 day term in prison on a charge of technical violation of the Sullivan Act.

Behind Benci's detention lies a dramatic story of the use of every possible legal weapon on the part of the courts to keep him in custody while the United States Department of Labor could take steps for his deportation.

Benci was arrested on the night of April 30 while putting some Sacco-Vanzetti "stickers" on a store window, and charged with disorderly conduct. It was brought out that when he was searched at the police station, a book purporting to deal with the construction of bombs, and some pamphlets alleged to be seditious were found. The magistrate held him in $2000 bonds until the following Thursday. Then he was fined $3 and costs and immediately rearrested without warrant on a charge of violating the Sullivan Act. The police had searched his apartment and found a pistol in a bed which had been slept in while Benci was still in the Tombs. Trial was postponed until April 29, the court meantime urging the case upon the Department of Labor for consideration.

The American Civil Liberties Union was appealed to and represented Benci in the entanglements that followed.

Denies Possession of Gun.

Though Benci denied all knowledge of the pistol, he was found guilty of violating the Sullivan Act. Again sentence was postponed, this time until April 29, when sentence was suspended and the court issued instructions to arrange for Benci's deportation.

At a hearing on May 13 an inspector from the Department of Labor assured the court that there was no case for deportation; that Benci had lived the revolutionary three years as a peaceful citizen; that the bundle of so-called seditious literature was really a miscellaneous collection of pamphlets and that the government found no reason to take action.

The judges agreed to sentence Benci to 60 days imprisonment for possessing the pistol and then to allow credit on this sentence for the time already served.

Extreme Solicitude for Rich Crooks.

Thomas L. Chadbourne, millionaire traction magnate, has left for Europe aboard the Aquitania. His departure conveniently removed from the scene one of the principal actors in the startling tale, unfolded in the hearings of the Transit Commission, of ruthless gouging of the people of the city of New York and vicious exploitation of the traction slaves.

The hearings thus far have brought out a number of astounding developments in which Mr. Chadbourne, Mr. Dahl and Mr. Wiggin of the National City Bank collaborated:

1—The Interborough Rapid Transit company actually is obtaining above 16 per cent on its capital stock and above 22 per cent on money paid in by its stockholders.

2—In spite of the fact that the B. M. T. is paying its regular dividend of $6 a share on its preferred stock and close to $7 on its common stock, Mr. Chadbourne was definitely planning to bring this to $8 by using his powerful influence to secure an increased fare from the vast army of toilers who use his lines daily.

3—Stockholders of the Interborough put in $21,620,000 and drew out the enormous sum of $85,625,000 between 1905 and 1919.

4—The city was $67,000,000 behind on the 8.76 per cent it was supposed to get on its own $100,000,000 contribution.

5—At the identical time the traction octopus was cutting the wages of its already underpaid workers 10 per cent on the lying pretext that it was to "save the road," the officers raised their own salaries and paid thousands of dollars to the notorious dispenser of apologies for thieving corporations in the guise of "publicity."

Mr. Chadbourne shows his utter contempt for the investigation by leaving the country. He and his crew have everything fixed with the Tammany Hall corruptionists whom they support by lavish campaign funds. His support of the presidential aspirations of Governor Al Smith assures him immunity from the Tammany courts. After flatly refusing to answer certain uncomfortable questions put to him, he departed for Europe in the midst of the investigation, promising that he would return if notified to do so.

Not since the notorious Teapot Dome scandal has there been so glaring an example of the extreme solicitude the capitalist state shows for its wealthy supporters.

While Chadbourne, head of an organized band of highway robbers, goes to Europe in the midst of an investigation of his criminal practices, the wheels of capitalist class justice roll on against the less fortunate members of society. The same day he left a poor foreigner was sent to the workhouse charged with having dropped a plugged nickel in one of his subway slots. The next day a United Cigar store clerk was jailed for having failed to ring up 45 cents in the cash register, while in Massachusetts Sacco and Vanzetti still face the electric chair for having dared to speak openly against the system which so brazenly protects the wealthy crook.

All this helps to dispel the fiction that the rich and the poor alike are equal before the majesty of capitalist law.

Protecting Boston's Back Bay Youth.

Upton Sinclair's new novel, "Oil," first published serially in The DAILY WORKER, has offended the fastidious sensibilities of Boston, the stronghold of the nation's "culture." John Gritz, a young book clerk on Beacon Hill, has been arrested and brought to court on a test case for selling a copy of the banned book.

"We'd rather arrest Sinclair than anyone else," Supt. Michael H. Crowley, of the Boston police, said to newspapermen. "Unfortunately we cannot take action against him for having written the novel, but if he wants to sell a copy of it in Boston, we will immediately ask a warrant for him."

Sinclair had telegraphed to the "Boston city prosecutors," stating it was manifestly unfair to hold a book-seller's clerk for his novel, and offering to come to Boston immediately if he should be permitted to assume the responability in the case in question.

There is little doubt that the Boston police would be "delighted" to arrest Sinclair for daring to write a novel which attacks the sacred system of private profit in industry and government, and rakes up the smelly oil scandal of the Harding administration which has long since been white-washed and carefully hushed to sleep in "respectable" circles.

Of late Boston is attracting some of the odium attached to Tennessee and other backward communities because of its ridiculous suppression of books that are freely circulated in other cities. The pretext is that the banned books are a "menace" to the morals of the youth." Probably the guardians of purity and sweetness and light object to Sinclair's book because it depicts the younger set of the bourgeoisie precisely as they are. But they need not fear corrupting this spawn of the Back Bay aristocracy in Boston. There is nothing they can learn about "petting parties" and "cocktail soices."

As for the other sections of Sinclair's novel, there is no fear this element will use their brains sufficient to understand it anyway.

Another Section Inundated by Flood While Government Evades Issue.

The McCrea levees have broken and a hundred thousand more inhabitants of the South are homeless. Hoover has been in that region for more than a month and was fully aware of this new threat of floods. Said this miserable vulture, who preys upon war, famine, flood and pestilence, a week ago: "IF the McCrea levees stand, the end may be in sight."

But the levees are now gone and the end of the flood is not in sight. Every gesture of Hoover as the representative of Washington has emphasized the complete bankruptcy and criminal neglect of the administration. Coolidge, although urged by every section of political life, outside the ranks of his own clique, to call a special session to deal with the situation, ignores the pleas and prepares to spend the summer months in the Black Hills, where he hopes to repair his political fences battered to pieces by the farmers' revolt against the G. O. P.

Harris Dickson, writing for a prominent newspaper syndicate, declares the magnitude of destruction along the lower Mississippi is so appalling it dulls the senses. This condition could have been overcome if the government had seen fit to call a special session and appropriate funds for diverting the raging waters. Engineering experts claim that such diversion could have been achieved within thirty days with an expenditure of ten million dollars and the use of 75,000 men. The money and men seems enormous, but comparatively they mean very little, considering the fact that more than 600,000 people were rendered homeless aside from the hundred thousand now fleeing before the newest break.

A government that can spend billions and mobilize hundreds of thousands of men in a war to defend Morgan's European investments could easily conquer the floods. The reason it doesn't do so is because the Wall Street gang cannot see any profits in rescuing from disaster the unfortunate inhabitants of the Mississippi valley.

As for Coolidge, he doesn't dare call congress into session on this problem because the whole world would then discover that the United States government, representing the mightiest and most opulent imperialism on earth, deliberately murders (for its criminal neglect is plain murder) its own people because it doesn't pay Wall Street to save them.

The British Trade Union Bill and Its Place in the Framework of World Imperialism

With this law the bourgeoisie intends to ensure that trade unions or organizations for the protection of the class interests of workers, can be made illegal. It intends to prevent organizations for mutual support under penalty of the government stepping in, that is to say, to turn them into enemies of the working class. . . .

The chief mistake of the leaders of the trade unions is, in my opinion, their refusal to mobilize all the forces of the working class in a struggle against the conservative government for the protection of the elementary rights of the workers. All the rest is secondary. At this moment the bill is a class criterion. All those in favor of freedom of trade are in favor of the bill. All who are opposed to fascism are against the bill. The grouping of forces must now proceed along these lines.

What do we see in reality? The General Council has not rallied the forces of the working class around itself. Just as before, a campaign is being conducted against the Communists and the revolutionary minority. Everywhere for this end the capitalists form the trade unions. The trade union leaders refuse to liberate their people, they humiliate themselves and carry on the struggle against the left while all forces should be concentrated against the right against the offensive of capitalism. (M. Tomsky, head of the Trade Unions of the Soviet Union, May 8.)

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

ARTICLE II.

The penalty provided by the trade union bill that is now before parliament for a civil servant who dares to join any union other than one composed entirely of similar civil servants is instant discharge.

WRITING in "The Labor Monthly," W. J. Brown, general Secretary of the Civil Service Association, has the following to say about this section of the bill:

"If the bill goes thru, Service Associations will either have to become outlaw organizations or alter their constitutions to conform to the bill. If they choose the latter course (as the only alternative to sheer impotence) the results would be:

1. To destroy the postal and Civil Service Internationals.

2. To destroy the affiliation between Civil Service Organizations and the Federation of Professional workers.

3. To destroy the affiliation of 50,000 Civil Servants with the Labor Party and the Trade Union Congress.

4. To destroy the political funds of the Association.

5. To make it impossible for Civil Service Associations to promote their own parliamentary candidates.

6. To make it impossible for Civil Service Associations to support or oppose the candidates of other people—friendly or hostile to the service.

7. To put every Civil Servant and the Civil Service Association at the mercy of the "regulations" to be issued by the Treasury (and not to be submitted to the Houses of Commons).

In short the bill says to Civil Servants:

You have already no right to strike.

Hereafter you shall not influence the House of Commons, which is your employer.

You shall not associate with outside workers, even tho their conditions are cited against you whenever you try to improve your own.

You must place yourself completely in the hands of the government, which will do with you precisely as it pleases.

THE Civil Service, if it can be controlled properly, is a valuable, in fact an almost indispensable part, of the capitalist machine. Like the army and navy, the civil servants constitute a permanent section of the capitalist state and it is a striking commentary on the instability of British capitalism that the ruling class finds it necessary to attempt to enact such stringent measures for separating these workers from the rest of the working class and the labor movement. That it does not hesitate to make this attempt, at the price of a rousing widespread opposition, is testimony to the desperate situation in which it finds itself and to its fear of the power of the masses manifested in the general strike of last May.

TO further weaken both the unions and the authority of public officials which they elect, the bill has a special section making it illegal for municipal authorities to stipulate membership in a union as a qualification for employment on public works.

Workers on public enterprises are forbidden to quit their employment without the legal notification, either as individuals or as members of a union under penalty of a $50 fine or three months imprisonment.

In the United States we would call this legalization of the "open shop" and the abolition of the right to strike on any city, county, state or government enterprise.

THE final section of the bill holds out great inducements to stool-pigeons and all agents of the capitalists and the government who for one reason or another have joined a union. Any member of a union is allowed to apply for an injunction to prevent the spending of union funds in any manner to which he takes objection.

The attorney-general is also authorized to proceed against any union on this ground at any time even tho no member has made a complaint.

ALL in all the British Trade Union bill is a masterpiece of class legislation designed to make of the trade unions the "bread and butter" organizations they were in the period of British capitalist stability, to deprive them of all militancy and to make any effective political activity impossible.

One reason for this vicious attack on the labor movement is quite obvious—the loss by Britain of her monopolist position in the world markets, the centrifugal tendencies visible in the empire, the rise of the nationalist and worker and peasant movement in the colonial and semi-colonial countries, the penetration of American capital into British dominions like Canada and Australia—forced to make it impossible for the British rulingclass to maintain its former level of income without lowering the living standard of the masses.

IT seeks therefore to recoup its losses at the expense of the workers, while at the same time attempting to weaken their powers of resistance. Its attack on the political activities of the unions is to be explained by the fact that, due to its falling income, in turn due to the increasingly precarious nature of its colonial holdings, the rulingclass can no longer, as in the recent past, prevailed in the past, placate the British workers at the expense of colonial slaves.

Struggles for increased wages—even struggles or maintenance of existing standards—better working conditions, etc. tend more and more to develop into sharp political struggles. (The effort of the miners to preserve their conditions brought on the general strike.)

THESE facts alone, however, do not explain the sharpness of the present attack—an attack which cannot be separated from the offensive against the Soviet Union, an offensive which the rulingclass planned to develop into political justification for the Trade Union bill.

Further reason for the present attack can be sought for and found in the miserable cowardice and treachery of the official leadership of the Labor Party and the Trade Union Council.

WHEN the leadership of the Labor Party and the Trade Union Congress (with minor exceptions) calls off the general strike, surrendered to the government, announced their opposition to any but "constitutional" methods and deserted the miners, the Trade Union bill was conceived.

It has not been born at this writing, but all during the period of its pregnancy it has been nourished on the acts and utterances of the reformist leadership of the British labor movement.

COMRADE CHESICK DEAD

"In the loss of Comrade Chesick the Workers (Communist) Party has lost a valuable fighter. Although he was but 29 years of age, Comrade Chesick already had fine achievements to his credit. A member from the beginning of the Party, a founder of the Freiheit Gesangs Verein in this city, Secretary of Icor, long active in the Workmen's Circle and a forefront fighter in his union, the Boilermakers' Union, Comrade Chesick proved to the world that he belonged to that small group of pioneers who deserve to be honored by the entire proletariat.

"The Workers (Communist) Party calls on those sympathizers who knew and respected Comrade Chesick to make good his loss by joining the Party and making the Communist movement stronger and better than before."

Party Hands Off China Rally Spokes...

...Meeting will protest against ... Chinese Nationalist ... Council Square, 57th ... and 58th Ave., 8 p.m. ... Workers Party ... and auspices of the ... Workers (Communist) ...

...White sold by Samuel H. Wolfe, ... of the Workers Party, the ... meeting tonight will be a most ... festive way of fighting for the pro... of the Chinese Nationalist revolution and against imperialist in... vention of the British Tories and the Pe... ple's government at Hankow. Wolfe ... pointed out the divisions in the im... perialist ranks in relation to their ... policy towards China and why Amer... ica is now following the same path ... in that country as England.

"America is not in favor of a policy of complete intervention at the present time," asserted Wolfe, "but if the Chinese masses continue to go to the left and gain control of the entire country, endangering imperialism, then the United States will reverse its policy and come out in favor of complete intervention."

The steady advance of the armies of the Hankow government was mentioned by Wolfe. He told the assembled workers that Chiang Kai-shek was only pretending to fight against the northern warlords at the present time.

Wolfe emphasized the importance of the Peking and London raids as reflecting the policy of England to isolate the Soviet Union.

Other speaker included H. M. Wicks, editor of The DAILY WORKER; Charles Krumbein and Rebecca Grecht. Alexander Trachenberg presided.

Thousands Jobless In New England; Cal Talks "Prosperity"

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press).

BOSTON, June 6. — Republican prosperity must be pretty much of a joke to factory workers in Cal Coolidge's home state, to judge by the April employments report of the Massachusetts department of labor. The report shows a decline of 2.2% in employment compared with March and of 6.8% compared with April 1926. Massachusetts factories now afford jobs to 17% fewer workers than were employed on the average in the 5 years 1910-1914.

On the basis of census figures there were about 40,000 fewer jobs in Massachusetts factories this April than a year ago. The reduction in employment since 1923 has cost 110,000 factory workers their jobs. There are actually about 50,000 fewer workers on the payrolls than were employed in this state in 1914.

Thousands Jobless.

The sharpest drop in employment compared with a year ago occurred in the electrical equipment industry where it fell from 18½% above the 1919-21 average in April 1926 to 15% below the average this year. In this industry 28% of the workers employed a year ago are out of work today. Rubber footwear factories are employing 25.3% fewer workers than in April 1926 and textile machinery factories 14.4% fewer workers while the great cotton mills have laid off about a tenth of the workers on the payrolls a year ago. Other industries below last year are woolen goods, hosiery and knit goods, foundry and machine products, paper and printing and publishing.

The average weekly wage in Massachusetts factories in April was $24.75. This includes a $29.46 average for male workers and an average of $16.78 for women workers. In April 1926 the averages were $29.27 for men, $16.67 for women and $24.50 for all workers combined.

The report shows 82.7% of Massachusetts factory workers employed in plants operating on full-time schedules. This is an improvement over April 1925 when only 80.2% were employed in factories reporting full-time operation. Apparently unemployment has been substituted for extensive part-time, particularly in the textile industry.

Pittsburgh Coal Co. Rules Mining Towns Like Conquered Fort

(By Worker Correspondent).

PRICEDALE, Pa., June 5. — The Pittsburgh Coal Company, which had locked out its union workers in an effort to force open-shop conditions, is carrying on its fight against the workers in approved capitalist fashion. Pricedale and Arnold City are flooded with coal and iron police who parade around the town with large guns and blackjacks, trying to intimidate the strikers.

Cossack's Swarm.

The state police have barracks in North Belle Vernon, and are very much in evidence in the strike district on horseback and in cars. In the bank of the barracks they have a small two-room shack jail with barred windows.

There are spot-lights and street lamps everywhere. In Arnold City a huge revolving spot-light is kept moving all the time around the mine and on the hillsides.

Only scabs are allowed on the company's property. There are "trespass" notices everywhere, and if a striking worker is caught "trespassing" he must pay a fine of $10 and costs or go to jail. All strangers are stopped and questioned, and warned not to interfere. The sheriff has orders to put striking workers out of company-owned houses.

Pittsburgh Company Police.

The Pittsburgh Coal Company has two coal and iron police on duty at the picket-line. Only two pickets are allowed to stand together, and they must be at least 15 feet from the next two pickets. The company has an injunction against the union, and only "silent picketing" is allowed.

Please continue sending me The DAILY WORKER. I am a motal worker and work only two and three days a week. My next pay will be for 3 days out of two weeks. How can you make a living on that?

The convention is being held in the Kursaal, the famous gambling casino, and the delegates ftud this an excellent place for relaxation after the strain of official business during the sessions.

Overlooks Power Graft Back of Levee System

WASHINGTON, June 5.—Under the leadership of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the representatives of rich Eastern banking firms met today in Washington and heard Secretary of Commerce Hoover describe the rich opportunities for loan capital in the water soaked Mississippi Valley. About forty business men, including Chamber of Commerce President Louis E. Pierson (personally invited by President Coolidge) heard Hoover tell of the good security and the great needs of the flooded farmers. They subscribed at once $8,000,000 for the Hoover "credit corporations," and agreed to raise among themselves within a short time about $12,000,000 more. Hoover has already left for St. Louis with the news for the Southern bankers. None of this money will be given to the farmers. It will all be handled by Hoover's loan selectics.

Federal Employees May Join International at San Antonio Convention

WASHINGTON, June 5—(FP)—Discussion of possible affiliation of the National Federation of Federal employes with the International Federation of Civil Servants and Teachers will take place in this year's convention of the Federal Employes, meeting in San Antonio. Secretary McNally of the N. F. F. E. says that the executive committee will make no recommendation when it lays before the delegates the invitation of the International to join that organization.

Precedent for such affiliation is found in the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, who have been affiliated with the Postal International for the past four years. Twenty-seven countries' postal employes are represented in this organization, whose general secretary is J. W. Bowen, with headquarters in London.

Other American labor unions that have affiliated with the internationals of their respective trades are the United Mine Workers, Carpenters, Ladies' Garment Workers and several more.

At a meeting, in The Hague, April 25-27th, of the executive committee of the International Federation of Civil Servants and Teachers, as reported by the press service of the International of Trade Unions, further cooperation with the International of Professional Workers was authorized. Resolutions were adopted protesting against the British anti-trade union bill, and against the persecution of organized civil servants in Greece. The Greeks have applied for affiliation. The Swiss union of civil servants, not yet affiliated, will send a fraternal delegate to the congress of the international which will be held in Nuremberg in September.

Cleveland Patrioteers Make Public Library Hide 'The Communist'

CLEVELAND, June 5.—The good citizens of Cleveland have been seised with horrors since the Department of Justice discovered that there is a Communist Party in this country, that it is connected with the Communist International, and publishes a monthly called "The Communist."

One of these saviors of youth and the working class protested to the librarian of the Cleveland Public Library because the "Communist" was on the rack where anybody could read it. This is economical, and dangerous to the successful exploitation of the workers by the capitalists.

SECOND LECTURE OF CHINA COMING FRIDAY EVENING

Wicks Will Depict Conquest of Country

The second lecture on China in the course of four being delivered by H. M. Wicks at the Workers' School, 108 East 14th street, will be given this Friday evening at eight sharp, and continue every Friday night thereafter until completed.

The lecture was not held last Friday because of the China mass meeting held under the auspices of the Workers (Communist) Party at Central Opera House.

Imperialist Conquest.

The second lecture will deal with the opening up of China in the middle of the last century with special reference to the role of Great Britain in Asia, which was really the key to the problem until the world war. The encroachments against China by the imperialist powers constitutes the most flagrant international brigandage in history and Comrade Wicks has assembled the facts and will present them with a Marxist-Leninist interpretation, which assures all who attend a rare treat.

4,000 Carpenters Out In Providence, R. I.; Pawtucket Men Win

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 5.—The first break in the bosses' ranks came today when some master builders in Pawtucket granted carpenters' demands for increases to $1.10-1.25 an hour and 65-75 cents for building laborers.

More than 4,000 carpenters are still out with work on buildings projects estimated at $12,000,000 tied up dolisly. Master builders have voted to declare an open shop. The strikers are determined to carry on, confident of victory.

Railroad Labor Paper Urges Calif. Governor Pardon Anita Whitney

Labor, official organ of the standard railroad labor organizations, in an editorial in its current issue urges the governor of California to free Anita Whitney, whose conviction on a charge of having violated the criminal syndicalism law of the state was recently upheld by the United States supreme court.

Labor says in part:

"Miss Whitney has not only refrained from injuring other folk, but has devoted much of her life to helping them. She has been one of the few who have crusade against the vilest of American institutions, the average jail. By the irony of fate, her crusade has succeeded; a new prison for women is being built; but Miss Whitney, if she goes to the penitentiary, will be confined in the old, unsanitary, overcrowded disgrace to civilization in which California now houses her women convicts."

Lecture on China Tonight.

Jim Cork of the Workers School will lead a discussion on "China and the Impending World War," 8 p. m. this evening, at 63 Liberty Avenue, Brooklyn. All workers are welcome to be present and participate in the discussion.

CO-OPERATIVES

CO-OPERATIVE PROGRAM SHOWN LARGE AUDIENCES; CO-OPERATIVE VAUDEVILLE SHOW SUCCESSFUL

By ARNOLD J. BOSEN.

The co-operative Central Exchange (a co-operative wholesale located at Superior, Wis.) have had great success with their co-operative stage shows in cooperation with the co-operative stores. The success is demonstrated by the fact that their show is in great demand by the co-operative societies of northern Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan and by the full houses that they have had for every showing. The new City Hall at Maywood, Minn. with a seating and standing capacity of close to 1,000 was by far too small. It was estimated that at least 400 people were turned back at the door. When shown in the 6,000,000 Recreational Building of Hibbing, Minn., there were approximately 2,000 people present. According to reports, the hall at Chisholm, Minn. was packed more than ever before.

Teaches Cooperation.

The program consists of a play entitled, "A Gala Day in a Co-operative Store." It's a sketch of a co-operative grocery store in which questions concerning cooperative principles are explained. The cooperative movement as a class movement and its relation to the trade union movement and to other phases of the general labor movement is very capably and vividly explained in discussions with the clerks and customers and in songs specially written for the play. Embodied in the play are acts of all description, such as: Classical, oriental, acrobatic and step dancing; chorus dancing by girl employees in beautiful costumes, trombone, violin and piano solos; singing; readings; speeches and reports. Although many good acts were left out of the program as time Miss Allie Mae Torvenen, the talented young acrobatic and oriental dancer, who is at every showing applauded for an encore. The program in its entirety is very lively and interesting, and though "light" conveys an invaluable educational message that is easily grasped by the masses of people.

Rehearse In Warehouse.

It is well to mention that the program, which is compiled by the employees collectively—everyone contributing to the best of their ability, has been rehearsed and shown under a great handicap. The training of the girls for the chorus has not been done in an elaborate and well heated hall, but after a hard day's work, in the cold and crowded warehouse of the Co-operative Central Exchange.

One of the large trucks of the Co-operative Central Exchange, with nothing but plain hard wooden benches to sit on, has been used to haul the "gang" to the various places. (One doesn't have to have much of an imagination to know how it feels to ride over rough roads for several hours at a stretch with nothing but a wooden bench to sit on).

It has been a great sacrifice on the part of the youngsters, and though we know that they are well satisfied for having done their share for the cause of the co-operative movement, we take this opportunity to thank them for their efforts and the spirit they have shown.

RELIGION PITS WORKERS AGAINST EACH OTHER; BOSS CASHES IN ON SHORT-SIGHTED OUTLOOK

(By Worker Correspondent)

"Religion is the Opium of the People." Marx and Lenin have both pointed out this fact, and a recent experience I had at the Lefco Picture Frame Company, certainly illustrates it well. This company has an unorganized shop. Long hours and low wages are the rule. At every turn, foremen shout at the workers to "speed-up." Instead of rising up against these tactics of the bosses and demanding better pay, shorter hours and union conditions in the shop, these workers drug their minds with prejudice and superstition.

"You Dirty Jew."

Not long ago, a Jewish worker in this shop stopped his work for a moment, and taking a cheese sandwich from his pocket, commenced to eat it. Another worker, sitting near him, remarked: "You dirty Jew, you're always eating; better do your work; this is not lunch time, this is the boss' time."

The Jewish worker looked at him with surprise and replied: "The way you talk, you probably think that I am robbing the boss. How is it, then, that I ride on a street-car, while he rides around in a $4,000 automobile? He lives in a fine home, wears good clothes, and does not do a stitch of work, while I work with my sweat and blood to help supply him with luxuries? Am I robbing him, or is he robbing me?"

"God Helped Boss."

The other worker replied: "It is not your business what the boss has. He is lucky and God helped him, so he became wealthy. People like you, with your ideas, should never have been allowed in America."

The Jewish worker looked at him with pity and scorn. "Who taught you to talk that way to a fellow worker? What is the difference between you and me? We both work under the same employer; we are both alike exploited. If we can't exist any longer under their cruel condition and go out on strike, we get our heads split, or if not, we are put in jail and they let our wives and children starve. It does not matter to the boss whether we are Jews, Catholics, Mohammedans. The progressive worker is not interested in religion; what he wants to know and does know, is that there are two classes in society, the workers and the capitalist class. The boss takes everything he can get, and gives the worker only what the worker is willing to fight for. They are natural class enemies, and the workers, be they Jew, Catholic, black, white or yellow, are brothers in the class war."

At this juncture, the Catholic worker shook the Jewish worker's hand and begged him to excuse him. He said that he now saw things in a new light, and understood that he was wrong.

U. S. ENVOY WANTS WAR, STAYS IN PEKING

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

EVERY dog has his day according to an old saying and every celebrity has his hour of publicity. Chamberlin has taken the wind out of Lindbergh's sails and Germany, if she owes any money to Wall Street has a splendid opportunity to cash in on the wings across the sea business. This might be a good time for Germany to discuss the revision of the Dawes Plan with Chamberlin!

THIS is a great age. Flying across the ocean without stopping will soon be as prosaic as taking the subway to Brooklyn. And much less confusing. At least when one hits Europe he has a general idea of where he is at. There was a time when the hardy Wright who assayed such a feat would be burned at the stake for flying in the face of providence. The world does move, whether in circles or not.

ALL the poor relations of the famous flyers who want to see themselves in the papers should get busy before it is too late. Editors are scouring the country for pictures of Chamberlin's wife, mother, father, child or children. Mrs. Chamberlin is shown peering over a map of Europe, or an alleged map. Probably it is not a map and probably the person that is looking it over is not Mrs. Chamberlin. We are getting so skeptical about this publicity business that soon we will hardly believe what appears in this column.

ON the Bowery in the early hours of the morning, say six to eight. If you glance at an individual he will bum you for the price of a meal. And since there are hundreds of meal-less persons on this thorofare, only the wealthy can afford to gaze at the passing show. It is not a pleasant sight for a fellow with a conscience.

A POLICEMAN suddenly comes rushing along and begins pushing derelicte off the curb. The wrecks shuffle along until the momentum of the cop's push peters out. They stop, turn around and resume their old stands. The cop having done his duty, takes off his cap, wipes his perspiring brow and goes about his business.

LABOR agents, or employment sharks stand with steely eyes beside their signs. They are confident. Their hands are in their pockets and no doubt hefting on to rolls of bills. The hundreds that wobble up and down the street are penniless. They are waiting to be shipped somewhere. There are jobs in iron ore mines, in farms and in hotels. Perhaps those signs are blinds to attract customers to the joint.

A YOUNG Swede walks up to a shark and exhibits interest in the idea of taking a job. The shark is also interested. But the Swede is nobody's fool. He wants to learn the location of the job with a view to doing the shark out of his honest commission. The status quo was maintained with the Swede walking away jobless and the shark expressing his indignation against "wise guys" in general and against Swedes in particular.

THE G. O. P. is not going to let the democrats get any political gravy from the Lindbergh feat. A big reception was being planned in New York for the air hero and Tammany was busy taking down its tarred feathers. Then canny Cal stepped in and made it Washington. The G. O. P. has been rather wobbly out in the wide open places and Lindbergh is as good a political argument as could be designed to convert the man with the hoe.

THE Fascist Party of Italy has issued a typically flamboyant attack on the Soviet Union, which is about the highest compliment that could be paid to the Workers Republic. The blackshirt organization charges Russia with perpetuating dictatorship and with suppressing free speech. No comment on this would be quite so futile as trying to purify the atmosphere in the immediate vicinity of a cesspool by dropping a grain of eau de cologne into it.

THE Fascist statement indicates that Italy decided to line up openly with Great Britain in the present anti-Soviet drive. While Italy was one of the first countries to recognize the government of the Soviet Union, and socialists liked to address this fact as proof that both governments had a common bond between them, this recognition, as was the case with all other governments

JAIL 16 PICKETS IN POLICE DRIVE, FOUR BEATEN UP

Vicious Manhandling Left Wing Workers

Pouring into the market from all directions, more than 9,000 furriers staged a mass picketing demonstration yesterday morning that culminated in the arrest of 16 workers, four of whom were brutally beaten up by members of the industrial squad.

Many workers who did not join the strike when it was called last Friday walked out yesterday when they saw the fighting spirit of the strikers. Many of these men and women, who had come down town to go to work stayed to become a part of the demonstration.

Police Arrive.

At 7:30 a. m. the industrial squad appeared upon the scene and what up to that time had been peaceful picketing was turned into an attack upon the workers. If the detectives had not appeared the picketing would have continued in as peaceful a manner as it was started.

Abe Soefer, business agent under the Kaufman regime, at present a contractor, who beat up Ben Gold several years ago when the right wing was in control of the union, was responsible for the arrest of Nathan Mileaf. Soefer, now a boss, is one of the leaders of the right wing forces in the fur market.

Soefer Waves Gun.

Flourishing a revolver with five bullets, Soefer attempted to intimidate the pickets.

A member of the industrial squad grabbed Soefer as the latter pointed the gun at a group of workers and in the struggle which followed, the officer's nose was broken. When the gun had been captured, Mileaf, who had also made an attempt to snatch it from Soefer, was arrested. He was fined $5 for disorderly conduct, and Soefer, who is known to all fur workers as a gangster with a long police record, lodged a felonious assault charge against him.

A. Pericardis, S. Commodikas and P. Krofotis, also arrested by members of the industrial squad, were brutally beaten when taken to the station house. Pericardis was in such a serious condition he was later taken to Bellevue Hospital. Max Waliman was also taken to the hospital suffering from a fractured arm and contusions of the skull. Before being taken to the hospital, Pericardis was fined $5 in magistrate's court. Commodikas and Kromotis were fined $10 each.

M. Weitman was fined $5; Louis Yanowitz was released on $500 bail for trial June 8; A. Shruderman, Al Gendman, Lena Greenberg, Lena Halperin, Sam Lupzer were dismissed. A. Share, F. Atkin were fined $5. Joseph Weiss was fined $10 and released on $500 bail for trial June 8. Charles Lubel was also released on $500 bail for trial June 8.

Strike cards will be given to all unemployed workers at Manhattan Casuum beginning this morning. All unemployed workers are urged to get their cards. They must report daily and have their cards punched.

Start Drive to Aid Wounded in Chinese Liberation Struggle

A drive has been started to raise funds to aid Nationalist soldiers wounded in the struggle for the liberation of China. Mme. Sun Yat-sen, with the co-operation of many prominent foreigners, is directing the drive.

Readers of The DAILY WORKER who wish to express their sympathy for the Nationalist movement in a tangible form are urged to send contributions direct to Mme. Sun Yat-sen at Hankow, or to the American Committee for Justice to China, 70 Fifth avenue.

Industrial Squad Attacks Furriers

We Have Won a Partial Victory Make It Complete

The decision in the case of The DAILY WORKER is a tribute to the power of the agitation carried on by our supporters. At the opening of the trial every sign pointed to heavy sentences for the members of the staff. But the attack upon our paper aroused such a storm of protest and such an avalanche of support that the Professional Patriots and the capitalist courts realized that they had tackled a harder task than they had bargained for.

Comrades, we have done well. We have raised funds for the defense of our case. We have carried on a successful agitation campaign, which not only showed clearly the anti-labor character of the attack upon The DAILY WORKER, but also succeeded in gaining new publicity and support for our paper. But we have not finished our job.

WE MUST PAY THE FIVE HUNDRED DOLLAR FINE, (THE HEAVIEST POSSIBLE SENTENCE THE LAW COULD IMPOSE.) This money must be raised immediately. WE MUST APPEAL THE CONVICTIONS AGAINST THE DAILY WORKER. WILLIAM F. DUNNE IS NOW IN JAIL. HE MUST BE FREED. You must increase your efforts, comrades. You must carry forward the fight to complete victory.

I. R. T. INSISTS STRAP HANGERS MUST PAY MORE

Quackie Says Company Won't Pay Interest

Informing the taxpayers that the Interborough Rapid Transit Company had no intention of paying a single penny of interest on the millions invested in the Interborough subway system for many years, James L. Quackenbush, general counsel for the Interborough, yesterday announced before the Transit Commission that his company is going to go to the courts to force through an increased fare.

Despite the fact that it was proved in last week's sessions of the Transit Commission that the I. R. T. is earning many millions of dollars yearly, and paying more than 6 per cent in dividends to its stockholders, Quackenbush again raised the futile defieit argument, claiming that the city owed the I. R. T. over $71,000,000.

Quackie, notorious for the ruthless tactics he pursued in breaking subway strikes, defied the transit commission to begin recapture proceedings to recover the city property now being exploited by the I. R. T. Evidently secure in the knowledge that his company has enough money to secure a favorable court verdict, Quackenbush tacitly assured the commission that he was going to concentrate on the problem of the fare increase, and that the recapture threat would cause bim no concern.

"I Don't Know."

When asked why directors of the B.-M. T. had ordered the purchase of 20,000 shares of I. R. T. stock, Frederick C. Marston, secretary-treasurer of the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Company, another witness, replied "he didn't know." All attempts to probe further into the I. R. T. stock purchase met with failure when Marston continued to answer "I don't know" to every question. Finally, Untermyer, counsel for the commission, gave up in despair, intimating that he would have to resort to court action to gain any definite information concerning the stetns and activities of the transit trust.

Ocean Hoppers Due in German Capital Today

BERLIN, June 6.—While Chamberlin and Levine are planning to fly to this city tomorrow, from Cottbus, in the plane Columbia which carried them from New York to Germany without a stop, arrangements have been made, in case the Columbia is not repaired in time, to bring the flyers to Berlin in a Lufthansa passenger plane.

The Brooklyn chamber of commerce through Ralph D. Jonas, its president, yesterday presented a $15,000 check to Mrs. Wilda Chamberlin, wife of the trans-Atlantic Bellanca plane's pilot.

DAILY WORKER Editor Is Transferred to the Workhouse From Tombs

William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, was yesterday transferred from the Tombs prison to the New York workhouse where he will serve the remainder of the 30-day sentence imposed upon him last Friday in Special Sessions for the publication in The DAILY WORKER of the poem "America."

An attempt to secure his release pending appeal to the higher courts will be made tomorrow by his attorney, Joseph R. Brodsky.

David Gordon, 18-year old author of the poem which furnished professional patriotcers with the pretext to attack The DAILY WORKER, is now in the Tombs awaiting sentence next Friday.

Anarchist is Held Here at Request of Fascist Gang

Armando Borghi, well known in anarchist circles is being held for deportation to Italy because the fascist government of that country notified the American authorities that he is a dangerous man.

Recently the American immigration authorities were notified by the Italian government that Borghi had entered this country illegally and that he is an anarchist.

Representatives of the immigration department and Detective Repetto of the New York police department arrested him Friday evening as he started to speak at a Sacco and Vanzetti meeting at Columbia Hall, 210 Fourth Ave., Brooklyn.

Borghi is now on Ellis Island and as soon as $2,500 is raised he will be released on bail while his case is being fought. His return to Italy would undoubtedly result in immediate death.

Not long ago Borghi visited Sacco and Vanzetti in their New England prison.

Court Martial for Navy Navigators Who Stranded Colorado

Two goldbraids of Cal's na-vee went on trial yesterday for landing the $21,000,000 Colorado, giant battleship, on Diamond Reef during the recent fleet demonstration in New York harbor. They are Captain Frank Karns, commander and Lieutenant-Commander D. J. Friedall, navigating officer.

With all New York Bay to maneuver in, these navigators managed to locate Diamond Reef, between Governors Island and the Battery while proceeding into the East River. The ship hung on the ledges for 36 hours, in grave peril of breaking in two.

At first the officers were whitewashed, but the bureaucracy in Washington has given orders for court martial proceedings.

COPS BREAK UP PICKET LINE OF PLUMBERS AIDS

Five of 200 Arrested for Union Loyalty

Police broke up a picketing demonstration of the plumbers' helpers union at noon yesterday and arrested the five who were carrying banners explaining the demands of the workers. Over 200 strikers were in the line of march in front of the Tudor City apartments, 42nd Street and First Avenue, when two police officials broke the line and hit several of those who were in the front. When brought before Magistrate Corrigan in the 57th Street court the five workers were fined $5 each.

Assembling at lunch time, the picks immediately formed into a double column, the five banners being carried in the front. Patrolman Charles Martin who apparently had been tipped off about the picketing, stepped

Extreme Tories Run Britain; Begin Drive For Fascist Regime

LONDON, June 6.—The time has come to consider Premier Baldwin's successor, according to J. Maxse, editor of the "National Review," organ of the extreme right-wing of the Tories. An outspoken article of Maxse declares that "it may be, as is freely rumored, that more than one colleague shares the view that the hour is ripe for another experiment in leadership."

Maxse's article is part of the campaign for ascendancy carried on by the right-wingers in the cabinet, led by Churchill, Birkenhead, and Joynson Hicks. This group has won a series of victories for more conservative sections of British capital in putting over the break with Soviet Russia, the trades unions bill, and the dispatch of British battleships to Alexandria and Port Said to back up the sharp note to the Cairo government regarding the control of the Egyptian army.

The Churchill - Birkenhead - Hicks group is pulling the wires for a dissolution of Parliament in the fall and a general election which would enable them to reshuffle the cabinet and put through their fall reactionary program. They are seeking to take advantage of the present situation to call an early general election. This, among other things, would give them a chance to evade the present cabinet's promise to extend the vote to women between the ages of twenty-one and thirty.

Meantime, the die-hard wing is exerting all its powers to put the trades union bill, robbing the labor movement of its powers, on the statute books, to tighten the economic blockade around Soviet Russia, and to strangle the Chinese revolution.

British Open Three Houses of Prostitution for Use of Soldiers in Shanghai

Despite the illegality of prostitution in the International Settlement at Shanghai, three houses of ill fame have been opened near the race track, according to a cablegram received here from the Nationalist News Agency at Shanghai.

Chinese girls, many of them under 15, are confined in the houses under the guard of British military police. Only British and American soldiers are permitted to enter, civilians being barred except by courtesy. Chinese women's clubs and other organizations in the native city are protesting bitterly to the British and American military officials.

PLANES OF USSR AMONG BEST, ARMY IS WELL-EQUIPPED

Soviet Congress Hears About Defense Steps

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.
(Special to The Daily Worker.)

MOSCOW, U.S.S.R. (By Mail.)—"The construction of Soviet motors for airplanes has equalled not only airplane construction in capitalist Europe, but also in America."

As Clement Voroshiloff, People's Commissar for the Red Army and Navy, and chairman of the Revolutionary Military Council, made this statement, an ovation of applause broke simultaneously from all sections of the great gathering of 1500 delegates attending the Fourth All-Union Congress of Soviets of Workers, Peasants and Red Army Deputies assembled in the Bolshoy Theater here.

There is a Soviet movie showing conditions under czarism and at the present time, one of the scenes being laid here in the Great Academy (Bolshoy) Theater. In the picture the czar crouches in his royal box as the throng shows disapproval of his favorite ballet dancer. But tonight, in the same royal box, a score of foreign diplomats, from as many capitalist lands, sit silently surveying the scene, some of them accompanied by their women folks. Their home governments have sent their war fleets and armies against the Chinese revolution, and are plotting a new attack on the Soviet Union, creating a situation that is uppermost in the minds of the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union.

They cannot help but feel uncomfortable as this Soviet Parliament thunders its approval of every step taken toward the defense of the victories gained by the Bolshevik Revolution. The Japanese ambassador, more stoic than the rest, sits motionless almost for hours as the proceedings go on.

The news of the sessions of the Soviet Congress was prominently displayed in all the capitalist press as I came eastward across Europe.

Discuss Problems.

The question of the economic conditions of the country had been taken up and discussed. The industrialization of the Soviet Union and its agricultural problems had also been reported on. Tonight, Voroshiloff was in control across the Red Army and the Red Fleet. Unprecedented enthusiasm greete Voroshiloff, who has the place formerly held by Frunze before him, Trotsky. The presidium of 85 members, leaders in far-flung sections of Soviet Union, including a dozen women, lead in the applause. It is taken up by the closely packed tribune. It sweeps out over the orchestra pit, occupied tonight by journalists, the capitalist and Soviet writers being divided in two separate sections. It is taken up and grows to thunder proportions in the main body of the theater. Then it climbs tier on tier, until it reaches to the last row of the sixth gallery. What enthusiasm for the Red Army! What joy in the knowledge that a great host stands ready, under the Red Flag of the Revolution, to de-

BUTLER ADVISES WITHDRAWAL AS FENG DRIVES ON

Silk Mill Owners Won't Accept Mild Labor Code

PEKING, June 6.—Serious differences of opinion between General Smedley Butler, commanding the marines, and officials of the U. S. legation here are evident. General Butler has recommended the withdrawal of the legation from Peking and Minister MacMurray contends that such action is not necessary.

General Butler, a shrewd military observer, is certain that Peking will fall before the Nationalist drive in the near future and for the safety of legation members he has urged their withdrawal from the city.

Minister MacMurray, it is stated here, would welcome the murder of a number of American citizens in order to force the United States to join Britain in an open war against Nationalist China. Minister MacMurray has definitely aligned himself with British die-hard policy.

The Butler talks of the danger of a Nationalist bombardment of the capital city, all foreigners here realize the undisciplined troops of the Manchurian bandit leader Chang Tso-lin offer a far greater menace to American citizens than the shells of the Nationalists. Chang's troops have little compunction about murdering and looting. The retreat of the Shantungese from Nanking and their attack on foreigners is remembered here.

Two hundred U. S. marines have arrived at Tientsin, while the balance of the forces from Shanghai are remaining aboard the transport Henderson at Taku Bar.

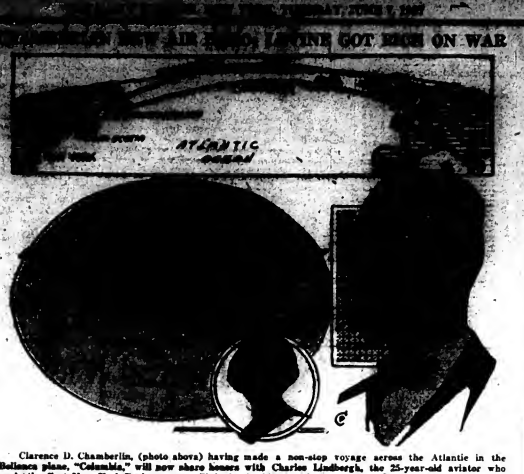
YUGOSLAV BREAK FORCED BY TORY ANTI-USSR DRIVE

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, June 6.—The prospect of a new Balkan war looms closer than ever with the severance of diplomatic relations with Albania. The Yugoslav Charge d' Affaires, it was learned today, and the Legation staff left the Albanian capital Saturday night.

The encroachment of Fascist Italy in the Balkans has created fuel for a flame which may break out at any moment. Operating thru Albania, which he has made a virtual dependency of Italy, Mussolini has taken every opportunity to provoke Yugoslavia into a war.

The immediate cause of the break is reported to be due to the failure of the pro-Fascist Albanian government to accept the Yugoslav demand for the release of an attache of the Legation at Tirana, recently arrested by the Albanian authorities.

Italy Prepares For War



That Italy is making every preparation for a Balkan war is indicated in dispatches describing the feverish manufacture of munitions in various industrial centers. Yugoslav papers charge Italy with smuggling thousands of officers and soldiers over the Albanian border.

The Yugoslav-Italian controversy reaches far beyond the Balkans. Great Britain has been using Italy and the Balkan states with the exception of Yugoslavia in her offensive against the Soviet Union, and Austen Chamberlain, British Foreign Minister, is, it is known, primarily responsible for the treaty of Tirana, which gave Italy protectorate over Albania. By permitting Italy to grab Albania, and Roumania to take Bessarabia (Soviet territory), Great into an anti-Soviet bloc.

Into an antiSoviet bloc.

BOSTON, June 6.—Governor Alvan T. Fuller quit the state house today and went to bed shortly after he conferred with Georg Brantieg, distinguished Swedish lawyer on the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

...E GOT RICH ON WAR

Clarence D. Chamberlin, (photo above) having made a non-stop voyage across the Atlantic in the Bellanca plane, "Columbia," will now share honors with Charles Lindbergh, the 25-year-old aviator who made the first New York-Paris non-stop flight in the history of the flying industry.

The distinction of being the first trans-Atlantic air passenger has fallen to Charles A. Levine, who accompanied Chamberlin. Levine, who holds a controlling interest in the company which backed the flight, made $1,500,000 when he cornered the copper market during the late war. He was formerly a dealer in junk. Consequently the capitalist press is having a difficult time weaving a romantic background.

The woman's picture is that of Mrs. Chamberlin.

Latin Americans in Appeal to American Workers to Protest

A great meeting of protest against the crushing of Nicaragua by the United States government and its subjugation beneath the powar of Wall Street will take place at New Harlem Casino, 116th St. and Lenox Ave., Wednesday, June 8, at 8 p. m.

Among the speakers will be Scott Nearing, Manuel Urrusla, a Guatemalan journalist, Horace G. Knowles, former American minister to Santo Domingo, Richard B. Moore, Secy. of the American Negro Labor Congress, J. R. Herradora, M. D., Nicaraguan writer, J. M. Bejarano, Mexican writer and journalist, Vicente Saenz, Costarican writer and statesman, Carl Weisberg, Secy. of the Social Problems Club of tha College of the City of New York, and representative of American and Latin American student organizations.

Latin American Federation

The meeting is under the auspices of the Confederacion Nacionalistas Latino-Americana, which issues the following call to the American workers to participate in its protest:

The crushing of the Nicaraguan Revolution is a warning to the American people and the people of Latin America. The Government of the U. S. has shown how it will back the tools of the American exploiters and concession hunters south of the Rio Grande.

In 1909 Adolfo Diaz with American dollars and ammunition (wo do not manufacture them), started a revolution. At this time he was a clerk of an American corporation, and the U. S. was officially informed by its consular representative at Blue Field two days before it actually took place.

Workers Concerned

The 4500 millions invested in Latin America have been produced by American workers.

The dollars which bribe our government are produced by American workers.

The ammunition used in revolutions manipulated by American investors have been manufactured by American workers. The marines are American workers.

We call upon the American workers who are also victimized by Imperialism to join us in this Protest.

Egyptian Nationalists Offer Compromise Over British Military Rule

CAIRO, June 6.—The fall of the Non-Nationalist Egyptian Cabinet, which depends for existence on the Nationalist majority in parliament, is a serious possibility if the present "crisis" in the relations between Egypt and Great Britain continues.

Since the assassination of the British Sirdar, who was commander-in-chief of the army in Egypt, Great Britain has failed to make another appointment. The Nationalist forces in Egypt are making a vigorous fight against investing another British official with hitherto fairly high military powers, but are willing to grant him the rank of field marshal.

Zaghlul Pasha, leader of the Nationalists in the Egyptian parliament is considered the logical premier, but insistence on his appointment would result in all probability in an armed conflict with Great Britain.

Brutal Exploitation.

The brutality with which foreign controlled silk mills exploit the Chinese workers was clearly illustrated by the bitter war waged by Shanghai mill-owners against the extremely mild set of labor regulations issued for the Shanghai district by Chiang Kai-shek. A copy of the labor regulations with a denunciation of them by foreign business men in Shanghai has been received by the Silk Association of America.

The regulations call for the recognition of unions, more sanitary factory conditions, a limit on the working day (although no limit is specified) and so forth. No protection against the exploitation of child labor is guaranteed by the regulations. The regulations issued by the Nationalist government at Hankow afford full protection for women and child labor.

Bid for Labor Support.

The regulations, such as they are, are interpreted by observers as a bid on the part of Chiang Kai-shek for the support of the labor movement, whose sympathies he has alienated by his brutal execution of labor leaders and by his open espousal of the cause of the native merchants and manufacturers.

Peking Fall Near.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Private advices received here from competent military observers show that the Chinese Nationalist armies are in a much stronger strategic position than press reports indicate and that if they do not meet with an unforeseen check they will make good their boast, of last winter and sweep into Peking some time in early July.

Peking, according to these dispatches, is menaced from three quarters, the most determined drive against the Chinese capital being directed by Feng Yu-hsiang, in the interior province of Honan. Feng's army, estimated at more than 60,000 men, is pushing northward from Honanfu and has gained control of the all important Lung Hai Railway, which gives it a line of communication and transportation leading straight to Peking.

400 Miles From City.

Feng is now less than 400 miles from Peking, while the Northern troops have withdrawn across the Yellow River.

The second advance is being made in the seaboard provinces of Kiangsu and Shantung, by the Chiang Kai-shek forces.

Holds Railway.

The third threat against Peking is the presence of 8,000 of General Feng's troops along the railway leading into Kaigan, which is about 70 miles northwest of Peking. This force, although 100 miles from Kaigan, appears to be in full control of the railroad.

Philadelphia Holds Work Among Women Conference, June 8

PHILADELPHIA, June 6.—On Wednesday, June 8, at 8 P. M. at Party headquarters, 521 York Ave., Philadelphia, will take place an important party conference for work among women. Representatives must be present from all party nuclei and also from trade union and language fractions. There will be a thorough discussion of the program for work among women adopted by the district, and assignment of work along the following lines: Work among women in trade unions, in outside organizations, in the party, among housewives and among women in the shops. To reach the unorganized women working in industry, of whom there are many thousands in Philadelphia, ways and means will be discussed of building up a Delegated Conference of Working Women.

In order that this party conference be successful, there must be a good attendance of elected functionaries, so that the party may proceed without delay to develop the great possibilities of work in a neglected but important field.

Illinois Labor Got Cold Shoulder, Pres. J. H. Walker Admits

CHICAGO, June 6 (FP).—Failure in the Illinois legislature of labor's notpartisan political policy was admitted before the Chicago Federation of Labor by Pres. John H. Walker, Illinois State Federation of Labor. Walker, who was the Farmer-Labor candidate for governor in 1920, did not advise abandonment of the nonpartisan policy of rewarding labor's friends and punishing its enemies in the old parties. Instead he urged greater energy in pursuing that policy.

Walker also deplored the political results of organized labor's attitude toward the Negro worker. He pointed out that if the labor lobby at Springfield had been able to line up the four Negro legislators the woman's 8-hour bill would have passed the house. But tha Negro quartet voted against it because, he said, of the refusal of many unions to admit Negro workers to equal membership with white workers. He cited the lathers as an example.

Negroes Not Wanted.

This brought the lather delegates to their feet with the familiar rejoinder that there was nothing in their constitution to prevent the admission of Negroes. Walker may have had in mind a situation possibly similar to that of the machinists who have no constitutional bar to Negro members but who pledge all new members never to propose any but white workers for membership.

David McVey of the lathers took up Walker on the other point and made a spirited attack on the official labor policy of supporting capitalist party friends in the hope of getting labor crumbs out of them after they are safely in office. McVey became a Farmer-Laborite about the same time as Walker but has retained his faith in a labor political party.

Miners Trade Defensive

The Furriers are out on strike to defend their homes! It is up to the workers of this city and the Union through the Joint Defense and Relief Committee to see that the strike shall be lost! Every penny is urgently needed. The more money is received the easier it will be to win the strike. Every class conscious worker and progressive should make it his business to help the Furriers.

The Joint Defense and Relief Committee has arranged a big concert for Saturday, July 16th, in the big Coney Island Stadium. The entire proceeds of this concert will go to help Furriers in their struggle.

The New York Symphony Orchestra of 100, the biggest Ballet in New York, many famous opera singers and dancers will participate in this concert. Tickets for the concert can already be gotten at the Joint Defense and Relief Committee, 41 Union Square; Furriers' Joint Board, 22 East 22nd St.; Cloakmakers' Joint Board, 130 East 25th St. and in the Freiheit office. The income for the tickets goes over to the strikers. Buy your tickets immediately and help raise a sustaining fund for the striking furriers.

Stelton Sends $25.

The Left Wing Group of Stelton brought in $25.00 to the office of the Joint Defense and Relief Committee. The money was brought in by Comrade Taback of Stelton, a member of the Left Wing Group.

The Left Wing of Stelton is not satisfied with this donation. It feels that something more has to be done for the Furriers and Cloakmakers. They therefore, called a conference last Sunday of all the surrounding cities to establish a large branch of the Joint Defense and Relief Committee. They also arranged a concert for next Sunday, June 12th, to be held at the Public School, for the relief of the Cloakmakers and Furriers. They promise a lot more money.

A Successful Furriers' Strike Means a Success for the Entire Labor Movement.

The Furriers are again out on strike. 50,000 dollars are needed immediately.

The united front of Schachtman-Zigman-McGrady and the bosses wanted to smash the Furriers' Union. This strike is the fight of the Fur Workers to the attacks on their Union.

The fight of the Furriers' Union is the fight of the entire Labor Movement. If their strike is lost, the Zigman-McGrady-Schachtman gang will center their attack on the Union.

If the Furriers win their fight and give a decisive blow to the traitorous clique it will be an achievement for the entire labor movement. The traitors will no longer dare to carry on the Union-smashing tactics as they have been doing until now.

The Furriers' strike must be won! The necessary amount—50,000 dollars—must be raised immediately!

The Furriers' Relief Committee has issued special loan certificates of $10, $15, and $25 each. Every worker must get a bond certificate. Every worker must help win this strike.

The loans on these bonds will be returned as soon as the first assessment of the Furriers' Union comes into the office and immediately after the Coney Island Stadium Concert.

Rush your loans to the Furriers' Relief Committee, 41 Union Square, Room 714.

Respond immediately! The 50,000 dollars must be raised in the shortest time.

Chicago Furnace Firm Declared Both Fair and Unfair by Labor Unions

CHICAGO, June 6, (FP).—Contradictory reports in the labor press concerning the fairness of the Holland Furnace Co. to organized labor bring forth the following explanation:

The Sheetmetal Workers Intl. Assn. has a national agreement with the Holland Furnace Co. and regards it as fair, according to Tom Redding, an international official of the union.

The International Molders Union, on the other hand, has a dispute on with the Holland Furnace Co. and regards it as unfair. This dispute was apparently settled about a year ago by an agreement but the company broke the agreement soon after it was made, at both its Michigan and Iowa plants, according to the Chicago local of the molders.

was for purely business purposes. The easiest form of entertainment, based on it is on the capitalist system, and the novel form based on the working class principle are so far apart as the poles.

It is not a bad idea to devote a few paragraphs to more or less trivial subjects by way of relaxation after a strenuous week discussing serious problems. And sometimes there is more propaganda value in nonsense artistically presented, than in ponderous opinions on current affairs. A truth has a hard time in this world. As a rule it does not wear gaudy plumage and does not get facetious with it with impunity. The truth loses its dignity when you get funny with it, provided some serious person does not kill you for the commission of sacrilege. Then truth is vindicated.

TRUTH is in many respects like a successful politician. Can you imagine a politician who aspires to election introduce one of his speeches with his own version of the Black Bottom. The audience would laugh and enjoy the terpsichorean effort much more than the speech—which in all probability would be listened to only by the very young and the very old—but they would not vote for him. The dignified politician might leave the platform and his himself to the nearest automatic piano but the voters would not know anything about that. They would consider him a man worthy of their suffrage, even while he secretly regaled his ears with tinpan music as a relief from the applause of those who liked what he had just stated for the thousandth time.

SOME people see nothing in the class struggle except a clash between people who are congenital politicians and artists, or between serious-minded people and those who always look at the burlesque side of life or between the ignorant and the educated. This flatfooted conception passes for cleverness in certain quarters where people continually tell each other jokes they read and quote a few French phrases from an abridged dictionary. Interesting people to look at occasionally but not to listen to. When you feel that politicians are terrible bores visit an artist hangout. You will return to your favorite politician and shed tears of repentance on his pillowy chest.

TRUTH is mightiest when it can be appreciated by a Kentucky hillbilly. Some people are condemned by a trick of nature to reach men's souls thru their bones. Nobody believes what they have to say and would not trust them with a position requiring patience under any circumstances. They don't take the proper attitude towards truth. And yet they raise hell with whatever system they are opposed to. They are usually opposed to whatever exists if they are near enough to it. Fortunate indeed is tha cause that fan enlist the humorist.

THE humorist makes the enemy laugh and while he is burning up his horse power in this fashion the vanguard of freedom deals him a knockout. The danger is that our own followers should take to reading humorous things, then the status quo would be established and we would be no better off than when we started. The ideal propaganda arrangement would be to offset a light and frivolous propagandist who makes his readers laugh with a heavy and profound writer who makes them weep. As a matter of fact we often have managed to run into such a happy arrangement, but the profound fellows can't stand the gaff. They run away for a good cry every once in a while.

PERHAPS I have a single-track mind and cannot see both sides of a question with equal felicity but in my opinion there are two ways of telling the same story. One method springs from the conviction that nobody can avoid believing what you have to say because you know it is the truth. The other method is inspired by a sickly Athenian, a conviction that nobody will believe what you have to say for the good reason that it is the truth and the truth is usually distasteful when you hear it for the first time. The fellow, prepared with conviction, will speak like a worker of a hothouse on smooth brow and make no sweat. Athenian, going to him, weak men will go home to their wives spiritually emasculated with the notion of not having engaged in a worthy cause if they are not called aside. In that they may buy a book from the speaker or pamphlets for distribution. So much for our capitalist system.

Lewis Gang Branded Election Thieves.

John Brophy, candidate for president of the United Mine Workers' Union of America, on the "Save the Union" ticket, has issued a circular (published last week in The DAILY WORKER) in which he proves that the contemptible traitor and agent of the mine owners, John L. Lewis, was really defeated in the last election.

It would be tedious to repeat the crimes of Lewis against the members of the miners' union. His administration has marked the disheartening decline of the organization. From being a dominant power in the industry and the most militant and effective labor union in the United States, it has sunk into impotency under the series of monstrous betrayals perpetrated by John L. Lewis and his machine which openly and brazenly sells out the miners in every struggle. He has never even pretended to fight except to convince the bosses that they cannot get along without him, that they must recognize him as a labor lieutenant of capitalism.

Today he maintains office against the expressed will of the majority of the membership and continues his foul treachery by refusing to call a general strike in the industry and putting up a real fight for the unorganized miners, thereby bringing them into the organization.

The scoundrels at the head of the United Mine Workers' organization probably have more than one reason to fear the organization falling into the hands of the representatives of the majority of the membership. They have perpetrated such gross and self-evident frauds in their vote-stealing campaign that they have proved themselves past-masters in the art of thievery. It is quite probable that they have practiced the same thievery in other lines, particularly in juggling finances.

A wholesale demand for a recount of the votes should be demanded by the miners. If the crooks of the Lewis machine have destroyed evidence of their own guilt, new elections should be held under control of an impartial board composed of trade unionists affiliated with other organizations who could be depended upon to give an honest count. Such a proposition would meet with the opposition of Lewis' pal, Bill Green, former secretary of the miners, who now heads the A. F. of L. Green would declare such procedure a violation of the jurisdiction of the miners' union.

The rotten condition in the U. M. W. of A. emphasizes the need for a thorough house cleaning in the American labor movement. Many other unions suffer from the same blight as Lewis has imposed upon the miners, and only an aroused and determined rank and file, always on the alert can prevent the reactionaries wrecking the unions they head before they surrender control of them.

Renegades, Scoundrels and Liars to Publish Magazine.

Chester M. Wright, former editor of the socialist daily, the New York Call, who proved himself a coward and renegade when Woodrow Wilson hurled the United States into the world war on behalf of Wall Street's investments on the side of the allies, and William English Walling, another apostate and social-patriot who graduated from the socialist party into the ranks of the jingoes, are still trying to gouge funds from the workers they so shamelessly betrayed. Their latest adventure is to incorporate at $25,000 a publishing concern the purpose of which is to publish a magazine called "Washington."

This is a worthy pair of confidence men. All their lives they have been fakers. Even in the socialist party they vitiated with their stupidity everything they touched. Wright was consistently a defender in the socialist party of the opportunism of the Hillquit crowd, while Walling endeavored to become the theoretician of a new revisionist school by writing a series of books that perverted Marxism in the most shameless fashion. Only the backwardness and theoretical poverty of the socialist party prevented them being kicked out before the first blasts of the trumpets of war scared them into the ranks of the patriots, whence they found lucrative employment as journalistic scavengers for Compersism.

Their preliminary announcement, under the heading of "Democracy in Industry" proclaims that deceptive slogan, a veil for class collaboration, to be the keynote of their "labor" work.

> "We shall deal largely with labor affairs, largely and keenly, standing by the American labor movement, but not leaning upon it. The democratization of industry—and with it the even larger development of economic democracy—steadily, in an evolutionary manner, is the sole preventive of a political overlordship that can mean only tyranny and ultimate revolt and destruction.
> "Labor finance will be one of the big fields of exploration and explanation.
> "We shall deal with Communism and fascism, twin autocratic evils, twin foes of freedom and democracy. We shall fight them bitterly, with the sort of earnestness that must be called forth when freedom and cherished institutions are endangered."

Communists will not be disturbed by the malevoient assauits of Wright and Walling. To be reviled by such creatures is to be honored. We enjoy the enmity of their kind and carefully cultivate it.

As to their shadow boxing against fascism they pretend, like the Greens, Wolls, Sigmans, Lewises and Cahans, to be opposed to fascism in Italy, but use it against the working class of the United States. The democratization of industry as interpreted by them means the abandonment of the class struggle and the complete subserviency of labor to capital. It means labor banking, labor insurance. It is that type of scoundrelism that solemnly tells workers that the way to obtain higher wages is to produce more for the capitalists, in spite of the fact that even the veriest amateur in economics knows that the larger the army of the unemployed, the more difficult is the task of the unions. Such a policy, supplemented by active opposition to a militant struggle on the part of the unions, is bound to result in a fall in the rate of wages and a lowering of the worker's standard of living.

According to its announcement the new magazine will be utilized by its sponsors as an apology for more intensive exploitation of labor, and will be a valuable addition to the array of capitalist propaganda disguised as labor publications. It will probably be used as a textbook in some of the fraudulent labor colleges where the philosophy of increased production is taught as the

WHAT could bring greater joy and expectancy of success to the tory government than the campaign of expulsion organized by the Conservative Labor leadership against Communism and the left wing—the National Minority Movement?:

What better guarantee could the tories ask than the expulsion of Trades Councils and Labor Party branches which continued to accept the affiliation of Communists and left wingers in spite of the ukase issued by officialdom?

More than this the tories had tested out the ability and willingness of the reformist leaders to fight on broad issues (the forged "Zinoviev" letter) and found that instead of enemies, they were actually allies of the government, insofar as the "Moscow menace" was concerned.

SOME of Ramsay MacDonald's utterances relative to the general strike show that when R. Palme Dutt, editor of "The Labor Monthly" states in the May issue that "the Workers' Trade Union bill represents, as to 75 per cent. the policy preached by the reformist leaders," he is understating rather than overstating the case.

Dutt also quotes Frank Hodges of "Black Friday" fame, speaking at a luncheon given by the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, on "Industrial Relations—Can They Be Improved?" Hodges said:

> "Employers, on the one hand, who do not understand the legitimate principles of trade unionism, and the followers of the Bolshevist philosophy on the other, can destroy such measure of prosperity as exists, unless there is strong rigorous joint action on our part to destroy them." (Emphasis Mine.)

SUCH a speech, delivered by a labor leader on April 5, just as the rulinglass was preparing its attack, can be called nothing less than promising the enemy to undermine the morale of the labor movement by continuing to attack a section of it in the presence of the foe. Hodges, like the tories, is in favor of "legitimate" unionism—as interpreted by the courts.

BEFORE the general strike, when the Communists and the national minority movement were calling upon the General Council to prepare the working class for resistance to the attack on the miners and state what is now known to be the cold fact that the onslaught on the miners was but the beginning of an offensive against the whole working class, Ramsay MacDonald declared:

> "There is at present much discussion about forming an alliance between the miners, railwaymen and metal workers. No greater calamity could befall the country than the formation of a trade union bloc on the one side and a capitalist bloc on the other for the purpose of engaging in a suicidal struggle. In my opinion the miners should unite to demand their rights and TO FULFILL THEIR DUTIES TOWARDS SOCIETY AND APPEAL TO THE MORALS AND REASON OF PUBLIC OPINION. We are all for peace, but this peace must not be purchased at the price of starving out the miners. That is the whole point. WE DO NOT WANT THE FIGHT. You know quite well how serious the situation is now. The economic situation is not good. The representatives of capital and labor should negotiate in order to avoid the strike."

MACDONALD was for "peace" and in order to ensure peace he opposed the strengthening of working-class organizations. He had time to point ont to the miners "their duties towards society" but not to warn the labor movement that it must organize and fight or accept defeat—the defeat he later helped to bring about.

There is no more shameful spectacle in labor history for one bearing greater significance for workers who need to estimate accurately the role of MacDonald and his kind) than this undercover agent of British imperialism rising in the House of Commons on May 5, 1926, when the strike was at its height, and saying:

> "I again ask this house if it cannot do it (i. e., resume negotiations). I am not speaking for the Trades Union Congress at all. I am speaking for nobody. I have not consulted my colleagues. I am speaking from my own heart. I am not a member of a trade union, and am therefore a little freer than my colleagues, and can do things for which perhaps I will get blamed tomorrow by the trade unionists, but I cannot let this opportunity go."

THE inference here is clear. MacDonald was telling the British ruling class in so many words, first, that he as the parliamentary leader was against the strike and second that the trade union leaders were also against the strike but were being forced to acquiesce by the masses.

In my pamphlet, "The British Strike," written while the strike was in progress, I said of the above utterance:

> "MacDonald may have been speaking 'from my own heart' but in plain that it is a heart filled with black treachery toward the trade union movement and the working class."

No better characterization of his words and deeds occur to me now.

AS for J. H. Thomas, parliamentary secretary of the Railwaymen's Union, who took a leading part in betraying the strike after having sabotaged all preparations for it as well as he could, he had no scruples which prevented him from trying to destroy the morale of the strikers by parroting ruling class phrases relative to "right", "justice", "constitutionalism", etc.

Thomas's Hammersmith speech is a fine sample of the kind of strike-breaking indulged in by the official leadership and upon which the present tory government bases its belief that it will encounter no serious opposition from them.

Thomas said:

> "If the people who talk about a fight to the finish carried it out in that sense the country would not be worth having at the end of it. I HAVE NEVER DISGUISED AND I DO NOT DISGUISE NOW THAT I HAVE NEVER BEEN IN FAVOR OF THE PRINCIPAL OF THE GENERAL STRIKE. . . . THE WORKERS HAVE NO RIGHT TO SAY TO THE EMPLOYERS: "YOU MUST NEGOTIATE UNDER THREAT OF A STRIKE," but it is equally RIGHT AND JUST that the workers should not be asked to carry on negotiations under threat of a lockout.
> "FROM THE START I DELIBERATELY WENT IN TO GET PEACE. I repeat that it is the duty of both sides to keep the door open."

BUT Thomas had declared himself still more clearly during the period of negotiation and had given the ruling class the cue that it is following today:

> "I am frequently asked why the organized working class must not make a mass attack on the capitalist class. My answer to this is that such an attack would not only be directed against the capitalist class, BUT AGAINST THE WHOLE OF SOCIETY. In the event of such an attack being successful it must logically lead TO THE ASSUMPTION OF THE GOVERNMENT BY THE MASSES. BUT I DO NOT THINK THE MASS OF WORKERS WANT TO GET POWER BY SUCH BACK-STAIR METHODS. If the masses are not intelligent enough to get power thru the ballot box, they are still less capable to achieve this aim by violent means."

NOTHING could be plainer. Thomas, like MacDonald, has no confidence in the working class and their success if organized and conscious that they must fight the government—the concentrated force of the ruling class—if they are to win even "purely industrial" demands in a period of declining capitalism.

A book could be filled with similar quotations from all of the more influential leaders (with some few exceptions like A. J. Cook, the fighting secretary of the miners' union) which show conclusively that not only fear of the mass power of the labor movement but a belief in the willingness of the official leadership to make terms with the government which would leave their parliamentary privileges untouched while strangling centralized, disciplined and conscious mass action in both "industrial" and political struggles, prompted the British ruling class to initiate the new offensive against the labor movement.

IT is impossible of course to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear but the fact stands out as clearly as MacDonald's mustache that the betrayal of the general strike and of the struggle of the miners, opened the way for the present drive.

It is equally clear that the refusal of the financial relief sent by the Russian unions to the British working class during the general strike (later accepted by the miners) and the failure to carry out the campaign for world trade union unity agreed to with the Russian labor movement, the sabotage of the work of Anglo-Russian Trade Union Unity Committee by the official leadership of the General Council, paved the way to the raid on the Soviet Union Trade Mission and the repetition of the "red menace" maneuver.

WHILE it may be said that the tories do not show much originality in the present two-sided campaign against the Soviet Union and the British working class, it can be said as well that they know the hearts and minds of the official leaders the tories know that they are, like themselves, stripped of their "labor" camouflage, imperialists to the cor

Bourgeois Advice to The Daily Worker

One of our readers complains about our appeals to our readers for aid during the present financial crisis of our paper. While he does not object to our raising funds to weather the storm he considers it very poor business sense to advertise to the world the threat to the existence of The DAILY WORKER. He asserts that no capitalist business concern could possibly survive that issued statements about the danger of bankruptcy and at the same time tried to obtain business. The observation regarding capitalist institutions is perfectly correct, but it does not apply to a Communist publication.

The very essence of bourgeois success is based upon deception and bluff. Organized advertising is merely systematic misrepresentation. A concern in danger of going out of business must strive to keep up appearances of prosperity. That is not the case, however, with a revolutionary publication. We do not exist by the practice of deception. Our propaganda is not based upon lies as is the propaganda of capitalism, but upon a working class interpretation of facts. While it is considered disgraceful for a capitalist concern to admit financial difficulties, such experiences are to be expected by a Communist publication. It is no disgrace to be forced to appeal to our readers, the advanced section of the working class for aid. In fact it would be criminal on our part and proof of our recreancy to the labor movement not to explain our problems and dangers to our supporters. Should we cease publication without having given them a chance to keep alive their paper we would deserve nothing but contempt as betrayers of the trust they have placed in us.

This talk of concealing the facts about our financial condition arises because bourgeois ideas of business pervade the minds of some of our readers.

solution for labor's ills. To revolutionists and members of the working class who have advanced beyond the stage of class collaboration illusions the magazine will only serve as a plummet with which to measure the depths to which certain betrayers of labor are able to sink in their service to their capitalist masters.

Screen Notes

John Gilbert plays the chief role in "Twelve Miles Out," adapted from William Anthony McGuire's stage success of last season. The story centers on the rum-runners and much of its action is laid at sea. Joan Crawford, Ernest Torrence, Betty Compson, Eileen Percy, and Bert Roach are also in the cast.

Asks Withdrawal of Treachery Charge

MOSCOW, June 6.—The Central Executive Committee of the U.S.S.R. today issued a statement declaring that the charges of treachery against the Communist Party of Germany were "absolutely false" and that the expulsion of the German Communists and their leaders from the Communist International was the result of the opposition to the policies of the world Communist movement.

The Executive Committee points with indignation to the murder of Trotsky and Wurm in the Soviet Union and of the Communists in Germany and as well as the fact that the opposition is ever more openly breaking with Communism, inevitably falling into the anarchist camp. The opposition gives a liquidatory estimate of the situation, and by the bad faith of their criticism disintegrates the party ranks.

Strike Against Disrupters.

The plenary session of the Moscow committee calls for a mobilization of public opinion of the broad proletarian masses to support the decisions of the executive of the comintern against the opposition. By its actions the opposition has grossly violated its promise of October 16th, and the Moscow committee insists, with the Central Committee of the party, that Zinoviev and Trotsky be excluded from the executive of the Central Committee. The plenary session of the Leningrad committee, jointly with the All-City meeting of active members of the Leningrad Party organization, passed a resolution declaring it will nip in the bud all attempts to kindle a new discussion with the All-Union Communist Party in the present conditions of a growing threat of war, and the immense difficulties facing the world Communist movement.

Industrial Squadders Beat Up Four Furriers

tivities of the Industrial Squad," declared Isadore Shapiro, chairman of the strikers' Law Committee.

"While there were thousands of workers in the fur market, the uniformed police were handling the situation without difficulty, and picketing was proceeding in a peaceful fashion until members of the industrial squad appeared.

"They were in plain clothes, and without showing their badges they began shoving the workers and ordering them away from the shops. They attacked several workers and beat two of them so badly that they are now in the hospital. Two others were brutally beaten by members of the squad in the police station, after they had been arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct.

No Officers Attacked.

"It is absolutely untrue that our workers attacked any police officer, or that they carried any sort of weapons. There was a gun being flourished by a manufacturer, and it was in a struggle for possession of this that one member of the industrial squad was hurt. This manufacturer, well known to the workers as a strong arm member of the former right wing regime in the union, was dismissed by the court when the officer made no charge but disorderly conduct against him. Eight of our workers were fined; five others were held under bail.

"We feel confident that if the industrial squad had not appeared on the scene this morning, there would have been no trouble—except at those shops where men with blackjacks were employed by the manufacturers to stand outside the building and attack pickets. It was in defending themselves at several such shops that our workers—but not the men with weapons—were arrested. We intend to do all we possibly can to expose this introduction of hired thugs by the manufacturers."

Supreme Court Hears New York Klan Appeal

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Arguments of the constitutionality of a New York State Law requiring the Ku Klux Klan and other organizations to file lists of members with state authorities, will be heard by the United States Supreme Court on October 8, it was announced today.

The case is on appeal of George Bryant, of Buffalo, N. Y., alleged member of the Klan for a decision of the New York Court of Appeals sustaining the law, known as the Walker Act.

Bryant claims that the act is unconstitutional.

Rubber Workers of Akron, Toiling for Little Pay, Rebel

AKRON, Ohio, June 6.—Speeding up of the workers in the local rubber shops is reaching unbelievable heights as the peak of the greatest season the industry has ever known is approaching.

Although the rubber workers are unorganized the increase in speed-up is exciting forth a determined resistance which usually takes the form of spontaneous department strikes on the job. The mill room workers at Goodyear are the latest group to rebel at an attempt to increase production at their expense.

Conditions in the Goodyear lamp-black mill room are typical of the industry. Ten minutes after a man starts work he is coal black. The air is filled with dust and as proper ventilation is non-existent, the stuff gets in the worker's eyes, his nose, mouth and lungs. The men are allowed no time off for lunch. They must work straight thru the 8 hours without leaving the mills.

Work at Top Speed.

The men work at top speed. Production is 60 per cent more a man than in 1923. That year each man ran 19, 80-pound batches of stock thru his mill per day. For this he received $6.56.

By 1927 the men were running 24 batches of 94 pounds each for the same money.

A few days ago the management announced that the efficiency department had decided the men were able to produce still more and that 6 pounds would be added to each batch, making a total of 2,400 pounds per man a day.

This was the last straw to the mill men, already driven beyond endurance, and they struck. The whole gang left the job and went to the locker room for a meeting. Word reached them that the factory manager wanted to speak to them, and after some debate he was admitted to the meeting and finally persuaded the men to go back to work, with the promise of a raise. The raise was not forthcoming the next day and the men quit the job again for three hours. This time Slusser, the manager, came down and told the men they had been granted a raise of 50 cents a day, but that the extra six pounds a batch was there to stay. The men realized that a strike of one department alone would be licked before it started, so they accepted the miserably small raise and sullenly returned to work.

Pittsburgh Coal and Terminal Firm Figure in Rumor of Mergers

Rumors on Wall Street, backed by advances in stock, indicated that the notoriously non-union Pittsburgh Coal Co. may consolidate with the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Co. into the biggest bituminous producer in the country. A further merger linking the new company with the Pitsburgh & West Virginia Coal Co. was also discussed. Pittsburgh Coal soared eight points.

Plumbers Helpers to Picnic in Bronx July 10

A picnic for the benefit of the striking plumbers' helpers will be held Sunday, July 10th at Pleasant Bay Park, Unionport, the Bronx.

Several organizations have promised to cooperate with the American Association of Plumbers' Helpers in making the affair a success. They are the Amalgamated Food Workers' Union, Chinese Workers' Association, the Armenian workers' organization, and several sports labor organizations.

up to the workers and told them "to get out of here."

In a chorus they answered that they were "going to picket peacefully." This answer did not please Martin who hit Murray Singer, a picket, a hard blow on the left ear. He then followed that by hitting several other workers. The line retreated several feet and reformed their ranks, being joined by several dozen more workers who had just reached the scene.

Boss Runs for Help.

Joseph W. Pollack, in charge of the contracting, ran up to Sergeant Coogan and complained that the pickets were walking on private property. Coogan then stepped forward and with the help of Patrolman Martin placed five of the workers under arrest.

As soon as the police left with the five prisoners, the pickets again formed in line and marched before the building, for half an hour without any interference. As soon as they left, two other policemen appeared, but too late to arrest any workers.

When brought to the 51st Street Station House, Lieut. Rigney, at the desk, refused to allow any reporters present when the names of the five prisoners were being entered in the blotter. He curtly told the representative of The DAILY WORKER as well as the capitalist press to "wait on the street."

Helpers Arrested.

The workers who were arrested arrested were Peter Groskaw, Lawrence Cohen, Solomon Green, James Pascale and Samuel Rothberg.

"Picketing will be continued," said C. E. Miller, president of the American Association of Plumbers' Helpers. "We do not intend to allow the arrests to interfere with our work."

The striking helpers held a large meeting last night at the Church of All Nations, 9 Second Avenue, where the workers pledged to continue the struggle until they win.

Chile Dictators Seek Loan From Wall St.

Quickly following the establishment of a fascist dictatorship in Chile, announcement was made yesterday that the National City Bank has sent two officials to the South American country to negotiate a loan. One of the first acts of the dictatorship was to name the National City Bank as financial agent, with hopes of fat subsidies from Wall St.

Colombia, another South American country, is negotiating with New York bankers for a $40,000,000 loan, most of which will be applied to railroads, according to explanations. Osaka, Japan is seeking $50,000,000.

Fascist Europe Applauds Peace That Means War

'World Locarno' Allows Attack on China

BERLIN, June 6.—The model "peace" pact, suggested by Dr. James Shotwell, Columbia, professor and Director of the Economic and Historical Section of the Carnegie Foundation, has the support of League of Nations and World Court advocates in various countries, according to a symposium published by the Acht Uhr Abendblatt.

The paper asked the opinions of various politicians, professors, lecturers and militarists about the treaty to "abolish war," and received replies enthusiastically approving it.

Among those whose answers were published by the Acht Uhr Abendblatt are Primo de Rivera, fascist dictator of Spain; Bernhard von Deinsting, retired German general; Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University; Gilbert Murray, leader of the British League of Nations Societies; Professor Victor Ballard, of Paris, president of the World Congress of the League of Nations Societies; Victor Basch, Leading French liberal and pacifist; Ferdinand Buisson, member of the French Chamber of Deputies and Count Coudenhove-Kalergi, the Austrian founder of the pan-Europe movement.

The tenor of the replies is that Dr. Shotwell's proposed treaty is a step toward a "world Locarno."

The industrialist capitalist organ, Vossische Zeitung, has published the proposed treaty in full with an introduction by Dr. Shotwell in which he says that the idea of drafting the treaty came to him after a talk with Foreign Minister Briand of France.

2,000 Dressmakers Picket Four Shops; Zimmerman Freed

More than 2,000 dressmakers and cloakmakers held a successful picketing demonstration yesterday morning, centering their activities on 30th Street between 7th and 8th Avenue, where four shops having strikes are located.

The "right wing guard" that Figman promised to give to the bosses turned out to be an utter failure. About 20 right wingers including the office force from the International headquarters on 16th Street, marched to the dress market led by Mollie Friedman, a vice-president of the International.

No Workers.

Very few actual workers were in the line. In addition to the stenographers, bookkeepers and clerks, most of the others were former business agents who were ousted when the left wing gained control of the union.

The police and the right wingers beat up Charles S. Zimmerman, manager of the Dress Department of the Joint Board and Monia Pearlman, active member of Local 9. Zimmerman was then arrested but discharged when brought before Magistrate McQuade in Magistrates Court.

Coal, Iron Police Aided by Sheriff in Fighting Strike

PITTSBURGH, June 6.—Coal and iron police are precipitating a reign of terror in the "big smoke and soot" area around Pittsburgh affected by the coal strike. With hundreds of strikers and their families being evicted from their shabby clapboard homes by deputy sheriffs on the orders of the coal bosses, with non-union companies arming their workers and doubling their guards, the whole region is taking on the appearance of bitter warfare.

Not far behind the privately paid and armed coal and iron police is Sheriff Braun of Allegheny County who has armed his deputies with high-powered rifles and given orders to shoot to kill strikers. Coal and iron police admit having fired repeatedly at strikers, who in several instances have sought to defend themselves.

Union officials have advised Sheriff Braun to watch the coal and iron police, rather than the strikers, as the main cause of violence in the Pittsburgh district.

The Fight Now in the Garment Trade

By MARGARET LARKIN

This is the beginning of a series of Miss Larkin's stories on the struggle in the New York needle trades against reactionary leadership.

[illegible] which the Joint Board and Union were supposedly organized for.

Officers Ignore Membership.

In the course of the "reorganization," the International officers have violated every principle of democracy within the Union. Not only have the members been deprived of any voice in the selection of their officers, or the determination of the Union policy, but compulsory "registration" has been set up. Workers who refused to register, (in spite of the moratorium declared on back dues, assessments, and fines) were threatened with the loss of their jobs, and in many instances were compelled by force to register in the "reorganized" Union. When the Joint Board attempted to defend the interests of workers discharged because of their refusal to register, the International resorted to the use of the injunction.

The membership has again, and again demanded that the issues be submitted to referendum vote, where the question of proportional representation could be decided, choice of leaders and policies be indicated, and the dispute be settled in a democratic way by the vote of the workers. Various appeals of Socialist leaders have advocated the holding of elections or a referendum under impartial auspices.

To all such proposals the leaders of the left wing have agreed. Leaders of the right wing, however, have refused to assent to such referendum as a means of deciding the controversy. They have refused even to discuss the issues at stake before any group of people impartial or otherwise, at which the left wing was also represented.

Will Continue Fight.

The left wing in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union stands for proportional representation, direct election of all officials, amalgamation of the needle trades, abolition of the expulsion policy, and abolition of corruption.

For such ideals, thousands of cloak and dressmakers have been expelled from the Union.

The situation presents a clear challenge to the American Labor Movement.

Trades Unions must either abolish the policy of expulsion and yield to greater democratization, or find themselves the victims of the political machine of a Bureaucracy.

The "Forward" and the "Nation"

An Answer to Oswald Garrison Villard

By A. B. MAGIL.

Several weeks ago there appeared in the editorial columns of [illegible] the "Forward" on its thirtieth anniversary. The Nation" didn't always agree with the methods of the "Forward"—which you [illegible] Villard admitted freely, the editorial said, but the "Forward" nevertheless, nevertheless, an admirable journalistic achievement on a non-profit making basis.

"The Nation's" naivete irked me. I remembered that some years ago Oswald Garrison Villard, its editor, published a lengthy article on the "Forward," which was later incorporated in his "Some Newspapers and Newspapermen." And knowing the important role that the "Forward" has played during the thirty years of its existence, thirty years of consistent betrayal of the interests of the working class, I decided to make some protest.

Unfortunately I neglected to make a duplicate copy of my letter to "The Nation," but its salient arguments are still fresh in my mind.

I pointed out that the "Forward" was the first Yiddish newspaper to employ the journalistic methods of Mr. Hearst—and to improve on them.

That, founded in opposition to the "Abend-Blatt," organ of the socialist labor party, it went to all extremes of vilification in its effort to crush its rival.

That during the Spanish-American War it openly supported the imperialistic aggressions of the United States, referring contemptuously to the "Abend-Blatt" as "the Spanierd" because of the latter's opposition to the war.

That with the accession of Abraham Cahan to the editorship in 1902, and with the "Abend-Blatt" finally stamped out, the "Forward" began in earnest its career of betrayal, sensation-mongering and vulgarization.

That its "non-profit making" basis has enabled it to erect a magnificent ten-story structure and to pay its proletarian editor-in-chief, Abe Cahan, $350, and its proletarian general manager, B. Vladeck, $300 a week regular salary—out of the pennies and voluntary contributions of workers.

Finally, I pointed out to the editors of "The Nation" that if their lack of knowledge of the Yiddish language might be some slight extenuation for their ignorance about the paper, there is nothing to prevent them from reading the Sunday English section of the "Forward," where they will be edified by such tidbits as "Are Intermarriages Ever Happy?" and "Should a Girl Tell?" or the profound interpretation of the Chinese liberation movement by William Morris Feigenbaum, written in the best manner of G. A. Henty, tha boys' favorite.

I also mentioned the fact that "The Nation's" congratulation to the "Freiheit" on its fifth anniversary had somehow escaped me, and commented briefly on the magazine's "impartial" interpretation of the needle trades struggle according to the gospel of Benjamin Stolberg.

My letter did not appear in print. Instead I received on May 21 the following communication:

"Dear Mr. Magil:

"I am sorry that your letter of April 28th has not yet received an acknowledgment. It went to Mr. Gannett, who has been away ill, and has only today come to me.

"I note what you say about the 'Forward.' I have never denied, either in my writings about or in speaking of the 'Forward,' that it often stoops to the gutter, though I have tried to make plain in my book and in my lectures that it is the most interesting experiment in American journalism in that it is non-profit making and gives away its surplus. Whether it gives that surplus away wisely or unwisely I, of course, do not know. I am sorry, too, that I am handicapped in not being able to read it to see for myself how bad or how good it is.

"Your letter has also been forwarded to Mr. Stolberg for his information.

"Yours very truly,

(Signed) "Oswald Garrison Villard

"Editor."

It seems obvious to me that Mr. Villard has rather effectively succeeded in hanging himself. He says, "..... SOVIET UNION MINISTER TO POLAND MURDERED; BRITISH PROPAGANDA IN BORDER STATES BLAMED

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THERE is a good deal of confusion about the Chinese situation even among friends of the Chinese people. For instance, there are people that think Chiang Kai-shek and the Hankow government are having a trifling spat which can be overcome or liquidated by the use of a little diplomacy. This is the ostrich's toe.

THE real difference between the Hankow government and the Nanking or Chiang Kai-Shek organization is imperialism versus the right of the Chinese people to govern themselves. Hankow stands for the freedom of China. Chiang Kai-shek stands for Chiang Kai-shek. But in order to stand successfully for anything, one must have backing. So Chiang Kai-shek falls back on the imperialists.

THE imperialists are not fools. They invest their money, but they expect to get it back and more with it. They may lose. If so this is not unusual. But they expect Chiang Kai-shek to deliver the goods. And if he does not do so much, the worse for him. Because he will get wrecked between two stools. Chiang, for reasons that need not be stressed here, decided that he could do the best thing by himself by joining the imperialists. He joined the imperialists and lost his head. The latter is still on his shoulders but if Hankow wins out in the near future and unless Chiang has more soldiers than we think he has, he will have to hike to Japan to save his neck.

JUGO-SLAVIA has broken off diplomatic relations with Albania, which means that Jugo-Slavia has broken off diplomatic relations with Italy. This has a more or less direct relationship with the conflict between Great Britain and the Soviet Union. Jugo-Slavia has been in the French circle of European powers as opposed to the British combination. So we must conclude in the absence of more conclusive evidence that Italy-Slavia is taking a crack at Italy, an ally of England. Which proves that things are not as simple as they look in Europe, even tho the world is divided into two classes.

FINLEY PETER DUNNE is one of the most fortunate humorists we know of. Payne Whitney left him half a million dollars. Why? Dunne was supposed to have torn a real streak thru the capitalist system some years ago and yet a millionaire left him a fortune. Did Dunne really hurt the system? Or did he merely tickle the funny bones of the bourgeoisie? A person can take liberties with the capitalist system provided he does not hurt. A humorist and a clown are two different animals.

Five Hundred Comrades Paying One Dollar Each to Cover the Five Hundred Dollar Fine

With a smile of triumph the Professional Patriots listened to Judge Murphy as he pronounced the verdict of Five Hundred Dollars against The DAILY WORKER, thus invoking the full limit of the law in the case. These gentry realized fully what a fierce blow they are delivering to The DAILY WORKER by imposing such a heavy fine at this time, when our financial difficulties are so great.

But they reckoned without our comrades. They did not realize that the comrades feel that the sentence against The DAILY WORKER is really a sentence against them and they will stand their share of the sentence imposed upon them. We will show them what solidarity means. The closest fighters around The DAILY WORKER will meet the challenge of the capitalist court with a one dollar bill. We want five hundred such donations immediately to cover the amount of the fine. Let no one shirk his responsibility. Let us meet the blow shoulder to shoulder, in a collective and true Bolshevik spirit.

Subway Men Drive for Union

READY TO KICK COMPANY UNION TO SMITHEREENS

Untermyer Revelations Damn Bosses

Worth a million dollars to the subway workers.

This was the comment yesterday of an organizer prominent in the 1926 Interborough Rapid Transit strike on the vigorous assault on the I. R. T.'s company union by Samuel Untermyer, special counsel for the transit commission.

Whether Untermyer's recommendation that the I. R. T. bosses be forced to quit their vicious warfare against the Street Car Men's Union will be heeded by the transit commission was another question, the organizer admitted. The commission during the 1926 strike did nothing to aid the strikers, when a word from its members might have swung the balance to the side of the strikers.

Company officials admitted yesterday that their so-called "Brotherhood of I. R. T. Employes" company union had been hard hit by Untermyer's statement to the commission reviewing the company's anti-union policy. Chances for a subway strike in the future have been increased, they complained.

Part of Terror Lifted.

Subway workers canvassed by a DAILY WORKER reporter expressed themselves as hopeful that a real organizing drive can be gotten under way soon. Terrorized by the I. R. T.'s blacklist and anti-union policies,

Engdahl Addresses Health Department Convention of USSR

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

(Special To The DAILY WORKER.)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R. (by mail).—Mine was the great privilege of extending the greetings of the Communist International and our American Workers (Communists) Party to the Sixth Convention of the Health Department Heads of the Soviet Union.

In responding to my greeting, N. A. Semaahko, the people's commissar of health, declared:

"Allow me in the name of this convention to express my deep appreciation and thanks to the Communist International for the greetings extended here by Comrade Engdahl.

"Allow me to express our greetings to our fraternal Communist Party in America.

More than a thousand delegates, from every section of the Soviet Union, applauded Semaahko's remarks. They were gathered here for many days discussing the health problems of the Soviet Union. It is reported that Chiang is actually carrying on negotiatious with Chang Tso-lin, Manchurian war lord.

"Hell and Maria" Dawes Thinks Kellogg's Time Is Up; Jabs at His Men

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 7.—Without regard to the disrespect shown his Republican associate in Washington affairs, vice president Dawes here in a speech today stated that the United States was being beaten on the diplomatic field by most of the countries of Europe because of not sending its more intelligent men abroad as representatives.

"Diplomacy in Europe, because of the critical economic position in which these countries find themselves, is being evolved under continued contracts and the law of 'survival of the fittest,'" he said.

"The United States must begin to put really able men in charge of its foreign affairs," was another statement.

FURRIERS SEEK TO TELL MAYOR OF BRUTALITIES

Joint Boards Plan to Send Delegation

An attempt will be made to have a committee representing the Furriers' Joint Board and the Cloak and Dressmakers' Joint Board appear before Mayor Walker today and report to the city executive details of the excessive brutality of the Industrial Squad toward members of the two unions.

"If the appointment is made," said Ben Gold, manager of the Furriers' Joint Board, "Louis Hyman, manager of the Cloak and Dressmakers' Joint Board, C. S. Zimmerman, manager of the Dress Department of this Joint Board, and I will call upon the mayor with a group of workers who have been brutally beaten by the Industrial Squad during these past two days.

"These will include Lena Goodman, a dressmaker, who had her nose broken and received serious injuries this morning; Max Wallman, if he is able to leave Bellevue Hospital where he was removed after the detectives had beaten and arrested him yesterday; George Perdicaris, S. Commodikis and F. Kromotis all of whom were taken into a room at the 30th street police station, following their arrest on the picket line yesterday, and were terribly beaten so that their resulting injuries are

Wojkoff Walking With USSR Chargé Expelled From England When Shot by White Guardist

London News, Die-Hard Sheet, Lavishes Praise on Murder; Polish Workers Protest

WARSAW, Poland, June 7.—The Soviet Minister to Poland, M. Wojkoff, was assassinated at the Warsaw Central Station this morning by Boris Kowceda, a young Russian monarchist inflamed by British anti-Soviet propaganda. The brutal murder of the Soviet envoy is regarded as a direct result of the intensive anti-Soviet drive that tory Britain has been carrying on in states bordering on the Soviet Union.

Following on the heels of the raids on the Soviet legation in Peking, the Arcos raids and the British rupture of diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union, the British-inspired assassination of the Soviet envoy may have far-reaching diplomatic consequences.

As the Soviet Minister was walking along the platform of the station with A. P. Rosengols, former Charge d'Affaires in London, Kowceda fired eight shots at him. The minister fell to platform, wounded in the breast. He was rushed to a hospital where he died an hour later.

Workers Protest

Workers thruout Warsaw are protesting against Wojkoff's murder, which they regard as a British move to increase the difficulties between the Soviet Union and Poland. More basically, Britain's object is to goad the Soviet Union into a war, observers state.

Great Britain has been carrying on an intense propaganda campaign in Poland, Lithuania, and Roumania and has been welding these states into an anti-Soviet bloc.

Tories Express Pleasure

LONDON, June 7.—Gloating over the murder of M. Wojkoff, Soviet Minister to Poland, the London Evening News, which has been conducting an anti-Soviet campaign, says:

"By his assassination at the hand of a Royalist, retribution has come to one of the chief perpetrators of one of the foulest murders in history."

"The foul murder" to which the Evening News refers is the execution of the Czar in 1919.

The London News substantially represents the views of the Tory Cabinet, and its expression of satisfaction over the murder of the Soviet envoy is regarded as semi-official encouragement to White Guardists thruout the world to commit similar murders.

AVELLA MINERS DEMAND MASS PICKETING START

Order Officials to Defi Sheriff's Ukase

AVELLA, Pa., June 7.—Calling for mass violation of the arbitrary and illegal orders of the sheriff of Allegheny county prohibiting it, and demanding that greater activity be taken to raise relief for the miners locked out in the great bituminous coal fields of America, the local union here has passed resolutions and is circularizing them about amongst the other unions of the United Mine Workers of America.

The letter sent with the two resolutions passed points out that:

"Providing relief for the striking miners, their wives and children must not be looked upon as charity. It is the duty of those miners who continue to work and the workers generally to make it possible for all the union men who are on strike to remain at their posts and to make it impossible for the coal operators to open their mines on the non-union basis. This can be achieved if some relief is rushed to the striking area.

"The question of picketing likewise

BRITISH AND AMERICAN GOLD BACK OF INTRIGUE AGAINST U. S. S. R.

General Pilsudski, the tyrant of Poland, is an English tool. He seized power thru a coup d'etat in which he had the backing and tacit support of Great Britain, and in which he unseated a parliamentary majority in the Polish Sjem which was bought and paid for by France.

The chief point in British policy in Poland has been, working thru Pilsudski, to build an anti-Soviet Union bloc from the Black Sea to the North Sea. This fact was not known to the Communist International, which, thru its press service, International Press Correspondence, has repeatedly exposed British intrigue. Thus "Improcor" for March 8, states:

> The seizure of power by Pilsudsky in May 1926, the Fascist coup d'etat in Velmar (Latvia), the destruction of the White Russian Hromada, which went hand in hand with an unprecedented terror against all the national minorities which are settled in Poland on the borders of the Soviet Union—all this is in the closest connection with the plans of intervention of British imperialism. The interventionalists aim at the victory of Fascism in the Baltic border states and Poland, so that they may cover in the rear in case they undertake a campaign against the Soviet Union. And Again: Improcor, March 10, 1927.
> It was no mere coincidence that, as the semi-official organ "Lietava" reports, Mr. Wheen, in his discussion with Smetona, the president of Lithuania, displayed great interest in the question of establishing friendly industrial relations between Poland and Lithuania. Neither is the visit of Jungutis, the director of the National Bank of Lithuania, to London a coincidence; this visit was for the purpose of taking up a foreign loan, the prospect of which had been held out by England, whereas England had, up to that time, granted no credit to the Ilaschevitis government. There can be no doubt that if Fascist Lithuania will, sooner or later, throw itself into the arms of Poland. (M. G. Bach).

Fascist Ring.

Bach concludes, in the same article:

> A survey of the Fascist movement to the west of the Soviet Union shows that a Fascist ring is being successfully welded around the Soviet Union, anti-Soviet bloc, with the

ORGANIZATION OF THE NUCLEUS

CHAPTER I.

The nucleus is the basic unit of the Party. Its fundamental duties are the life and activity of the Party. The quality of the nucleus determines the value of the Party. Its active work is determined by its general understanding of Party circulars and by the leadership given within the nucleus.

Our Party is built to fit the requirements of the class struggle. The strength of its inner structure is decisive. It must stand the test in action. Applied in organization practice this means that each nucleus must become one compact body, always effective. It should be organized generally on the following basis.

1. The Leading Committee.

A nucleus must have an Executive Committee composed of the following members: chairman, secretary, financial secretary, industrial organizer, agitprop director, and literature and DAILY WORKER agent. (This may be increased or decreased according to the size of the nucleus.) Each member of the Executive Committee is to function as the head of each particular department named.

While the Executive Committee must give complete leadership to all the activities of the nucleus, it, however, does not mean that its members are to do all the work, but rather to give general direction, and see that work is properly distributed and decisions carried out. The active function of the nucleus will in the largest measure depend upon the ability of its Executive Committee to mobilize the members for active systematic Party work. It is therefore, important that the Executive Committee fully understand the qualifications of the various members for the various tasks. To this end it should from time to time conduct an examination of the membership in order to have work properly assigned and to make sure that each member attends to his respective duties. Those members who belong to mass organizations should participate regularly in activities assigned to them within such organizations, while the small nuclei functions in many cases may be left to those who have no such connections.

Mein Executive Duties.

The duties of the Nucleus Executive should be the following: 1. To work out an agenda for each nucleus meeting. 2. To introduce the proper spirit to the meeting and to watch its conduct. 3. To take care of all communications containing plans of work from higher bodies and make recommendations in accordance with the plans to the nucleus. It should decide which letters are to be read in full to the nucleus, if any. 4. To recommend measures for the conduct of current Party work or Party campaigns. 5. To assign work to the individual members.

The Executive Committee should meet prior to each nucleus meeting, work out its plans and submit one of its members to make the complete report to the nucleus containing the various recommendations. The Executive Committee should also compile reports for higher bodies from time to time, such reports to contain standing of membership, number belonging to unions or mass organizations, general activities of the nucleus, participation in campaigns, leaflets distributed, paper and pamphlets circularized, etc. The report when compiled should be thoroughly discussed in the nucleus with a view to improving all future activities.

The Nucleus Agenda.

The nucleus agenda should gen-

HAWAHAN LAWYER JAILED, HOUNDED FOR STRIKE AID

Denied Parole; U. S. Sugar Kings Control Board

By LAURANCE TODD.

(Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, June 7 (FP).—Pablo Manlapit, a Hawaiian lawyer of Filipino race, who encouraged many thousands of Filipino workers on sugar plantations in Hawaii to strike, in 1924, for a $2 basic wage, and who has served two years in prison as a result, is the center of a fight between the sugar barons and their territorial government at Honolulu and the humanitarian element in the Hawaiian Islands. Manlapit's story has come to Washington. Efforts are about to be made by progressives to compel the territorial authorities to answer for their arbitrary and vindictive attitude, which seems to be due to the fact that these officials are in the sugar business. Manlapit is a victim of the class government which the sugar companies maintain for their private protection.

As the story has been told by Americans who have brought it to Washington, the Filipino plantation workers in Hawaii were brought there to supplant Chinese, Portuguese and Japanese labor which had in turn supplanted the native Hawaiian workers on the plantations. Native population had fallen in 50 years of hard toil on these plantations from a total of 300,000 to 21,000. Japan's government refused to permit Japanese peasants to go to Hawaii to work at $20 a month and a company house, which was the rate paid Chinese and Portuguese on 2-year contracts. So the Filipinos were enticed and the Chinese secured better conditions, until some 15 years ago the Filipinos began coming, under a contract system, which accepted the offer of $20 a month, with return passage guaranteed at the end of 2 years.

Shoot Down Strikers.

Manlapit had counseled for a union which was established among these Filipino plantation hands. Sympathising with their misery in a country where the cost of living is very high, he inspired them with a hope that they could win better terms by striking. The stoppage of work that followed was joined by thousands who were not under contract. American owners of plantations, organized in the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Assn., became panic-stricken. They feared that the strikers would form a permanent union which would force them to pay wages far above the old level. Manlapit was denounced as a dangerous agitator. Police were sent out to cow the strikers. Many were arrested. Crowds of strikers were shot dead and a score left wounded. The strike was broken. The Filipinos went back to the fields. Manlapit was arrested on a cospiracy charge, and was convicted and sentenced to serve from 2 to 10 years in prison.

Refuse Him Parole.

After two years he was entitled to a parole from the prison board, but when he applied for it, in January, 1927, the board refused it, saying he would submit to deportation to the Philippine Islands he would not be paroled. He had never lived in the Philippines. His wife is a white American citizen. He has four small children. The sugar planters' influence had been such that organized charity in Honolulu found pretexts for refusing aid to his family. His wife went to work in a laundry at $8 a week, and she was induced to sign over the custody of her children to an orphan asylum. Under these circumstances, Manlapit refused to accept deportation to the Philippines unless his family were sent with him. The board refused to consider such a suggestion. Even after the state's attorney decided that the board could not order him deported, the board refused the parole. Two of the three members of the board are prominent in sugar companies, while the third is a former U. S. W. W., converted to Y. M. C. A. and Boy Scout work. He spoke sympathetically of Manlapit—and voted to hold him in prison.

Gov. Farrington, who could force the board to release this victim of sugar planters' vengeance, is a partner in a newspaper enterprise with one of the biggest men in the sugar planters' organization. He has evaded the issue, claiming that it was a matter for the board to handle.

direct support of English imperialism, which is arming for intervention against the Soviet Union.

Not Successful Yet.

As yet this bloc is not completed, nor is the ring around the Soviet Union closed. Up to the present, Germany has withheld its consent to English intervention. The bargaining continues on the foreign offices of the Great Powers. Germany is setting hopes which are not unfounded, on the support of England and demands that the frontiers laid down by the Treaty of Versailles be changed, above all that the Danzig corridor be removed. Poland, however, still remains inflexible and solemnly declares through the mouth of Zaleski; "not a hand's breadth of Polish soil; every man to the defence of the fatherland."

Wall Street In It.

The United States is partially financing this bloc, as evidenced by the following item in the New York Times, April 2, 1927:

A credit from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York along the lines of the accommodation which the bank in part has extended to Great Britain, Belgium, and oter countries is also understood to be part of the financial plan for Poland. . . . The bank in the past has given credits to Poland, secured by the deposit of gold.

PHILADELPHIA, June 7.—Determined to help in the work of freeing Sacco and Vanzetti, even though barred from the conference called by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers for this purpose, the Philadelphia Local of the International Labor Defense has issued a call to all workers' organizations who for any reason could not get into this work otherwise. This conference meets every Thursday evening, at Free Lotts Hall, 531 North 7th St., and urges all organizations, other than unions, which should affiliate with the Amalgamated conference, to send delegates to the I. Engdahl Talks at Health Conference in Moscow workers' republics since the Bolshevik revolution.

It was not difficult to talk to this great assemblage, many of whom were highly skilled scientists and renowned specialists in their profession. They were all united in the common struggle, not only to combat disease in all its forms, but to eliminate the causes of disease as well, a struggle made possible by the building of a new social order that is crushing the profit system underfoot. I was presented to this audience by the first assistant people's commissar of health, Z. P. Soloviov, who was acting as chairman. I said in part:

Engdahl Speaks.

"Comrade chairman and comrades of the Sixth Convention of the Health Departments of the Soviet Union. In no country in the world outside the Soviet Union does there exist a people's commissariat of health as part of the government. This is so because in no country where the rule of profit exists, is the class in power interested in combatting and eliminating the causes of the diseases that ravage the working masses.

"In the United States we have a department of state that carries on an aggressive campaign in the interests of American imperialism. It is waging its fight today against Mexico, Nicaragua and China. In the cabinet of the American president there also sits a secretary of commerce, Herbert Hoover, to help protect profits wherever they are endangered and to expand this robbery of the masses. But there is no secretary of health in the government of the American profiteers.

Unity For Health.

"Within the borders of the Soviet Union you have achieved the unity of the health departments. Throout the entire one system of health protection is maintained that is centralized in the people's commissariat of health. You have already achieved tremendous progress in winning the participation of the masses in the health work of the Union, thru drawing the workers and peasants into co-operative activities with these health departments. You have developed the program, not only for curing the sick, but also for eliminating the causes of disease.

"You are to be congratulated on the able leadership of Comrade-Doctor Semashko in carrying on this work. Even in far off America we have heard of the able and constructive work directed by Comrade Semashko. The health authorities of America are forced to recognise his worth, even the profit system that keeps workers enslaved under disease-breeding conditions in American industry makes it impossible for them to carry out in the United States the system you have established here. Comrade Semashko recently presented the health work in the Soviet Union to the international family of health departments at the health conference recently held in Paris. But not until the workers in other lands have also won their victory over the profit system will it be possible for them also to inaugurate the war against disease on the broad and effective scale that you are carrying it on here under the banners of an emancipated working class.

Workers Watch.

"Thus the workers the world over are turning their eyes toward your congress here, and it is with the keenest hope of world labor that your achievements will soon spread to all lands, that I greet you in the name of the Communist International and also of its American section, the Workers (Communist) Party of America."

Many of the remnants of czarism still persist among the so-called "professional" classes. This includes the doctors and physicians, some of whom chafe under the fact that they do not enjoy the best of conditions, while the Workers' Republic strives to do its uttermost to lift the level of the masses, that was low indeed under the czarist tyranny. Thus I urged that the intellectuals, especially the professions, must become the honest and devoted allies of the workers in their struggle to build the new social order.

Chinese Professor Killed.

I cited the heroic martyrdom of Lee Ta Chao, whose murder at the hands of Chang Tso-lin's assassins had just been reported that day from Peking. Lee Ta Chao was a professor in the law faculty of the Peking University. He was also the founder and leader of the Chinese Communist Party, one of its organizers and a prominent member of its Central Committee. He was the son of a peasant. His immediate crime was the fact that he was caught in the provocation raid on the Soviet Embassy, during which he was cruelly strangled to death. He left a mother and widow, son and two daughters. I argued that Lee Ta Chao's heroic martyrdom should inspire honest intellectuals to greater sacrifices in the class struggle everywhere.

I also cited the case of the Russian professor, Timiriasev, who gave of his precious intellectual forces, of his knowledge and vast experiences, to the Soviet task of reconstruction. He joined the forces of the workers and peasants, since the very beginning of the revolution, being denounced by the intelligentsia, who did not understand him, as "an old man who had lost his senses." He was denounced as insane because he worked with the "terrible Bolsheviks." Yet it was Lunacharsky, the Soviet commissar of education, who said it was Timiriasev who had saved the honor of the Russian intellectuals. I declared:

Intelligence For All.

"The best elemante of the intelligentsia should not belong to the bourgeoisie, but should join forces with the working class. Instead of selling themselves to the capitalists, they should become the allies of the workers and peasants."

Only half of the revolting health conditions, citing many statistics, that existed in capitalist industry in America, especially in those basic industries where the workers are unorganized and unable to protect their interests. I concluded by urging every possible support of the people's commissariat of health. My address was translated by George Ashenude, formerly of the American Communist Party.

Comrade Wolf extended the greetings of the doctors' fraction of the Commnnist Party of Germany. The people's commissariat of health, Dr. Turcomahla, also spoke pointing out that the Soviet medical program was building up the health of the workers of the East. A greeting was also extended by a representative of the Young Communist League, who pointed out that the death rate of the youth was being lowered under Soviet rule. Workers' delegates from the factories and workshops also spoke. If time permits I will give you some of the details of the work of this congress in another article.

NEWS FROM NEW JERSEY

NEWARK, N. J., June 7.—The Window Cleaners' Unions which has been on strike here for past 2 weeks against the bosses who proceeded to hire scabs to help in violation of their agreement with the local are all out 100 per cent. The spirit of the workers is just as strong today as the day they went out on general strike.

Most of the bosses want to settle with the union and have made approaches to the local strike committee. However, the American Window Cleaning Co. and the N. Y. & N. J. Window Cleaning Co. are bitterly fighting the union and refuse to settle. These two firms want to maintain open shop conditions. The workers are determined to stay ott on strike until all the bosses concede to their demands.

Big Meeting Tomorrow.

On Thursday evening in the New Montgomery Hall, Prince and Montgomery Sts., a huge protest meeting has been arranged in behalf of the striking furriers of Local 25. Every worker is urged to attend to learn for himself of the frame-up against the local and its officers. Prominent speakers from Newark and New York will speak.

The attempt on the part of the International Fur Workers' Union and all the reactionary forces lined up with them to break the Rabbit Workers' Local Union 22 has thus far met with failure. The strike and the spirit of the men is high.

Norway Labor Is Norway Accepts Industrial Court

OSLO, June 7 (FP).—Norwegian labor, placed under a system of compulsory arbitration of industrial disputes by act of parliament, has accepted the first award made in the arbitration tribunal.

Passage of the new law was followed by the calling off, by Norwegian employers, of a lockout against 15,000 trade unionists which had been effective for 12 weeks, in an attempt to enforce a sharp cut in wages. It is the group that has accepted a compromise reduction in pay.

The new law provides that until Aug. 1, 1929, wherever the cabinet considers that important public interests are endangered, and when the state conciliator has failed to settle a dispute, the cabinet may, at the suggestion of its conciliator, issue a decree forbidding a stoppage of work and ordering the tribunal to decide the point at issue. No change in wages or conditions is permitted until this decision is made.

Avella Miners Demand Mass Picketing

is a very important one. The orders issued by the sheriffs of Allegheny and Washington counties against large scale picketing is un-American. These orders are issued in order to protect the interests of the coal operators and is a blow at the striking miners and at labor generally. Every ounce of our energy must be mobilized in order to defeat these vicious anti-labor orders of the sheriffs."

The resolution in regard to picketing says:

"WHEREAS, the sheriffs of Allegheny and Washington counties of the state of Pennsylvania posted notices prohibiting mass meetings of union miners and picketing near the scab mines, and

"WHEREAS, such an order of the sheriffs is an arbitrary and unwarranted act aimed to help the coal operators to break the union, and

"WHEREAS, the prevent system of picketing, where the union men are prevented from coming together in large groups and to speak to the strike-breakers is ineffective, and

"WHEREAS, this makes it necessary for the right to picket lawfully in any way we may find it necessary, therefore be it

"RESOLVED, that we call upon our International Executive Presidents to fight against this vicious order of the sheriffs by organising mass picketing at a number of mines in violation of the sheriff's orders and that our District and International Presidents shall lead this picketing in order to pickat to the attention of all workder to bring the question of the right to picket to the public at large."

The other resolution calling for more effective relief measures demands:

"1.—That we call upon the International officials of the UMWA to immediately place a 15% strike assessment during the period of the strike, upon all miners now at work in the anthracite and the union bituminous districts, the money so collected to be used entirely for strike relief.

"2.—That we request the International officials of the UMWA to immediately issue a call for financial assistance for the miners and to urge the American Federation of Labor to issue a similar appeal.

"3.—That we call upon the district officers of District No. 5 fo stimulate the collection of relief from labor unions and sympathising elements in Western Pennsylvania, and should urge other districts of the UMWA to do likewise.

"4.—That local unions of the UMWA shall take the initiative in forming local relief committees in all mining districts to be made up of representatives of miners' unions and friendly local unions of other trades, for the purpose of raising funds for the relief of the miners on strike."

Workers' Aid Raising Relief.

The International Workers' Aid will do its share in this relief work in this district as long as the struggle between the miners and the coal operators continue. The International Workers' Aid of Western Pennsylvania will hold a huge picnic at the farm of Frank Galda, Cherwick, Pa., on Sunday, June 12. An elaborate program which includes dancing, Scotchfield and Slatch, got to end of line, transfer to car No. 96 then go to the end of line to the Cherwick car. Trains 10:10, 11:28 a. m., 2:50 p. m. to Cherwick, or by auto—follow the Freeport Road.

OF CHIANG IN OFFICIAL STATEMENT

The following is a statement issued by the Chinese people by the Central Executive Committee of the Kuomintang concerning Chiang Kai-shek's betrayal of the revolution:

"Chiang Kai-shek, the traitor to the Chinese Revolution, and the new Chinese Kuomintang, the First Unit of the Nationalist Revolutionary Army, had long cherished a sinister design. His treacherous and revolutionary move was directed, adhering to the interest of the late Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the party has adopted an attitude of tolerance in the hope that he would repent and make amends for his wrongful conduct. During the past several months, however, his pronouncements and actions have indicated more and more a reactionary tendency. He has utilized the post of the commander-in-chief to carry out his treacherous scheme. He has created a new epoch in the history of Chinese militarism and has proved himself a new tool of imperialism.

Two-Fold Duty.

"The Kuomintang has to fulfill a two-fold duty; internally, to eradicate militarism and externally, to eliminate imperialism. Chiang's acts are not only perversive in the extreme but also mean the 'substitution of 'tyranny' for tyranny! Therefore, besides the adoption of a resolution ordering his expulsion from the party and his arrest by the officers and soldiers as well as the general public bodies for punishment, it is deemed necessary to proclaim to both Chinese and foreigners some of his notorious crimes:

"1. Violation of the late Dr. Sun Yat-sen's instructions.—The late Dr. Sun Yat-sen held that the aim of the Nationalist revolution should be to secure freedom and equality for China. Hence, internally, we should eliminate militarism and externally, we should annihilate imperialism. And the three great policies of "Cooperation with Soviet Russia", "Cooperation with the peasants," and "Cooperation with the labor" were enunciated by the late Dr. Sun at the time of the reconstruction of the party. Although Chiang was then an ardent supporter of these policies, his words and acts have proved contrary to the late Dr. Sun's instruction.

Ruins Party School.

"2. Ruination of the party school by way of disintegrating the revolutionary force. The late Dr. Sun Yat-sen entrusted the management of Whampoa Cadet School to Chiang with the expectation that he would train military men for the service of the party. With his head filled with thoughts of feudalism, Chiang regarded Whampoa as Szechuan (a place where Yuan Shih-kai had his troops trained) and as a sphere of his personal influence. By means of small favors, he dispelled the students into rendering service to himself, instead of to the party. The intelligent elements, who could not thus be employed, were oppressed by any conceivable means. His henchmen and agents were ordered to set up such organizations as 'The Sun Yat-senism Club', 'The Whampoa Alumni Association', etc. The 'Three People's Principles' were given a wrong interpretation and false doctrines were advocated in order to deceive the world. Deliberately, he caused complications to arise so that he could exploit them to the fullest extent. Consequently, the very foundation of the Whampoa Cadet School was shaken by the devilfry of a single individual. It was only very recently that he instigated General Li Tai-sin to surround the Whampoa Cadet School with troops and suffered to ruin an institution which the late Dr. Sun had built up with much effort.

Destroys System.

"3. Destruction of the party military system with the consequent infringement of the power and authority of the Central Party and government.—On March 20, 1926, he wrongfully exercised the power of arrest, disarmament and dismissal of the officers of the 2nd Division, thereby destroying the party military system. His acts were characterized by selfishness and treachery, by the slightest consideration for the dignity and prestige of the Central Party and government. He is responsible for the evil precedence of military men interfering with civil administration and for the introduction of a despotic military regime.

Oppressive Control.

"4. Oppressive control of the party and employment of scoundrels.—The comrades of the party were very much exasperated by the coup of March 20, 1926, and it was only the presence of the enemy that restrained them from adopting punitive measures against him. It was hoped that such attitude of tolerance would lead to his repentance but his evil propensity persisted. Relying upon his military power, he coerced the comrades, altered the party regulations without authority and appointed chairmen at will. In consequence of his oppressive control of the party and his employment of scoundrels who fill all important posts, the prestige of the party has suffered a serious blow. And yet he shamelessly boasts that he is a loyal disciple of the late Dr. Sun! With the presumptuous air of a monarch, he dictates to the comrades as if he himself were the country. Whosoever follows him is regarded as a real revolutionist and whosoever opposes him is denounced as a counter-revolutionist, so that the people only know Chiang but ignore the Central Executive Committee.

Usurpation of Power.

"5. Usurpation of governmental power in appointing army chief-commanders without authority.—The appointment and dismissal of civil military officials are rights reserved for the Nationalist government. Chiang, however, wrongfully appointed, in the name of commander-in-chief, pacification commissioners and scores of army chief-commanders. Neither did he ask for permission of the government before the appointments were effected, nor did he report such appointments to the government subsequently. The result has been that the Central Government has been left without any knowledge of the condition of the different armies. As regards the distribution of funds and provisions for the armies, he has indulged in such freedom of action which denies the Central Party and government an opportunity of investigation. There have been cases where unwarranted deduction was made from the pay-roll for personal enrichment. In his eyes there is no law!

Violates Resolutions.

"6. Violation of the resolutions adopted by the Central Party and opposition to the elevation of the party power.—The removal of the Central Party and government to Hupeh was decided upon at Canton. Chiang, however, desired to annul the original resolution and proposed that the party and government should be located at Nanchang within his firm grip so that his feudalistic ambition might be satisfied and his sinister designs might be carried out. The comrades, realizing the grava danger consequent upon the decline of the power of the party and the ascendency of that of Chiang and his clique since March 20, 1926, conducted a movement for the elevation of the power of the party. The purpose was not only to strengthen and centralize the authority of the power but also to rectify Chiang's mistakes. From the revolutionary standpoint, the movement was entirely unselfish but Chiang vigorously opposed it.

Allies With Imperialism.

"7. Alliance with imperialists and compromise with militarists.—The bringing about of the downfall of the imperialists and the militarists is the fundamental policy of the party. Yet following the arrival of Chiang Kai-shek at Nanchang the cry for a compromise between the north and south was raised both in Chinese and foreign circles, while the air became filled with the talk of a compromise with the imperialists. As to the facts, it has been known to all that such men as Huang Fu have been busy at such attempts. Seditious connections with the enemy is another of his crimes.

Persecutes People.

"8. Persecution of farmers and laborers, and murder of common people.—It is in the interests of our people that our party has carried on this revolution—in fact the foundation of the party is laid on the interests of the masses. More than 80 per cent of our populace are represented by our farmers and laborers. The support of the farmers and laborers is therefore one of the three principal policies of the party. Chiang Kai-shek, however, looks upon the farmers and laborers as if they were his enemies. Wherever he goes the murder of these people is repeated. Quickly following the murder of Chen Tan-hsien, a labor leader, at Kiuchow, Kiangsi, there took place the wholesale destruction of party headquarters, offices of the farmers' unions and labor unions, and arrest and slaughter of party members as well as farmers and laborers in all parts of Kiangsi province. The same tactics were also adopted in Kuangtung, Kwangsi, Fukien and Anhui. He also has sent Hsiang Chuan-yi and Lee Chao to Szechuen, where Liu Hsiang and Lai Hsing-hui were induced to murder the people of Chungking and to besiege Luchow.

Shanghai is the base of operations of imperialists and counter-revolutionaries. Then the number of laborers is larger than in any other part of China. It is there that the severest of oppression against labor was experienced. Immediately upon his arrival at Shanghai, Chiang Kai-shek formed a seditious league with the imperialists, and began a campaign against the mass of the people as well as laborers. Labor pickets are recognized by the Central Government as "a legal force but Chiang disarmed and slaughtered them. It was even possible for the city branch of our party to maintain an open existence under the oppression of the imperialists and militarists but it was at once suppressed by Chiang Kai-shek, who calls himself the disciple of Dr. Sun and commander-in-chief of the revolutionary Nationalist army. Tai Sun Chuan-fang and Chang Chung-chang had no courage to do, Chiang did without fear.

Crushing Work.

"9. Smothering of political work among troops.—Recently Chiang arbitrarily sealed up the offices of the General Political Department of the Military Council stationed in Shanghai. Without authority he also arrested persons engaged in political training of troops. His aim is nothing short of an attempt to transform the revolutionary army into a tool of the militarists and their proteges. The height of his cruelty and the severity of his crimes far exceeds that of the affair of March 20th.

Illegal Conference.

"10. The calling of an illegal conference against the Central Government.—The general regulations of the party stipulates that meetings of the Central Executive Committee and of the Central Control Committee must be held at the place of the sent of the Central Government. The seat of both the Central Party headquarters and the Central Government is at Wuhan. Yet Chiang Kai-shek in his own name dared to call a meeting of the Central Supervisory Committee to be held at Nanking. On what authority and with what reason can Chiang call this meeting? When the counter-revolutionaries met in the Western Hills sometime ago, they were repeatedly repudiated by Chiang himself as law breakers. Now he himself is doing the very act he condemned. This is his tenth crime.

"11. Interference with local administration and trampling down of peoples' rights.—Whenever he arrives at a new place Chiang would unlawfully appoint civil and military officials, not even attempting to discard rascals and unscrupulous sharks. When Shanghai was captured the people of Shanghai, in accordance with the spirit of self-determination, elected their own committees and organized provisional local government, which received the approval of the Central Government.

Chiang, however, hindered their establishment and appointed his own men. As regards the Provincial Government of Kiangsu, the appointees of the Central Government were similarly prevented from assuming their offices by the same method.

Suppression.

"12. Suppression of public opinion and interference with newspapers.—Realising that his crimes have reached a height that they could no longer be tolerated by public opinion, and fearing that the newspaper might publish news concerning his anti-revolutionary acts, thus exposing his crimes, Chiang gave orders, forbidding newspapers to publish articles against his interests, suppressed news from Wuhan, and falsely accused our party of being 'red.' Be it noted that Chiang is also one of our members, and it is absurd to think that he could tell such a falsehood in the manner of Chang Tso-lin and Chang Chung-chang. He does this for no other purpose than offering the imperialists and militarists a demonstration that he is prepared, for his own selfish interest, to surrender to them under the false banner of anti-Bolshevism.

"There are only a few of Chiang's crimes which we choose to point out. By no means are they the only ones he has perpetrated. On behalf of the interests of the people, the party has started the revolution. It is to be regretted that the wrong choice of a military commander has led to such difficulties. The comrades of the party, prompted by the spirit of leniency, have again and again, for the sake of saving the situation, overlooked, though reluctantly, many irregularities. The point is now reached where it is no longer possible for us to be fore-bearing. A survey of Chiang's acts will reveal the fact that he is an extreme anti-revolutionary. What Chang Tso-lin and Chang Chung-chang dared not, he had dared without hesitancy. It is he who cuts himself from the party and from the people. It is he who of his own free will has chosen the place of the new militarist. We have no talking about overthrowing the militarists yet another new militarist whose cruelty far surpasses his predecessor, follows on the heels of the one brought down. It is a misfortune for the party to have such a rebel. How can we face the people and fulfill their expectations if we fail to exercise the strictest party discipline at this juncture and allowed the perpetuation of a reign of terror. It is hoped that the people will understand to what extent Chiang has sunk in crime, and why it is necessary for the party to take such drastic measures to punish him. Let every one rise and join in the condemnation, so that no one would dare and repeat Chiang's deeds!

"The success of the revolution depends on the solidarity of the people, and their ability to carry on a vigorous war. While it is true that military force is one of the most important weapons, it is more true that a victory can only be a true one when it is won by the people by their own solidarity and valor. In this sense also do we desire to inform the people."

Van Sweringens Again Try to Form Road Trust

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The fate of the Van Sweringen billion dollar railroad merger may be determined by the character of the testimony offered today before the Interstate Commerce Commission by O. P. Van Sweringen, Cleveland financier, who conceived the plan of linking up five big railroad systems into a single unit.

The commission resumed hearings on the application of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad to acquire stock control of the Erie and Pere Marquette systems, with Van Sweringen as the star witness. The Chesapeake & Ohio now controls the Hocking Valley road, while the Van Sweringen Brothers control the Nickel Plate. These five roads constitute the proposed merger, with the Chesapeake & Ohio as the nucleus of the unification plan.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—President Coolidge will make no speech-making stops enroute to the Black Hills next week, save for that at Hammond, Ind., where he will deliver an address dedicating a memorial park. It was announced at the white house today.

A New Crisis in the European Mining Industry

By F. B.

We are experiencing the beginnings of a new crisis in the European mining industry. The struggle of the mining enterprises over control of the markets is growing more acute. Signals from among the coal-exporting countries of the world every September have related the story of frightful coal production paralyzing the prospects for the consistently dividend-paying stocks at the pithead to be cleared, but this consolidation was no more than transient. No sooner was the struggle in Great Britain terminated, and British coal again able to compete on the world market, than the seemingly preponderant business position of European coal production changed into the contrary again.

Victory In Vain.

The British coal magnates had carried off a complete victory over the British miners. Not only did they effect a prolongation of the working hours; they also made a cut in wages and began to put through their comprehensive programme of rationalization in regard to working methods by reducing the number of shifts in the face of a simultaneous increase of output.

In spite of all the desperate efforts of the British coal magnates, to regain the lost world markets and to penetrate into fresh pastures, the possibilities of exportation get smaller and smaller. Production is already being restricted, fewer shifts being worked, and further miners are being dismissed, notwithstanding which, the stocks at the pitheads are growing so large that there is again talk of a necessity of reducing the costs of production, which means the wages. The course of procedure is so clearly outlined in England, that the miners' leader Cook only the other day pointed out that a fresh struggle was impending at no vary distant date, in which connection the miners would have to withstand the attacks of the mine-owners.

THESE proceedings in British mining naturally affect the mining industry of all Europe most sensibly. The prosperous business cycle called forth abroad by the British miners' struggle is over, and the competition of Great Britain has become far keener than it was before. This is particularly the case in the Ruhr district and in Silesia.

In the Rhur district the situation has become so acute that miners have been discharged and idle shifts introduced. On this subject the Bochum correspondent of the "Berliner Borsen-Courier" states that:

"If the market crisis continues to obtain, further serious restrictions will be inevitable."

Coal the coal-mining districts outside Germany have also been affected by this crisis may be seen from a report of the Belgian Labor Ministry, according to which the position of the Belgian hard-coal market is getting more and more critical. A number of small mines have been threatened with the necessity of closing down.

Polish Situation Bad.

THE situation in Poland meanwhile, is also serious. The pithead stocks in Upper Silesia, which have at all times been the most reliable barometer to record the position of coal-mining, rose to a total of 1,021,000 tons on March 24th, a figure which has up to the present only occurred once, during the customs war with Germany.

In keeping with the increase of pithead stocks, there is a decline in production and in sales. The daily output, which amounted to more than 107,000 tons in February, fell to about 80,000 in March. The sales and exportation totals are discussed as follows by the "Berliner Börsen-Courier."

"The deterioration of the coal position is yet more drastically expressed in the sale returns. In February the home market absorbed 1,548,477 tons, but in March only 1,363,000 tons. The development of export trade is altogether disastrous. While in January coal exports from Eastern Upper Silesia alone still totalled practically a million (or to be exact 996,400) tons, there was a drop in February to 768,604 and March a further fall to 604,000 tons, or relative to January, exports have thus declined by about 39 per cent.

Everything points to the probability that the giant struggle of the British miners was no more than a prelude to still greater struggles. The success of the British mine-owners and the keen British opposition will also drive the Continental coal magnates to force through their "rationalisation." Even now, wages are being discharged, idle shifts introduced, and pits closed down. The next move will be a general attack by the mine-owners on the miners. The miners of Poland, the Rhur, and Czechoslovakia will have to suffer bitterly for failing to recognise a year ago that the struggle in Great Britain was fought in their own interests too.

All the forces of the working class will have to be called up if the imminent attack of the employers is to be repelled. The fate of the British miners should have taught the International proletariat that it is only by the fight on a united international basis that can avert defeat.

HAVELOCK WILSON AND THE SAD CASE OF DAVID SCOTT

LONDON, June 7.—Havelock Wilson, renegade bureaucrat of the Seaman's Union, has joined hands with the tory government of Birkenhead and Churchill, in attacking the Soviet Union for its alleged mistreatment of a British sailor named David Scott, who was deported from Russia for violating the criminal code.

Scott has given out an affidavit charging that he was imprisoned without trial in Soviet Russia. In reply to a question in the House of Commons, Mr. Locker-Lampson, under secretary of Foreign Affairs declared that his attention had been called to the case of David Scott, "who was just returned destitute from Russia" and that the British Charge d'Affaire at Moscow has protested to the Soviet Government against Scott's "prolonged datention without trial."

Wilson has made political capital out of the sordid case in his efforts to help the Die-Hards break off relations with Soviet Russia. He has appealed to members of Parliament on Scott's behalf.

A statement issued by the General Council of the Soviet trade union movement shows that Scott came to Russia in 1923 and remained there illegally. He does not deny this.

A Smuggler.

For three years he lived in the port city of Novorossisk with a prostitute named Pavlova Cortonet, a Soviet citizen. They both carried on contraband trade. They were searched ten times and each time contraband goods were found on them. They were fined for this illicit business.

In addition Scott and Cortenet acted as procurers. They were arrested for keeping a house of prostitution to which sailore of foreign vessels were lured to be made drunk and robbed.

Given a "Floater."

Scott had no documents showing he was a British subject. He established his identity through a trade union card.

He and his woman partner were arrested Dec. 10, 1925, and released Aug. 10, 1926 on the understanding that they would leave Novorossisk. They had been imprisoned after trial in which they were found guilty of violating Article 97, Part 3 of the criminal code. The woman was sentenced to live three years in the Khirgiz district. Scott was deported to England.

In the affidavit which he published in England, and which is being used for anti-Soviet propaganda, Scott admits that he jumped ship at Novorossisk because he thought he could earn a pound a day there.

Do They Mean It?

In London labor circles it is pointed out that if the tory government is really interested in prohibiting against the imprisonment of British subjects it might address its complaints to the United States, where a number of British workers are rotting in jail for mere membership in the I. W. W. in western states. California in particular, British subjects have been arrested under the criminal syndicalist act, and the possession of an I. W. W. membership card was sufficient to send them for terms of one to fifteen years at San Quentin and other prisons.

The Assassination at Warsaw.

The assassination at Warsaw of M. Wojkoff, the Soviet minister to Poland, by a creature described as a young Russian student with monarchist tendencies, has a much deeper significance than appears on the surface. Despite the weak explanation of the Polish government that no police protection was furnished because the Soviet minister did not request it, the criminal neglect of the Pilsudski regime must be condemned in the strongest terms. Especially is this neglect more pronounced inasmuch as A. P. Rosengoltz, former Charge d'Affaires in London, expressly expelled by the Baldwin tory government, was with M. Wojkoff at the time, and such attacks, inspired by London, could be expected.

The facts at hand at this writing are too meagre definitely to place the blame, but we venture the opinion that this is also the handiwork of the dastardly British tory government of forgery and provocation that has been contriving by every low device to provoke a war against the workers' and peasants' government of Russia.

Credence is given to this interpretation by the malignant attack upon the dead ambassador by the semi-official London Evening News, which charges, without a scintilla of evidence, that M. Wojkoff gave the order that resulted in the execution of the family of the Czar. Says this reptile sheet:

> "By this assassination at the hand of a royalist retribution has come to one of the chief perpetrators of one of the foulest murders in history."

This red-baiting and anti-Soviet publication expresses the sentiments of the Baldwin government and is contributory evidence that the tory criminals have now added assassination to their vile deeds against the Soviet Union. They hoped thereby to provoke the Soviets into a war against Poland, but the Pilsudski government has evidently been quick to disavow the deed. Britain's game in this case was loathsome as all tory practices. It hoped to provoke a war between Russia and Poland, then spur other European countries to a defense of Poland—the same old game of trying to use other nations as pawns in its imperialist game.

But the workers of Britain will know how to meet this latest move on the part of their hated rulers against the peace of the world and heavy and frightful as is the loss of its minister, the Soviet Union will not be maneuvered into war.

Nothing short of actual intervention of Soviet territory by the armed forces of Britain will evoke retaliation by Soviet armed forces, who will then defend the revolution with a determination that will smash the imperialist hordes to pieces and arouse the working class of Britain to another general strike and revolution.

War Clouds in the Balkans.

Diplomatic relations between Jugoslavia and Albania have been broken. British tory intrigue and Italian fascist rapacity are responsible for this move toward a Balkan war. Back of Albania stands fascist Italy, back of Mussolini threats to Jugoslavia is the secret diplomacy of Great Britain, striving to make vassal states of all the Balkan nations for the triple purpose of (1) strengthening its power in the Near East so it can weaken Turkish influence in the world of Islam, which has direct bearing upon its colonial policy in India, (2) strengthening its fight for control of the Balkan and Near East oil fields, (3) building a bloc against the Soviet Union.

Mussolini, although having designs of his own upon Jugoslavia, plays the game of agent of the British government. In his recent provocation against Jugoslavia, when that country threatened to appeal to the Council of the League of Nations, it was Britain that enabled the fascist brigand to bluff his way through and avoid defending his course before the league.

The actual break occurred over the arrest in Albania of a representative of the Jugoslav government who was accused of spying activities. Jugoslavia demanded the release of the prisoner. Backed by Italy the Albanian government, a vassal of Italy by the terms of the treaty of Tirana, (November 27, 1926) impudently refused to release the representative of Jugoslavia. A break in diplomatic relations followed, precipitating a situation reminiscent of the dark July days of 1914.

Italy has been carrying out a policy of most flagrant provocation against Jugoslavia since the rise to power of the blackguard government of Mussolini. After varied struggles it succeeded, through treachery of politicians in Albania, in putting through the treaty of Triana, which signed away the independence of that nation and gave Italy exclusive rights to the exploitation of the Albanian oil fields. So Italy has her own special interests to serve, while at the same time playing the game of Britain.

It is noteworthy that Albania has laid the case before the League of Nations. This action would never have been taken without consent of Italy, that same fascist government that refused to consider the proposed league investigations of the Albanian situation a few months ago when Jugoslavia wanted a hearing on the question. Now that Italy, through provocation by including its vassal state to arrest a member of the Jugoslav legation, has contrived to manufacture a case, it is anxious to go before the league. But it would not want the question referred to the league were it not perfectly aware of the fact that Britain's representatives in the league council will back Albania.

In this crisis France is also involved, because of the struggle for spheres of influence with Italy and also because the French support the claims of Turkey against Greece, which is also backed by Britain, at the bottom of which there is the fight for oil.

Although apparently involving but two small nations, this break in diplomatic relations is one of the symptoms of the great clash of imperialist forces on the stage of world history. Every country in Europe is either directly or indirectly involved and results of how this particular event is disposed of the intrigues, the realignments, will go on until a point is reached where the conspirators of the league of nations can no longer attain their ends by subterranean diplomacy—then will flare forth another and more devastating war than the last one.

In all the world there is but one great power that pursues a policy of peace and that is the Soviet Union and but one great force that fights against the threat of another war and that is the revolutionary proletariat of the world. That is why the imperialist bandits are provoking attacks against Russia and against the working class of their own countries. They hope to weaken the anti-imperialist, anti-war forces so they may be free to again turn the world into a slaughter house.

Against these conspiracies the working class must hurl its battalions and smash the imperialist monsters.

The British Trade Union Bill—Peace in the Framework of World Imperialism

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Article IV.

THE question may be asked: "Does the British ruling class want to smash the unions completely, to wipe them out of existence now?"

To this question we can answer that the tories instead of the unions the instruments of imperialist government but in answering it we can and must make a few comparisons and draw a few lessons for ourselves. We have here in America in an embryonic form as compared with the sharp nationwide struggle in Great Britain, (as was remarked at the beginning of these articles) a like offensive against the trade unions.

TWO forms of crippling the unions have so far come to be noted:

1) Simple "worker-employer cooperation" in which the unions abandon a strike policy and enter into efficiency agreements with the capitalists.

2.) The Watson-Parker railway act by which the government becomes openly an instrument for enforcing the policy of worker-employer cooperation—partial "governmentalization" of the unions.

As in other countries the measures taken here by the official leadership to emasculate the unions was preceded by a wave of strikes and left wing agitation and organization. It is enough to mention here the nationwide strikes of the coal miners and railway shopmen, the rise of the left wing in these organizations in 1922-23, the labor party movement, the development of a powerful Communist and left wing bloc in the needle trades and to recall that the campaign for efficiency unionism and the offensive against the left wing goes hand in hand, to establish the connection between these various phenomena.

SINCE as in other countries the official leadership has quit fighting for the interests of the workers, and since the program of the left wing represents both the immediate and needs of the trade unions and the masses, the drive against the unions takes the form of direct struggle against the Communists and the left wing on the part of the government, the capitalists and the official labor leadership.

In Italy the rise of fascism came after years of revolutionary manifestations had shattered the structure of capitalist "democracy."

IN France the bill militarizing the population (sponsored by Paul Boncour, right wing socialist and supported by all parties of the bloc with the exception of the Communists who conducted a campaign against it) the jailing of the most prominent Communist and militant trade union leaders now being carried out, has come after some important Communist parliamentary victories and a strong campaign against French imperialist policy.

We have already seen that in Great Britain the Trade Union mil follows a great swing of the masses to the left.

The first phase of the process of "rationalization"—placing the chief burden of rebuilding and maintaining capitalism on the workingclass and the lower sections of the middle class—which began with the establishment of the Dawes Plan, has about run its course.

It has not solved the important questions of markets and sources of raw materials—it has not been able to abolish the fierce struggle for fields in which to dispose of surplus commodities.

Neither has it toned down class contradictions to any marked degree—legislation like the British Trade bill and the recent Italian Fascist Trade Union act recognize this latter fact by setting up new machinery for suppression of the ever sharpening class conflicts.

IN the United States the rulingclass meets increasingly keen competition in foreign markets (altho this is not of major proportions as yet) and it knows that the reduction of the living standards of the European workers which will follow the extraordinary measures taken by the rulers of Great Britain and the continental countries will intensify this competition.

The official labor leadership in its drive on the left wing is expressing its own fears and serving very well the future interests of American imperialism.

THE reformist trade union leaders of Amsterdam and the Second International who in Italy rendered aid to fascism, the socialist bureaucrats who foisted nationwide militarization upon the French masses and who join with the French imperialists in the denunciation of the Soviet Union and war on the Communists, the British Labor Party and Trade Union Congress officialdom which betrayed the general strike and the miners, and which now refuses to mobilise the workingclass for a struggle against the contemplated destruction of the unions, which denounces and expels Communists and left wingers instead, the socialist bureaucrats who support capitalist rationalization plans and the new colonial demands of the German rulingclass in the interests of the fatherland," the leaders of the American Federation of Labor who are destroying whole unions as in the needle trades in their frenzied efforts to crush all class consciousness out of the labor movement—all are seen to be playing the same game.

The scope of the various anti-labor programs and the extent to which the government itself appears as the main instrument of suppression approximates the degree of internal instability and the extent to which each country is affected by the unfavorable world situation.

(Pending imperialist conflicts, the Chinese liberation movement, other colonial and semi-colonial independence movements, the pressure arising by virtue of the existence of the Soviet Union and the construction of socialist economy within its borders.)

THE conclusions to be drawn from our analysis are:

1.—That the present period of capitalist stabilization has run its course and that new extraordinary measures to prevent additional demoralization and retain such benefits as have been derived from its past efforts are being taken by the capitalists and their governments.

2.—That the new measures have the further purpose of reducing the workingclass to a status where it can no longer threaten effectively the equilibrium of the system.

3.—That this new offensive against the workingclass inevitably will produce gigantic new class conflicts.

4.—That the capitalist system has been able neither to solve the question of class relationships or of markets and sources of raw materials and that the instability of imperialist relationships makes the danger of war of first importance.

5.—That while the British Trade Union Bill and the Mussolini Trade Union Law show the acuteness of the struggle in Europe, there are bound to be repercussions in the United States some of the effects of which are already apparent in the attack on the coal miners, the increasing number of conflicts in the hitherto stable building trades, etc.

We must consider also that recent supreme court decisions like that in the Bedford Cut Stone Company case, which outlaws ordinary trade union activities, and that in the Indianapolis Street Car men's case, under which two union organizers are serving jail terms for trying to form a union; are of a fascist character similar to the British and Italian measures.

6.—That the new offensive against the Chinese liberation movement and the Soviet Union, and the drive on the workingclass and its organizations, are parts of the same campaign—trade union struggles and imperialist politics can not be separated, as the Second Internationalists try to convince workers should be the case. Where any considerable number of workers are involved in any important industry, there is no longer any such thing as a "purely industrial" struggle.

7.—That as in the past this new drive against the workingclass has been heralded by preliminary attacks on the Communists and the left wing by the official trade union leaders or the government or both. (Italy, France, England, the United States.)

a. That in view of this fact we are justified in concluding that consistent attack on a Communist Party in any given country, or in a group of countries, is practically an infallible sign of the preparation for an offensive against the labor movement and the whole working class.

8.—That far from being a matter of concern only to the British workingclass, the Trade Unions Bill is a signal to us in the United States that we must prepare for struggles in which our party and the left wing will have the task of organising the masses for new battles to preserve their organizations and living standards, to increase the power of the unions, to build a labor party—and to defeat the official labor leadership which now leads the war on militant trade unionism and the offensive against the Soviet Union.

A Shakespeare Needed For the Movies, Says Reinhardt

THE Russians are not the only ones who take the movies seriously—who consider that films are not a luxury but an absolute necessity, and therefore the best writers should not hesitate to consider the moving picture as an outlet for their sincere effort. Max Reinhardt, the noted German director, who is widely known as an authority on such matters, takes up the cudgels for the screen, and insists that the moving picture art is only in its infancy, and will develop further when the advanced writers take to the movies to express their views, and at the same time serve as an outlet for their talent.

"Why should not the screen become the instrument of a genius who will be able to write veritable masterpieces for an international audience?" says he. "Why should not a Shakespeare come for the movies? In their time Shakespeare and other great writers were handicapped and had to write plays that were ordered. They had to please certain classes just as scenario writers and directors are doing now. The pinnacle of moving picture art will be attained, however, when a real genius is able to adopt the same subject at an opportune moment to all minds.

"It is not absolutely certain that the genius will be an American, the land where screen art has every advantage of great technical perfection, the most beautiful studios in the entire world and unlimited financial resources. But we must admit that each time that a film artist, no matter in what country, seems to promise to become a genius of the movies, America doesn't hesitate to invite him and to give him the means to achieve his career!"

Professional Patriots

One of the best examples of the work of the professional patriots who, on orders of the Department of Justice, are now engaged in the formation of the I. W. W.-Bolshevik-American Civil Liberties Union.

"PROFESSIONAL PATRIOTS"—a book edited by Norman Hapgood from material assembled by Sidney Howard and John Hearley.

A record of acts of violence by members of the American Legion acting as such, compiled from the press reports and verified by correspondence, was published by the American Civil Liberties Union in 1921. It listed 56 cases up to the close of the year 1920. From that date the record of violence fell off, due to the criticism it aroused and the resentment aroused even among its own membership. There have since been not more than four, of which two were serious.—E. Wilbur Barre in March, 1924, and at Great Bend, Kansas, March 21, 1924. At Great Bend, where a Farmer Non-Partisan League meeting was scheduled, four speakers on the way to it were beaten up, and two of them were tarred and feathered. The two who were beaten and tarred were J. O. Stevic, editor of the Nonpartisan Leader, Carl Parsons, a veteran of the World War, while ex-Senator Boston of Kansas and George Wilson of Oklahoma, who came together in a car, were forced to get out of the car.

At Wilkes-Barre a Lenin Memorial meeting conducted by the Workers Party was broken up at the point of rifles by a crowd of Legion men who marched from their hall for that purpose, and who forced the audience to leave the hall and to salute the American flag. The action of the local post was backed by others throughout the country who wired their approval. The following from Oklahoma is typical:

"Oklahoma City Post No. 35, American Legion, wishes to congratulate you on your recent stand in upholding Americanism, which is the basic principle of our organization. Dispersion of Bolshevik worship strikes a chord in the heart of all true Americans. The American flag is good enough for us. Stay with it.

"Oklahoma City Post, American Legion
By H. Lee Minton, Post Commander."

The Wilkes-Barre Daily Record of January 30, 1924, had a news account reported that:

"Those who entered the local Legion Hall last evening could hear a click of rifles on the indoor rifle range. A large group of Legionnaires exhibited eagerness to become proficient in this art for future emergencies. The rifle range was crowded last evening with ex-service men in quest of rifle practice. This is unusual and attracted the attention of all who entered the building."

Break Up Meetings.

The breaking up of meetings at the instance of the American Legion has been accomplished without violence, by pressure on local officials and hall-owners. The Legion specialized in stopping Socialist meetings addressed by Eugene V. Debs, conducted by Fritz Kreisler, and showings of a film depicting conditions in Russia, entitled "The Fifth Year."

Legion alarmists prevented peace signs being carried in an Armistice Day parade in Boston. A Legion official journal in Sioux City has made libelous attacks on the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom on the basis of information which the local post admitted was furnished by the "General Staff of the United States Army." Loyal Legionnaires joined with the D. A. R., the Reserve Officers Association, the Better America Federation, the National Security League, and the Military Order of the World War in a loud outcry against Frederick J. Libby's appearance before the students of Leland Stanford, Jr., Uuiversity.

As noted above the Legion Chapter at Concord, Mass., attempted, in June 1926, to prevent the New England Fellowship of Youth for Peace from holding a conference there. Eggs, stones and stink bombs were reported among the missiles used without avail in this Legion-inspired attempt to intimidate college students interested in peace. Later the Legion officials who had been most interested in breaking up the student gathering repudiated their participation in the violence. The Legion's propaganda material against the Fellowship of Youth for Peace was supplied by the Industrial Defense Association and the Massachusetts Public Interest League, "composed of a group of women who are jealous of the good name of their state." Mr. Marvin of the New York Commercial also contributed to the attack. According to Brent Dow Allinson, the chairman of the students' conference, the charges made by all the "patriots" were "unproved, unfair, untrue and a baseless slander."

Civil Liberties Union.

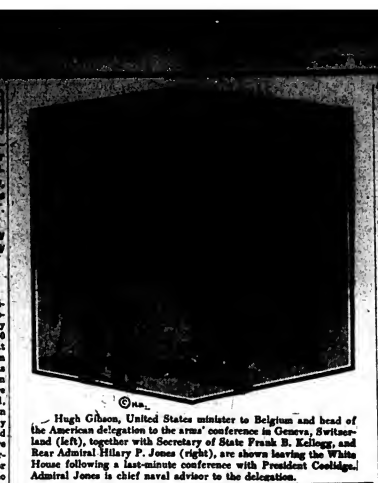
A. Leroy F. Smith of Los Angeles, writing in the American Legion Bulletin for September 22, 1923, under the title "A Nice Little Kitty—with Claws," indulged himself in a page of pleasantries about the American Civil Liberties Uniou, which has a branch in Los Angeles to combat police suppression of radical meetings and the numerous criminal syndicalist prosecutions. The article evidently had the support of the Legion officials. It scored in picturesque language all the principles of free speech and assembly, characterizing the Civil Liberties Union thus:

"The local committee has a number of well-known figures on it, very well known; while the national committee numbers among its members such eminent patriots as William Z. Foster, Rose Schneiderman, Scott Nearing, James A. Duncan (former I.W.W. mayor of Butte), Felix Frankfurter (which means in English Merry Sausage)," etc.

The spectacle of the I.W.W., an anti-political organization, with a mayor, is enough to characterize Mr. Smith's ignorance of public affairs, even overlooking the fact that Mr. Duncan was secretary of the Seattle Central Labor Council and not a resident of Butte.

The spirit behind these evidences of patriotic zeal is not far removed from the Italian Fascisti. Indeed the connection is not fanciful. The Legion invited Mussolini to address its San Francisco convention in 1923. He sent a cordial reply regretting that he was otherwise engaged. National Commander Alvin Owsley, in an interview with the Newspaper Enterprise Association published in various papers served by that agency in January 1923, said:

"If ever needed, the American Legion stands ready to protect our country's institutions and ideals as the Fascisti dealt with the destructionists who menaced Italy!"



"By taking over the government!" he was asked.

"Exactly that," he replied. "The American Legion is fighting every element that threatens our democratic government—soviets, anarchists, I.W.W., revolutionary socialists and every other 'red.' . . . Do not forget that the Fascisti are to Italy what the American Legion is to the United States."

Mr. Owsley's reported statement was never repudiated by him or by other Legion officials.

What's What in Washington

WASHINGTON, June 7.—One very good reason why Secretary Kellogg will not go to Geneva to take the lead in the three-power naval limitation conference is that neither he nor President Coolidge is now giving much support to this Coolidge-Kellogg scheme.

The big thing before the administration, every member of it is made to feel, is the re-election of Calvin Coolidge, for the good of business and the country, this year. True, the balloting will not take place under the law until November, 1928, but the Coolidge organization proposes to devote the summer of 1927 to making Coolidge's third term inevitable.

And naval reduction or limitation, which looked like a good issue a few months ago, looks hopeless as a campaign slogan today. Except for some extraordinary break of luck, the Geneva parley will be a complete failure:

"He's Never Sick at Sea."

That is why, on the day the American naval and diplomatic' delegates and their staffs were embarking at New York for the journey to Geneva to "put an end to naval expansion and naval threats," Calvin Coolidge donned his naval officer's uniform as commander of the fleets of the American nation, and sailed down to the Virginia capes to review 98 ships of war. The cameras were on hand. He tipped up his cap so that the pictures could betray his likeness to the commander of the "Pinafore." Then he walked among his guests, remarking on the muddiness of the water of the Potomac.

The Labor Party members of the Australian Industrial Delegation now studying industrial conditions and wages in this country after a long two months of being shown non-union factories and railroad shops, and being banqueted with the rest of their party by chambers of commerce, began to speak. It seemed that they were enthusiastic Labor Party members, keen for discussion of what Australian labor has done through social legislation, government ownership, elimination of private profit, and no end of heretical things. Miss May Matthews took the first occasion when she was invited to make a speech before working women, to declare that the United States needs a militant working class party and industrial unionism.

Won't Hear Him.

John Valentine, of the Locomotive Engineers of the state of Queensland, told of how the Labor Party in his state had ruled with brilliant success for the past 12 years, steadily improving the economic condition and the legislative safeguards of the workers while the general prosperity of the community forged ahead of that of any other state in the commonwealth. He was ready to talk to any labor audience.

But these Australians found few interested auditors in the American capital. There was no general demand from trade union officials for descriptions of the triumphs of working class effort abroad.

Flour Gold

Panned by JIM SEYMOUR.

First Pan.

For the benefit of those proletarian readers who never see gold except in the minted discs of which they receive sackfuls every payday I announce that flour gold is gold in minute particles. The prospector, sometimes with a pan made for the purpose, but usually with some old frying-pan picked off a dump, washes the goldbearing gravel with infinite patience, removing the dirt from time to time until the bits of gold, being heavier, are collected on the bottom of the pan. He loses, as a rule, as much as he saves, but often—nowadays every year or so—he washes out some fairly heavy gold, and sometimes he gets a nugget.

In this colyum you can expect a little of everything, including some junk hreas that I have to work off somehow. But after all, we are in the United States and brass is all wool and a yard wide. Aimee McPherson, for instance . . . .

Here is a sad world, fellow kickers, and we need to laugh once in a while, so while I'm doining the panning I'll try tb give you now and then something to laugh at. When I succeed that's a nugget, even tho you are only laughing at my attempts to be funny. But don't hope for too many, for nowadays, in order to be really funny, a fellow has to find something more idiotic than the capitalist system, and that isn't easy. Besides, I don't know that I'm such a good searcher, for if I had much of a sense of humor I wouldn't be trying to conduct a colynm. However, hoid the sack.

Till Sheep Do I's Part.

Heretofore the only movie I ever saw that was worth the wear and tear on the seat of my pants was The Last Laugh. But now that White Gold is playing the cheap houses I can add it to my scrawny list. It is a da Mille picture starring Jetta Gondal, who, unlike the brainless babyfaced calendertops that still have a fair monopoly of the business, can really act. And photography is perfect. But I am more interested in the story. For the first time I have seen an American picture that does not end with the sickening moralistic "must" that attempts to convince us that things that are are right because they are. The world always was this way and it always will be. Clutch. . . . Hold it!

In White Gold, whose title refers to the alleged monetary value of a lot of dirty stinking sheep, the husband with the slavesowner psychology is shown as the cur that he is. He does not triumph in the end simply because the law and a rotten economic system have given him a coward's advantage. He remains a cur. He exercised his authority but he levied a heavy toll upon himself: he lost something very beautiful, something that would have prevented his damn fool actions had he been anything but a contemptible property owner and incapable of anything less ignoble than conventional meggotry.

As a professional knocker, because of sheer novelty of the experience, it pleases me to speak a good word for White Gold.

Thus far, the loss is only spiritual, but, unless rectified, will soon be economic and very real. Let us, therefore, hold fast all the more earnestly to the habit of church attendance as the one surviving leg of the stool on which America's greatness rests . . ."

Is this the balance that the powers are always trying to maintain?

The General Membership Meeting

Duties of Party Members in Soviet Union Factories

By KARL REEVE.

MOSCOW.—Before considering the tasks of the various organs of the organizers of the party organization in a Soviet factory, let us take up more definitely the tasks of the party nucleus in the factory as a whole and the general tasks of every member of the party. We may take, as examples from the "Red Proletarian Rivet" Plant, a textile factory located in Moscow, which employs between 1400 and 1500 workers. This factory numbers 147 members and candidates in the party, 81 being candidates, and 180 members and candidates in the Komsomols (Young Communist Leagus). Of the latter, all are full members excepting 15, who are candidates. Of the thirteen persons who joined the party in this nucleus recently twelve were workers and one is an office clerk.

The admission of new members is first approved by bureau of the factory nucleus, then at the general membership meeting of the nucleus, and it finally approved by the rayon (section or county) party committee. Members of the Young Communist League who are transferred to the party are received in the same manner.

THE general membership meeting in this nucleus occurs once or twice a month, some meetings being "closed" when only party members and candidates are present, and others "open" when non-party workers are invited. In this factory there were approximately twenty meetings during the year, about half of them being open meetings. The nucleus has three shifts, 70 per cent of the membership being present on the average. In addition to the matters touched on in the last article, the following questions were taken up, among others,—organization of important campaigns, discussion of the collective agreement to be entered into between the trade union and the administration, the work among the Young Pioneers, and in addition to the usual reports from the bureau and the various committees. Political and educational questions are discussed. I was present at one meeting where the question of the international situation, the threat of war against the Soviet Union by the world imperialists was taken up and many questions were asked. Of course, in these discussions, after the report of a qualified comrade and after the questions, the members frequently express their views in short speeches. Then the reporter of the evening sums up and a suitable resolution is passed by the meeting.

In the Moscow River Factory, referred to above, during the months of March, April and May of this year, the following general membership meetings of the nucleus, among others, were held:—March 16th, subject, reduction of prices in the Soviet Union; April 13, Report of the party fraction in the factory committee of the trade union; April 20, (a) Report of the factory management (Red Director), (b) Results and Prospects of Work Among Women; May 18, report of the nucleus bureau, and re-election of a new bureau (taken from the 3 months plan of work carried out by the nucleus).

THE bureau of the Kamovniki Rayon (section) in Moscow, last fall issued instructions on the duties of members and candidates of the C. P. of the Soviet Union which also gave direction as to the rational use of the time budget. This resolution points out the importance of economising the time of the individual party member and of the organization. It directs the equal distribution of the party duties, as far as is possible, and declares that the work must be conducted systematically. "It is necessary to combat exaggerated plans, the tendency to discuss and solve in one month the greatest possible number of questions and hold the greatest possible number of meetings. The plans of the lower and the leading bodies must be co-ordinated in detail. The leading organizations must refrain from piling campaign upon campaign which should be distributed evenly throughout the year."

THE work of the party must be strictly differentiated from the work of the trade union, co-operative and other non-party organizations, the resolution continues. "The party organizations must refrain from preparing and carrying out all the campaign. . . . While giving the general political line, the party organizations, (the rayon committees and the nuclei) must demand from the Communist fractions in the non-party organizations greater initiative and independence." As many active non-party workers must be drawn into the campaigns as possible. Those comrades failing to properly carry out their party work must be disciplined.

"QUESTIONS should not be discussed at party meetings which may be discussed at non-party meetings." The agendas should be carefully planned in advance, but they must be worked out collectively, the preliminary preparation of the questions and the time budget must not suppress the initiative of the members. Wide discussion of the questions prepared must be allowed. The following suggestions are given for reducing the duration of the general membership meetings, and thus economizing the time of the workers:—to limit the agenda, to carefully prepare it, to allow reporters between 15 and 45 minutes, to limit the meetings to two or a maximum of three hours, to post agenda announcements beforehand, enabling the workers to prepare for the meetings, to open the meetings on time.

OTHER recommendations are that where one person can handle the work, committees should not be appointed. There should not be a number of bodies deciding one and the same question. Questions already decided in practice should not be dealt with again. Long, tedious reports must not be written. "The public opinion of the party organization must be focussed upon this question. Severe self-criticism, free exchange of opinions, a maximum of initiative, criticism in the press, exposal of defects, the popularization of achievements and the resolute carrying out of the decisions adopted—all this is necessary." (This resolution approves the initiative of the nucleus, a study of the manner in which the party nuclei of the Kamovniki rayon were carrying out the decision of the rayon convention on the question of economising the worker's time and developing a rational time budget.)

Note.—Article 3 will describe the structure and functions of the departmental nuclei.

"We Build for Ourselves"

(Laying the foundation stone of the Spinning Factory in Moscow)

A tall textile worker with a very useless face holds the huge plan in his hand. Then a few workers shovel fully symbolical it with bricks to the posts of the wooden platforms, and, like a banner, it is raised above the ground.

That is what our new factory will be like! What a contrast to the old stunted, two-storeyed brick shed of the old Danilovsk factory at the foot of the hills. How grand it all is, how light and airy is this new four-storeyed building of concrete and glass!

The ground is already cleared for the foundations. In a few days the work will begin. By the winter the building will be ready. In a year's time it will be equipped according to the latest technical pattern with the sanitary and hygienic requirements suitable to the demands of the Soviet country, the factory will increase its output of yarn 2½ fold.

This factory will be light and airy. It is reckoned to have a volume of 100,000 cubic metres. The ventilation will be exceptional. In the central buildings will be a huge dressing room, connected with all departments, and there the worker will go straight to his bench without going through other departments or workshops. There will be sufficient couches, lifts and other contrivances to lighten the conditions of labor. This is how the workers build for themselves.

Future Owners.

The whole of the Soviet territory is covered with a network of new metallurgical works, textile factories, mines and petroleum towers. The country is enjoying a universal holiday,—a building holiday! During the laying of the foundation stone of the new factory, the crowd was as gay as on May day or November 7. Huge masses of working men and women stood round the tribune. Children roamed through the crowds.

"Now, you future owners, keep quiet"—they were silenced.

But the "future owners" conducted themselves as owners, found their way through to the very Presidium table, and one of them, clinging to the table, became transfixed there, listening to the words of the orators.

Comrade Kulbyshev, President of the Supreme Council of People's Economy was on the platform. He said that every new workshop built in the U. S. S. R. gave evidence of the possibility of building Socialism in a technically backward country.

"Our country is moving towards that bright goal on behalf of which the October Revolution was accomplished. The workers of the whole world are watching our building work with intense interest. Every new factory increases their belief that socialism is greater than capitalism—that socialism will conquer the world."

On behalf of the CC of the Textile Workers' Union, Comrade Maksimalsky greets the workers of Dmitrovka and the builders of the factory!

New Technique.

"We suffered a great deal through the old, worn out machines," he said. "But we showed that even with these machines we could push forward successfully until we could accrue enough or enough to build new factories. And if the proletariat was able to conquer in the arduous conditions of battle, with what speed will it now be able to advance, equipped as it is, according to the last word in technique."

This dynamic growth was indicated in the figures given at the beginning of the speech of Comrade Deitch, director of cotton trust:

"In 1921, in all the factories belonging to the trust there were working 9,000 workers; that means that 30% of the trade was working. Today 17,000 workers are employed with 72,000 spindles, which means that the trade is working 100%. During the coming years, according to the plan of development of the factory, 29,000 workers will be engaged in the undertakings, with 230,000 spindles."

Comrade Ulanova, a working woman said:

"The merchants also built factories, comrades, but they did not give us joy. They were built by our sweat, the bricks were strengthened by our blood. Now we build for ourselves, we build for our children."

And she called to mind those dark days, when the factories stood deserted,

"They left us broken throughs, we collected rotten potatoes. But though we fed on potatoes, we did not relinquish our hold on the factories, we held on to them for ourselves. Let the bourgeoisie gnash its teeth when it looks at our success; we are not afraid. We shall continue to build factories in order to improve our conditions of life."

Soviet Start.

A square of red brick is leid down on the ground. Inside this square, a five-pointed star had been made out of bricks. The bricklayers in aprons and with smiling faces, gaze with satisfaction on their work. It is excellent.

According to the builders' custom, Comrade Kuibyshev holds in his hand a piece of green bottle glass. He carefully "cements" it in the liquid cement.

"Go on, cement it, Kuibyshev; cement it more carefully," shout the workers, smiling.

Comrade Melnichansky lays the brick, the working men and women following.

The foundatiou is finished.

And from the factory yard there comes the lond "three cheers" of a huge crowd of workers, "We build for ourselves."

An Example of Achievement in the Ruthenberg Drive

By JACK STACHEL, Acting General Secretary District 2, W. C. P.

Last week in one of the reports on the Ruthenberg Drive printed in The DAILY WORKER I stated that Comrade Alfred Loseff had secured 10 new members for the Party in the course of the drive. A few days ago I received the following letter from Comrade Isidore Brodowsky, the secretary of one of the branches in the Bronx.

"Dear Comrade:

A few weeks ago you mentioned about a comrade who brot 10 new members into the Party. It is good work, but I want to report to you that I brot into the Party 30 new members in 3 weeks time and also 80 members into the International Labor Defense. I am not telling these things because I want credit, for what I did is my duty and the duty of every Party member. I report this because I want the other comrades to know about it so that they can make a real effort to do the same. I want this printed as an example of what can be accomplished if we do. I want to tell you that the Ruthenberg Drive will be for me forever, and not only until the 9th of July. Comradely yours—Isidore Brodowsky.

Here is an achievement that not only comrade Brodowsky can feel proud of, but one which the entire Party can be proud of. Comrade Brodowsky is correct. What he did every comrade can do. Not every one can be so successful, but surely every Party member if he makes a real effort can bring new members into the Party in large numbers. And this is further proof by the fact that we have already taken in hundreds of new members in the course of the Ruthenberg Drive. At the same time the great bulk of the membership has not yet made good. Every Party member must secure at least one new member by the 9th of July, the Birthday of Comrade Ruthenberg. If every comrade gets on the job now, this will be accomplished, and we will have doubled the Party membership.

The key to the success achieved by Comrade Brodowsky lies in the fact that he has also secured 80 new members for the International Labor Defense. If we this testifies that he is carrying on widespread propaganda for the campaigns of the Party, that he has no doubt approached hundreds of workers on the issue of Sacco and Vanzetti, on the arrests of the fighting furriers and cloakmakers, and that he understands that in the Ruthenberg Drive is not merely a mechanical or sentimental appeal to the workers to join the Workers (Communist) Party, but that the Ruthenberg Drive is based on the campaigns of the Party. That our Party appeals to the more enlightened and militant workers to join its ranks because it is the leader of the struggles of the American workingclass. If all the comrades approach the drive on this basis as did Comrade Brodowsky they will succeed in broadening the influence of the Party and the left wing and at the same time get new members into the Party. An approach on any other basis will not succeed.

One more thing mentioned in the letter is important. Comrade Brodowsky states that he will always continue the work for the Ruthenberg Drive and not only until July 9th. The Ruthenberg Drive is not merely understands that the task of building the influence of the Party end, to increase the membership is part of the everyday work of every member, and secondly that he understands that the Ruthenberg Drive is an appeal to the American workers in addition to the main campaigns of the Party, an appeal on the basis of what Comrade Ruthenberg stood for—namely against the war, for the building up of the power of the workingclass, that Comrade Ruthenberg was the symbol of the revolutionization of the American working class and its growing consciousness as a class.

The example of Comrade Brodowsky is an example worthy to be strived for by every member of our Party.

Let us have more of such examples. I am sure that there will be many who will try to excel this. But Comrade Brodowsky will not be sorry if they do. And besides Comrade Brodowsky is still on the job.

BELA KUN WARNS AMERICAN LABOR OF PERIL OF WAR

Tells Editor of Daily Worker of Danger

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

(This is the First of a Series of Interviews with Prominent Communists On International Situation—Ed note.)

(Special to The DAILY WORKER.)

MOSCOW, U.S.S.R. (By Mail.)—Bela Kun, head of the Hungarian Soviet Republic during its brief and heroic existence, and one of the most prominent spokesmen of the Communist International, declared to me here:

"The workers of America must not allow themselves to be fooled on the present imperialist plans for a new attack on the Soviet Union. They must be kept awake to the ever present war danger.

Attack Upon Soviet Union

"Opportunism reveals itself in the ever-present tendency to underestimate the danger of the new war against the Soviet Union. There must be no underestimation of this danger.

Bela Kun showed how Hungary was being made a pawn of Great Britain and Italy in the new anti-Soviet War plans. British imperialist schemes against the Soviet Union will be advanced if London can win support and close collaboration of Washington in the attack on the Chinese Revolution. Weakening of Great Britain in the Orient will help blast its plots against the Soviet Union. A huge anti-war campaign in the United States must hamstring Wall Street's ambitions in the Far East, especially the waging of its war on the Chinese masses.

Forty arrests were made on this May Day in Hungary. No May Day meetings of any kind were permitted among the peasants. That is the way the mailed fist of the big bourgeoisie and the great landholders, who now dominate the government, show their power, having taken control from the petit bourgeois elements that won power after the overthrow of the Soviet Republic, a crime against the Hungarian working class in which Herbert Hoover, now secretary of Commerce in Coolidge's cabinet played a prominent role, a counter-revolutionary role of which the American ruling class is proud.

MacDonald Helps Restore Monarchy.

With the help of British capital, and with J. Ramsay MacDonald, while "labor" premier, acting as an intermediary for international loans, we find that the Hungarian terrorist government of Horthy and Bethlen has now enjoyed three years without a deficit. Strenuous efforts are now being made for the saving of private capitalist enterprises, says Bela Kun.

As crowning these achievemeuts of state and private financing, it is planned to call back to power a member of the Hapsburg Family and restore the monarchy.

These monarchist ambitions of the Hungarian terror are not reiished by the neighboring states of Czecho-Slovakia, Austria, Jugo-Slavia and others, that are also necessary to aid the British designs against the Workers' Republic. Thus the Hapsburg intentions have been held in leash by the International capitalists. Yet England and Italy continually fight against this opposition of the little so-called "democratic" states of the Anti-Soviet Block.

Attacks Upon Communists.

This development in Hungary, with the ultra-reaction in the saddle, has resulted in the most vicious persecution of Communists and left wing trade union and farmer elements on the one hand, and brazen compromise with the traitor socialists on the other.

It is estimated that there are 1,000 political prisoners in Hungary today, the outstanding cases being those of Sultan Szamos, organization secretary of the Communist Party, and Matthias Rakosi. The latter is now serving an eight-year prison sentence, but

PICKETS BRING MORE OUT IN BIG WALKOUT HERE

Ben Gold Delighted with Progress Made

Two large picketing demonstrations yesterday, in the morning and the evening, resulted in several additional shops joining the Furriers' strike. Many of the workers joined the picketers in the morning while others left their shops during the day.

Because of this steady increase in the strike ranks, it is impossible for the Joint Board to give complete figures on the extent of the strike. However, it is certain that at least 75 per cent of the workers from Associated shops are out on strike, and there are 329 shops where production has been crippled as a result of the workers' response to the strike call.

"The Joint Board is delighted with the progress of the strike so far," Ben Gold, the manager, said last night; "except for the brutal treatment being given to some of our workers by certain police officers.

Press Charges Against Police.

"We are preparing the affidavits of those workers who have been brutally beaten in the police station during the past few days, and we intend to press charges against those responsible. We are certainly not going to see our union members, whose only crime is picketing, and who are charged simply with disorderly conduct, crippled for life by the beating

'PRAVDA' CHARGES ENEMIES OF USSR INCITED MURDER

Attack on Woikoff Link in Chain of Crimes

(Special to the Daily Worker).

MOSCOW, June 8.—Commenting on the brutal murder of Woikoff, Russian minister to Poland, the Moscow "Pravda" designates it as another link in the chain of crimes against the USSR by her capitalist enemies.

"Soon after Lord Curson's ultimatum, the scoundrels of international fascism murdered another Russian minister, Vorovsky, on Swiss soil, in the 'hallowed' precincts of the League of Nations Congress. Today, almost immediately after the rupture of the Anglo-Soviet relations, Woikoff is murdered."

Inspired by Britain.

"Pravda" points out that these crimes could not be committed without the participation and connivance of those who are sharpshooters in the struggle against the USSR. "The toiling masses of the world," it continues, "well know the bandit role of the British Tory government. The Polish government, which, in spite of repeated warnings from the Soviet government of Russia, accorded hospitality to Russian White Guards and encouraged their intrigues against the Soviet Republic, must bear the full responsibility for the consequences of such a policy.

Workers Will Reply.

"The workers and peasants of the Soviet Union will present their bill of account to Poland. By the murder of Woikoff, the marauders of the world Black Hundreds have added more fuel to the flames which envelop the cause of European and international peace is being burnt.

"The conscious world proletariat, however, will not allow these international incendiaries. Czecovviakhem (Voluntary Air and Chemical Service Organization) has issued an appeal to all toilers of the USSR to start voluntary money collections for a fund to build new airplanes under the slogan: 'Our reply to Chamberlain.' This fund must be the same bulwark in the cause of peace as was the flotilla 'ultimatum' which was created with voluntary collections after the Curzon note."

Held Incommunicado

WILLIAM F. DUNNE, Editor of The DAILY WORKER, is now in the Workhouse, isolated without the right to see anyone from the outside world. In their effort to suppress The DAILY WORKER, the capitalist class of this country sought to isolate the revolutionary elements from the rest of the working class, and thus render our party impotent and powerless.

They will not succeed. They will fail to isolate our editor. They will fail in their attempt to cut off our movement. For there are thousands of strands connecting our revolutionary organ with the workers all over the country. While Bill Dunne is in jail, there are thousands of workers in the mines, mills, factories and farms, who demand the right to shoulder the sentence with him. They demand the right to contribute from their hard earned wages, everything they can spare, not only to free Comrade Dunne, not only to wipe off the books the infamous fine of Five Hundred Dollars which the courts have imposed, but also to successfully appeal our case, and reverse the vicious decision which has been rendered.

They cannot break our ranks. Your contribution is the concrete evidence of your solidarity. Send it along quickly.

SECRETARY DAVIS CITES PLANS FOR WORLD SLAUGHTER

By MICHAEL WEBB.

(Special to The DAILY WORKER)

The wholesale murderers who prepared the last imperialist war, which destroyed 20 million lives and wrecked a continent, are once more busy hatching plans for the next butchery, which threatens to bring even greater disaster to the masses of people the world over.

The United States is not the least of the capitalist powers who are sharpening their bayonets and oiling the motors of their bombing planes.

Smoke-screens of peace-talk are being poured out to delude the workers.

No less than two "model" peace treaties have been published in the past few weeks. Sweet phrases about a "world Locarno" are heard in the press, unaccompanied by explanations that Locarno stands for war, particularly war against the workers and farmers' republic of Soviet Russia.

America has sent these passionate peace-lovers Hugh S. Gibson and Admiral Sillary Jones to the Geneva naval conference, disguised as usual by the fig-leaf of "disarmament."

This is for public consumption. Behind the smoke screens the United States, like all the other capitalist powers, is carefully organizing army, navy and industry for the next "emergency."

Murdered Soviet Union Envoy Gave Whole Life To Revolutionary Cause

M. Woikoff, Soviet Union Minister to Poland who was murdered Tuesday by a young monarchist inspired by British propaganda, was associated with the revolutionary movement since early youth.

He was born at Kerch, in the Crimea, in 1888, and was compelled to flee Russia at the age of 19 for anti-Czarist activities. After studying at the Universities of Paris and Geneva, he returned to Russia in 1917 and joined the Communists after the October Revolution. He was elected Food Commissar of the Ural District.

Woikoff was appointed Director of the Central Union of Cooperative Societies in 1919 and later became a member of the Collegium of the Peoples' Commissariat of Foreign Trade. In 1924 he was named Minister to Poland.

Party Members Asked to Attend an Important Meeting Sat. at 10 a. m.

This meeting is called by the District Executive Committee for the purpose of taking immediate action on one of the most important problems of the party.

CHIANG RESUMES REIGN OF TERROR; 80 ARE EXECUTED

BULLETIN.

WUHAN, June 8.—The reactionaries in Peking are panic-stricken over the defeats of Chang Tso-lin. The chamber of commerce has decided to organize a volunteer corps to defend the merchants' interests. The merchants detest the approaching Nationalists but dread mostly the raiding and pillaging of the defeated northerners in case they decide to abandon the city.

The British general, Duncan, and four members of the general staff of the foreign troops in Shanghai have left for Tientsin, and several regiments of foreign troops have been sent there.

SHANGHAI, June 8.—Chiang Kai-shek has resumed his reign of terror in the lower Yangtze Valley with the suppression of a score of labor unions and the execution of eighty labor leaders in the vicinity of Kiukiang.

He is carrying on a vigorous labor-smashing campaign in his bid for the support of the imperialists and the northern war lords. Labor and peasant unions through the Yangtze Valley are opposing him and an armed revolt at an opportune moment is not unlikely.

IMPERIALISTS CONTINUE TERRORIST TACTICS AGAINST THE SOVIET UNION

Poland Responsible for Woikoff's Murder; British Provocation

MOSCOW, June 8.—The latest step in the campaign of terrorism that white guardists are waging against the Soviet Union with the approval and support of the imperialist powers was taken today when two persons were killed and twenty-six seriously injured by the explosion of a bomb at a Communist Party meeting at Leningrad.

The bombers escaped, firing revolvers as they fled from the scene of the explosion. Militia surrounded the building shortly after the explosion and extinguished the flames after a great deal of difficulty.

Izvestia Blames Britain

Branding the British tory government as the real perpetrator of the murder of M. Woikoff, Soviet Minister to Poland, the Izvestia, official Soviet organ says:

"This is not the first time that international tension has been the signal for terrorist action against Soviet Union representatives. As in 1923 after Curzon's ultimatum, Vorovsky was the victim of the feeling created by hostile attacks against the U.S.S.R., so Woikoff today is the victim of the situation resulting from the rupture of Anglo-Soviet relations."

Implying that the Polish Government has allied itself with the British tory government in Britain's unofficial war against the Soviet Union, the Izvestia, continues, "The Polish Government is also responsible for the murder because, notwithstanding the Soviet Union's repeated demands for measures against the Russian monarchists in Poland, it connived in their activities.

"London has become a place where it is possible to get a permit for any anti-Soviet crime," the Izvestia adds.

Masses Indignant

A storm of indignation has broken out in Moscow and police are compelled to guard the Polish embassy from possible attacks by indignant workers.

Soviet Union authorities have declared a fortnight's mourning for M. Woikoff by all Soviet officials at home and abroad. The body of the murdered envoy will be taken to Moscow tomorrow by A. P. Rosengols, former Soviet Charge d'Affaires at London, who was with Woikoff when he was shot.

Nail British Lie

A vigorous denial of the British statement that the murdered Minister was connected with the execution of the Czar was made by Tass, official news agency of the Soviet Union. Woikoff was Soviet Food Commissar in the Ekaterinburg district at the time of the Czar's death and had

WHITE TERROR KILLS ANOTHER SOVIET OFFICIAL

Murders Near Minsk Third in Series

MOSCOW, June 8.—Murderous plots against Soviet officials continue, with all the earmarks of organized monarchist terror.

The Soviet foreign office was notified from Minsk tonight that Chief Opinsky, of the white Russian secret police, and his chauffeur were assassinated and two aides seriously wounded. Meagre information states that Opinsky and party were on the way to Minsk from Danovitchi, near the Polish frontier, with a suspected Polish spy, Lieut. Jani, who was arrested last night on the Russian soil.

The party was riding on a motor handcar on the railroad track when a gang of monarchist secret agents opened fire from ambush.

The assailants, as well as the spy, escaped.

Occurring at virtually the same hour as the Leningrad bomb outrage, the first of its kind in seven years, and following the assassination of Ambassador Woikoff at Warsaw, the Soviet officials are convinced that assassination plots are being hatched outside of Russia, seeking to provoke internal and external Soviet complications.

Jail 30 Monarchists.

MOSCOW, June 8.—Thirty monarchists have been arrested at Vilna and seven at Warsaw charged with complicity in the assassination of Ambassador Woikoff.

The prisoners include Gorlow, representative of Grand Duke Nicolai, and several former czarist generals. The assassin, Kowerda, is formally charged with being a member of a secret Russian monarchist organization operating in Europe and America, and which employed the Anglo-Soviet rupture as a signal for terrorist acts against Soviet representatives.

Tie More Workers Up With Stock Purchases

The United States Steel Corporation announced yesterday that under the "profit-sharing" plan, common stock of the corporation to the amount of 100,000 shares will be offered to employes at $122 a share. Subscriptions will be received until July 16.

In 1926, the corporation distributed 74,351 shares of stock to employes at $135 a share; in 1925 the price was $125 a share; in 1924 the stock was at $100 a share and in 1921 at $61 a share.

CHAPTER X.

Shop Nuclei Function.

SHOP nuclei must become organs of the shop committee, which is the only part of their fighting for better conditions, with their membership. They must also be able to explain any decisions which the shop nuclei should establish contact with the workers in the shops, which are not yet drawn into the trade unions, whether they be for mass demonstrations, election campaigns, and for greater and more decisive political struggles.

There are many special questions that the shop nuclei have to do collective work. The fact that they are organized instils functioning in daily contact with masses of workers and in intimate contact with their every-day conditions becomes ripe, to set up the necessary organization machinery by forming committees in the shops representing the various departments and all of the crafts. The question of a possible strike must always be considered in connection with any campaign for organization of the unorganized workers in the shops.

Naturally the work of shop nuclei are of a different nature within light industries and heavy industries and particularly in this true with regards to our campaign for organization of the unorganized. Within the light industries it is often necessary to work on the basis of the marked craft divisions existing and directly through the trade unions. In the heavy industries on the other hand which is practically entirely unorganized it is hardly possible to do effective organization work except on an industrial basis. Within organized industries generally speaking our campaigns also take a different character as our work there is to a great extent carried on through the unions.

Our slogan for a Labor Party can be made an effective one in the shops and should be connected with all the struggles obtaining. Many experiences can be used to expose the deal given to the workers by the capitalist parties. During election campaigns in particular the needs of the workers in the shops should be made the issues of the campaign and independent political action by the workers proposed. For the actual establishment of a Labor Party, the unions must become the main organizational basis. The Labor Ticket and labor demands can always be emphasized and when such can be put forward, support of the workers in the shops secured.

The campaign for protection of foreign born workers has a direct bearing on the conditions of the working class as a whole and can arouse wide-spread support. The anti-alien bills are bills against the workers and every shop nuclei become a blacklist system of the employers and their government and should be so emphasized. In the shops national and racial discriminations also exist. The only effective method of combat is complete class solidarity and that is the basis of our campaign.

Our campaigns for our Party press is a constant one and should be brought into the shops. To get the full benefit of this campaign, shop nuclei should always have regular correspondence to Party papers. A reporter should be selected for that purpose, but other comrades should supply the material and when the stories appear, the Party paper should be sold in front of the shop. In this manner the Party paper becomes the mouth-piece and the champion of the workers in the shop and becomes an integral part of all our activities.

In all of our campaigns, wherever possible, factory gate meetings should be arranged during noon-hours addressed by Party Speakers with Party literature to be at hand. It is, of course, preferable that these meeting take up concretely the issues of the workers in the particular shop.

Politicians of Illinois Make New Move to Pry Smith Into U. S. Senate

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 8.—Legislative wheels were set in motion here today in demand of the United States Senate the seating of Col. Frank L. Smith as senator from Illinois.

Rep. Reed Cutler of Lewistown, Republican floor leader, introduced a bill in the House providing for the appointment of a commission of four, one Republican and one Democratic senator and one Republican and Democratic house member, to go to Washington and demand of the Senate the constitutional rights of Illinois to representation in that body.

Germany Not Affected By Anglo-Soviet Break; Scorn Tory Propaganda

BERLIN, June 8.—There will be no change in the present relations between Germany and Soviet Russia.

This was decided today after the conference between Dr. V. Tchitcherin and Dr. Gustav Stresemann, the foreign ministers of the two countries.

It is understood that possibility of more active trade between Soviet Russia and Germany was the major topic of discussion.

Mississippi Rises Fast; Kills Replanted Grain

MEMPHIS, Miss., June 8.—Secretary of Commerce Hoover and the heavy taxation who expected to begin their work of relief in the Mississippi flood area will have to go into debt, slavery will have to postpone the deed.

The merciless Mississippi River and its tributaries today continued to rise rapidly, pouring millions of gallons of overflow waters onto farmlands for the second time this year and spelling ruin for the Mississippi Valley farmers who have in the face of disaster courageously reestablished themselves after the greatest flood in history.

Raises New Crops.

Passing the flood stage today, the great river started emptying through the gaps left in levees by the first disaster and washing away crops planted since the first flood of the year receded.

Refugee camps throughout the Mississippi Valley, closed after refugees were able to return to their homes, are now reopened.

No Repairs.

Columbus, Ky., is again under water. Families who have returned to their homes during the past two weeks at Columbus are again leaving their domiciles to the mercy of the mad river. A fifty foot stage, predicted for Columbus by Friday, will inundate the entire city. Fifty thousand acres of farmlands, 85 per cent of which was already in cultivation with crops growing rapidly, will be flooded in Lee County, Ark. from the break in the Mississippi levee at Whitehall, which has not been repaired.

Two Killed in Outrage Against U. S. S. R.

nothing to do with any warrant ordering his execution.

The Soviet Government last night handed Poland a sharp note protesting that the assassination of Soviet Ambassador Wolkoff at Warsaw was due to Poland's inadequate protecting of the Soviet envoy, and the failure to curb anti-Soviet plots.

The Soviet government is withholding further action until the details of the murder are officially known.

Hold Poland Responsible

The note, which is signed by M. M. Litvinoff, reads:

"Poland will be held responsible for any assassination. The Government of the Soviet Union considers this an unprecedented criminal act, bound up with a whole series of acts aimed at destroying friendly relations of the Soviet Union abroad and creating a direct menace to peace.

"The raid on the Peking Embassy, the blockade of the consulate at Shanghai, the police attack on the Soviet Trade Delegation in London and the provocatory rupture of diplomatic relations on the part of Great Britain—all this series of acts has unloosed the activities of terroristic groups of reactionaries, who, in their blind hatred of the working class, are seizing the weapon of political murder.

"The Union Government also sees in the murder of the Minister the result of the Polish Government not having taken necessary measures against the criminal activities in Polish territory of Russian counter-revolutionary terroristic organizations, which are particularly dangerous to the cause of peace in the present intense international situation.

"The Soviet Government has called the attention of the Polish Government to the activities of White Guard terrorists repeatedly and has warned the Polish Government of its responsibility for the provocatory criminal acts of these elements.

"Consequently, while indignantly protesting, and holding the view that the Polish Government cannot repudiate responsibility for what has happened, the Soviet Government reserves the right to revert to the question after receipt of fuller and more exhaustive details bearing on the crime."

Recall Vorovsky Murder

The Foreign Office is intensely provoked, and firmly believes that Great Britain is directly responsible for the assassination. It is recalled that M. Vorovsky was murdered in Switzerland after Lord Curzon's note to the Soviet Government. Now Wolkoff is murdered following the break in relations between the Soviet Union and Britain, according to the Foreign Office's attitude.

Wolkoff was an old Bolshevik, having joined the party when he was exiled by the Czar in 1906.

Ex-Police Chief of Canton Indicted in Killing of Editor

CANTON, O., June 8. — Former chief of police, S. A. Lengel, was indicted by the grand jury here late today on a first degree murder charge in connection with the assassination of the late Don R. Mellett, editor of the Canton Daily News.

Lengel is one of a group charged with joining in a conspiracy to murder the editor. Mellett had been exposing vice conditions in his paper the existence of unique graft arrangement between the Canton police and owners of brothels.

Members of Klan.

Three ex-four members, including two city detectives, have already been convicted of the crime. One of them has confessed and involved various other members, including the former chief of assistance.

Most of the accused policemen were members of the Ku Klux Klan.

Levine May Get Into Hot Water for Raking In Shekels on Stamps

WASHINGTON, June 8.—Charles A. Levine hasn't got Lindbergh's courage or personal charm, but when it comes to raking in the shekels he has Lindbergh trimmed a hundred different ways.

Levine is reported to have sat white-faced in the Columbia when it left on its transAtlantic journey. In spite of his fright, however, he received enough of the shrewdness which netted him a couple of million dollars in war-profiteering to take along a packet of mail. The stamps on the letters will net him, if he sells them, as he probably will, large sums of money. (Most of the letters Levine addressed to himself.)

Levine's business acumen may land him in hot water, however. His action, according to postal authorities, is illegal.

Levine's actions formed the subject of a Cabinet discussion yesterday. The discussion related to what recognition, if any, the Government will give Levine for his part in the flight.

Congress to Meet Month Earlier, Says Coolidge

WASHINGTON, June 8.—As a concession to those advocating an immediately special session of Congress, President Coolidge has intimated that it will be called in November, a month before it is scheduled to reconvene.

"Flood legislation" is the reason given for the earlier session, despite the fact that the administration has persistently ignored reports that Congress be called to take up measures for preventing a similar tragedy.

Contractor's Greed Kills Two in Fall of Heavy Scaffold

Two workmen were killed and two were seriously injured today when they fell seven floors down an elevator shaft in a building being demolished at the corner of Park Place and Church St. Charges of manslaughter may be levelled against contractors responsible for the needless accident.

The scaffold loaded with bricks, dropped from the sixth floor to the basement. The other men escaped injury by grabbing the railing of the elevator shaft in the shaft.

The dead are Max Stasuk, forty-three, of 237 East Third St., and Paul Allenick, thirty, of Hicksville, L.I.

The injured, whose names were not learned, were taken to the Broad St. Hospital.

The two men who escaped injury are Mike Kranjluk, of 372 Powell St., Brooklyn, and Samuel Lukianne, of 160 Thaford Ave., Brooklyn.

Police took Abraham Green, the foreman, into custody for questioning.

The building is being demolished to make way fur the new Eighth Ave. subway.

Alienists Can't Decide Whether Term in Prison To Drive Carroll Crazy

WASHINGTON, June 8.—Earl Carroll was taken to Atlanta penitentiary today, in spite of the warnings of physicians, who nevertheless could not agree as to just how much danger there might be in a prison term.

Two general practitioners and two nerve specialists have examined Carroll in Greenville. One nerve specialist reported that he found "no positive evidence of mental disease," and said that Carroll's mental and physical condition would not interfere with his removal to Atlanta. He added, however, that Carroll's nervous, excitable make-up might be endangered by confinement in prison.

A general practitioner said he found Carroll depressed and in a highly emotional state. This interfered with his nutrition, but "his physical condition is entirely normal," he added. "There is no indication of psychosis." The physicians warned that prison might cause insanity.

Thirty aviators have unofficially entered the air dash, it was revealed today. Competition for the $50,000 prize, which is being raised in San Francisco, and which will be augmented by an additional $25,000 offered by James Dole, Hawaiian "Pineapple King," has attracted aviators from all over the country. It is expected that the flight will develop into a speedway air race that may never be duplicated.

Why the Marines were on the Atlantic

The advertised joint maneuvers of the Army and Navy in New England and off the coast, now in progress, are the most ambitious of their kind ever undertaken by the United States. In a large measure they are a rehearsal for the part of our country in the coming war for the control of the world, and the conduct of the armed forces, as well as considerable equipment and ammunition used for the War College and War Game maneuvers, are identical with, in kind and in quantity, that which, in general mobilization plans, will form the detailed and coordinated for the American War College and the conduct of larger operations. The creation of a basis and give great momentum to a wide-spread preparedness propaganda and activities particularly in relation to the Atlantic.

To protect its unscrupulously and arrogantly acquired economic supremacy and to enable it to further weaken its present and potential rivals so as to bring them more completely under its domination, American Imperialism has set out to develop a military strength that will be enabled to successfully fight, if necessary, even against combined armies and navies of a number of countries who, due to the growth and crowding of American Imperialism, may desire it wise and necessary to temporarily reconcile their own differences and contradictions long enough to give military attention to the curbing of the limitless appetite of the giant that threatens to eventually swallow them all.

The propaganda for which the present maneuvers are paving the road, vantageous naval basis of which will enable American imperialism to fight on both coasts with equal advantage. It is intensely desirous to prepare for such an eventuality, particularly since Britain, disappointed at America's Chinese policies, is again making gestures at an alliance with Japan.

There was a time, not so long ago, when the ambitions of American Imperialism did not extend beyond Latin America. It was then quite content to limit its protective program to the Pacific where it has obtained most advantageous naval basis of which Honolulu is the most important. But now, not only did it come into frictional contact with Japan and particularly with Britain in China but it has via the Dawes' plan, the loan to Italy, the pressure of its war loans, etc., entered the very front door of its European competitors; to say nothing of having financially annexed Canada and at least partially other British dominions.

This development of American dominance calls for a gigantic naval and military preparation orientated both on the Pacific and the Atlantic. And since the Pacific has already received adequate attention and fortification, the large scale naval maneuvers usually conducted on the Pacific have been transferred to the Atlantic. In a word, the military eye of American Imperialism has been focused upon Europe. And the spectacular front-paged maneuvers afford an excellent medium with which to attract the public ear to propaganda for preparedness on the Atlantic.

It matters but little what conclusions the War Department arrives at as a result of these maneuvers, one thing is reasonably certain and that is that the American people will be told in most skilful sentiment-moulding language that unless great preparations are undertaken at once, there is grave danger that some foreign foe will come and steal New York from under our very noses. Many will be made to believe this not as a remote possibility, but as an eventuality

FIRST AIRCRAFT HAVE CONQUERED ATLANTIC

In view of the extreme newspaper hysterics over the trans-Atlantic flights of Lindbergh, Chamberlin and Levine, the above map is interesting. It shows that the Atlantic has been crossed by airships no less than nine times before Lindbergh's flight. The first trip ever was by Commander Albert Reade, U. S. Navy, but was not a non-stop flight. Reade went from Newfoundland to the Azores, May, 1919, then on to England.

Two British officers, Capt. John Alcock and Lieut. Arthur Brown made the first non-stop flight, in June of the same year. In 1922 the Portuguese pilots, Captains Sacadura and Coabiate flew over the Canary Islands, Cape Verde, Brazil route, a way to cross the Atlantic with two stops, but blazing the trail which the fascist propagandist, De Pinedo, claimed so much credit later, in 1927, for following. De Pinedo departed a little from the example of his predecessors, and flew two-thirds of the way over land. Others who have crossed are Smith and Nelson, 1924. Ramon Franco, Spanish, flew over the Cape Verde route in 1926. Two dirigibles have also crossed, the British R-34 and the German (later American) ZR-3.

SECRETARY DAVIS DETAILS PLANS FOR NEXT WORLD SLAUGHTER; TELLS INDUSTRIAL POWERS

pect were made by Secretary of War Davis yesterday at the annual convention of the National Electric Light Association at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

The Secretary discussed primarily the mobilization of the power industry in war time, but he made it clear that this mobilization was only part of a vast scheme involving the whole of industry.

Concrete plans for the next war are being worked out. Some of them have already been adopted. Captain, according to these plans, is to "play its role," but Secretary Davis took good care to make it clear that profits will not be reduced under any circumstances.

14 Billion in Two Years.

The power of mobilizing industry in wartime is vested by law in the War Department. During the last imperialist war, the government spent fourteen billion dollars from June 1917 to April 1919. Of this sum, twelve billion was spent on war supplies, although the total value of manufactured products in the United States at that time was only 62 billion.

Secretary Davis declared that prior to the imperialist war the United States was without an "adequate plan of national defense." The General Staff, organized in 1903, was small and restricted in its activities. In 1920 the National Defense Act was passed by Congress, increasing the scope and powers of the General Staff, and authorizing the War Department to organize industry on a war basis.

The National Defense Act provides for seven supply branches. A war effort on a major scale, Secretary Davis said, involves the supplying of 35,000,000 articles, made up of some 700,000 different items of every conceivable kind, and in quantities running into many millions.

A general mobilization plan has been drawn up, he said. This plan aims to do away with the competition among industrialists which characterized the last war. In the next war the War Department plans to allocate certain facilities to certain agencies of the government, and to get them to accept schedules of production.

Transportation.

Two years ago the War Department presented to the railroad owners a tentative plan for operating the railroads in war, Secretary Davis said. This plan has been developed by the Department in collaboration with the railroads and has been approved by President Coolidge.

The plan provides that the railroads shall not be taken over by the government "unless the emergency was such that in the opinion of the President that step was necessary in order to insure the efficient prosecution of the war." Should it be necessary for the government to take over the railroads the President will appoint an executive assistant, who will in turn be assisted by a committee of railroad presidents nominated by the Association of Railroad Executives. This plan was formally approved by the [illegible] tact with the organization of railway owners (American Railway Association).

Protect Capitalists.

During the last war, the Secretary said, the power industry caused some worry. In certain areas there was a shortage of power. The Council of National Defense appointed a committee to investigate the power situation. Later this committee became the Power Section of the War Industries Board, which conducted the industrial end of America's war activities. The Secretary reassured the delegates that their industry will not be nationalized.

"In time of war," he said, "the national energies must not be taken out of the hands of the private agencies, experienced in their case, and put into the hands of a gigantic official machine. Such a machine could not manage them as effectively. Private initiative, energy, and resourcefulness must not be thrown aside and the vital and complicated processes of production and transportation lowered."

However, a plan has been devised for a certain amount of control. The chief engineers of the army in conjunction with the National Electric Light Association keep an up-to-date survey of the power facilities in the United States. As a result of this plan the War Department has invaluable information on the subject and knows just where surplus power is located.

Low Wages.

Secretary Davis' speech did not touch on the role of the workers and farmers in the next war. He was talking on a limited subject to a group of power owners. He did however, emphasize that wages will not be "too" high. It is a sure thing that there are elaborate and specific plans for drafting workers and farmers into the military and naval forces that will "defend" the United States in the next war for markets and investments.

It would be interesting to know whether the American Federation of Labor, like the railroads, [illegible] and power companies, has entered into some kind of agreement with the War Department for the industrial mobilization of those workers who will not be in uniform, but will remain in the factories and plants to carry on production.

Bigger and Better Wars.

The experience of the last imperialist blood-bath has taught us that such preparations as Secretary Davis outlined are not made in vain. A program of "national defense," is always advertised to the masses as the best way to prevent war. It has never yet prevented a war. It cannot prevent a war. Its whole purpose is to prosecute war, to make the next war a "bigger and better" war than ever.

The workers and farmers of America must watch this steady march of the capitalist governments, their own included, on the road to war.

They must take the most energetic measures against the looming danger of the most terrible war disaster [illegible]

Chile, Too, Has "Red" Documents; Owe Many Millions to Britain

SANTIAGO, Chile, June 8.—In an effort to ape the tactics of Great Britain whose position as her overlord is increasingly evident, local officials have also been "discovering" documents similar to the forgeries concocted during the raid on Arcos, Ltd.

In the present instance mysterious "letters" said to have been received from the Arcos House are declared by the officials to have been found on the person of Teodoro Toro, a Communist newspaper man who had been jailed following a raid on his home here.

BELA KUN WARNS AMERICAN WORKERS CAPITAL PLOTS A WORLD-WIDE SLAUGHTER FOR THEM

Socialist [illegible] with it a life sentence, [illegible] that he was a People's Commissar in Hungary during the Soviet days. Another personal victim is Stephen Vagi, of the Socialist-Labor Party, which consists of elements that have broken away from the Socialist Party.

The socialists have been the best allies of the fascists in the war on the Hungarian trade unions, just as the Thomasites, the MacDonalds and even the Purcells give support to the Baldwin government, especially giving it aid in the latest parliamentary attack on the trade unions.

Socialists Split Unions.

Expulsions of militant sections of the trade unions where socialists are in control of the national organizations are increasing. This is testimony to the fact that the influence of the Communists is growing in the unions. The socialists have split the miners' union and they have acquiesced in the government's dissolution of the railroad workers' organization. The socialists have also given their pledge to the Horthy-Bethlen government that they will not carry on propaganda work among the discontented peasantry. This leaves the Communists and the Left Socialists as the only champions of the oppressed workers on the land.

This is merely an echo of the agreement reached between the Horthy terror in 1922 with the socialists, that provided for an acceptance of the fascist regime by the socialist reaction with a pledge not to oppose it.

The publicity given this vicious compact at the time caused quite a scandal in the Second (Socialist) International. A special Committee of the International of traitors, however, appointed to probe this unheard of treason even in the second international, white-washed the Hungarian socialists by declaring that they were faced with "an exceptional situation." But since then the practice of the Hungarian socialists has become the practice of the second international, another outstanding case being the treason of D'Aragona, who has joined in the declaration for the dissolution of the General Trade Union Federation and surrender to the Mussolini terror.

The Communists in Hungary are especially strong among the coal miners, the leather workers and the agricultural workers, declares Bela Kun.

The development of the power of Hungarian fascism, its consolidation and stabilization, depends entirely on the future of British Imperialism. England prepares its new war against the Soviet Union, and the Hungary of Horthy is but a pawn in this campaign, Bela Kun points out.

Bela Kun declares that not only great masses of the workers and peasants oppose this new attack on the Soviet Union, but they are supported by sections of the petit bourgeoisie. Recently even a conservative paper [illegible] that no one would follow [illegible] Horthy-Bethlen heroism in the [illegible] War, in which the orders would [illegible] from London.

Prepare For War.

The British-Italian grip on Hungary forbade the manufacture of munitions and arms in Hungary. But these prohibitions are being withdrawn, Horthy's Hungary is now aiding in the shipment of arms and supplies for attack on the Soviet Union. Compulsory military training has been established in order to bring the professional army up to war standards of requirements. Reports of persistent revolts against this new form of conscription pour in continually. There are numerous desertions from the army by the peasant youth, an element of disintegration.

"Conditions are such in Hungary at the present time," declares Bela Kun, "that the people will not support a war against the Soviet Union for long. It is generally realized that the Horthy-Bethlen regime is in the hands of Great Britain and Italy."

The two pretenders to the throne of this British-dominated Hungary are Prince Otto, whose mother, the Empress Zita, is now in Spain, and Archduke Albrecht, son of the Archduke Friedrich, the generalissime of the Hungarian armies during the world war. Both pretenders are of the House of Hapsburg, hated because of its 400 years of oppression of the Hungarian masses. The extreme monarchists are for Prince Otto. Premier Bethlen vascillates between both. It is declared that it would not be difficult, under British and Italian pressure, to force a compromise between the two.

Just as the defeat of the British general strike and the miners' struggle that followed, released the strength of British imperialism for its present war on the Chinese revolution, just so will victory in the Far East give the British reaction new strength to build its power to attack the Soviet Union.

Must Be On Our Guard.

Bela Kun then points out that an aggressive attack by American workers and farmers on the imperialist designs of the United States government in the orient would help [illegible] weaken any proposed Anglo-American alliance in the Far East, which helps cripple the British bandits.

"Everything possible, therefore, should be done by the workers in America," declares Bela Kun, "to develop the war against the war. The whole organization in China, growing out of the treason of Chiang Kai-shek, makes the thieving designs of Great Britain in China, so much easier of execution. It is the duty of the Communist Party in America to fight against any underestimation of the war danger. America's workers must do everything in their power to prevent the collaboration between the imperialists of the United States and Great Britain in China, that paves the way for the new war on the Workers' Republic."

Lowden's Hat is in the Ring

Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, and one of Elbert H. Gary's favorites at the 1920 convention of the republican party, has publicly announced that he is a candidate for the nomination for president of the United States. That this son-in-law of the scabby Pullman millions has long been a candidate, is known to all who have watched his endeavors to secure a political platform by preying upon the distress of the impoverished farmers of the Middle-West. The formal announcement only confirms what was known.

The medium through which the announcement was transmitted to the public is as interesting as Lowden himself, who was barred from the nomination in 1920 because he was caught stealing votes in the state of Missouri and had to yield to a dark horse who proved to be Warren G. Harding, the political protege of the notorious crook and political swindler, Harry M. Daugherty, chief of the Ohio gang of looters of the public domains. Mr. Lowden's candidacy was announced through Mr. Harvey Ingham.

Ingham is to replace Mr. Ingham. He hails from Algona, Iowa, where he was the junior partner of a very able country journalist, Bob Warren. Ingham, after the retirement of Warren, joined the ranks of those petty prostitutes of Iowa country journalism who sold out to the railroads, particularly the Northwestern, when investigations of their corrupt practices was the order of the day. So well did he serve his masters that he increased considerably his fortune. With another budding publisher, named Gardner Cowles, from the same town, he invaded the newspaper field in the capitol city, Des Moines, becoming proprietor of the Register and Leader, the oldest and most powerful paper in the city. Under the management of this worthy pair of mid-west go-getters the paper became the bulwark of reaction, supporting every vicious measure against labor and the farmers.

Ingham's support of Lowden only confirms our conviction that this millionnarie labor-hater and briber of the electorate is the agent of the railroads, the harvester trust, the elevator and flour trust, and the other predatory combinations that prey upon the farmers. He represents the same interests in the republican party that caused the Bull Moose split in 1912, but he will not be able to repeat the performance of Roosevelt, for the simple reason that big capital plays a much greater role in controlling the destinies of this economic group than in 1912.

If the official leaders of the American Federation of Labor were anything other than lackeys of the capitalist class, they would utilize the present political situation to launch a party of labor that would strive to consolidate into a powerful movement the discontent of the masses of workers and farmers of the country and enter the campaign against the parties of capitalism.

Being agents of the identical forces that dominate the old parties they constantly betray the workers and farmers. Only the Workers (Communist) Party carries on a systematic campaign for the creation of a labor party that will also defend the interests of the exploited masses of the United States in industry and on the farms.

A Base for Bombing Planes in California.

An announcement by the assistant secretary of war, F. Trubes Davidson, is to the effect that his recent visit to California was in connection with the army plan to make that state the home of a bombardment wing of the air service, consisting of 27 bombers, 48 pursuit planes and an observation and photographic unit. The pursuit planes will be stationed at Rockwell field, near San Diego and the bombers at March field, near Los Angeles.

The geographical position of these bases reveal their political and military implications. They will serve as points from which to hurl death and destruction into Mexico in case that nation cannot be browbeaten and swindled into subserviency to the oil trust, the Guggenheim mineral bandits, and Hearst's land interests. It is also significant inasmuch as military and naval activity on the Pacific coast intensifies in direct proportion to the extent that American imperialism becomes more deeply involved in the Far East and the antagonisms between the great powers become more intense.

Such preparations for impending slaughters of the working class of various countries must be viewed with alarm and anti-imperialist agitation everywhere must be intensified to the utmost in order to expose the foul conspiracies of the political agents of Wall Street, the armor plate trust, the ammunition trust, the aircraft trust against the working class, who will be called upon to sacrifice themselves as cannon fodder in another war that their capitalist exploiters may become still more wealthy and powerful.

An interesting sidelight on Mr. Davidson's return from Dayton, Ohio, on a Fokker plane, is the presence in the party of the vicious and ignorant Tammanyite and labor skate, Peter J. Brady, president of the federation bank and trust company, which dramatizes the role of such creatures as labor spies for Wall Street's government.

The Farce of Referring Disputes to the League of Nations.

Albania, as the vassal of Italian fascism and British imperialism, has applied to the league of nations for a review of its dispute with Jugoslavia. Italy consents to a review of the specific incident of the arrest by the Albanian government of a member of the Jugoslavia diplomatic staff, but sets the limits of the investigation. Mussolini refuses to permit the league to take up the broad question of the Trianon treaty which delivered Albania to Italy as a base for operations against Jugoslavia.

Thus again the inability of the league to defend the interests of small nations is manifest. In all the league's history there is not a single instance of a decision involving an imperialist power being settled any other way than in favor of the dominant imperialist groups in the league council. It is an instrument for legalizing the pillaging of small nations by the great powers and its impotence to impartially review the grievances of these countries is flagrant in the extreme.

An Apology for Sex Anarchism Disguised as Marxism

By E. B. VEDA

[illegible] Modern Quarterly," (June-September, 1927) carries an article entitled, "Marx, Engels and Lenin," by no less a person than Bertrand Russell, the well known English author. According to a most charitable distortion of Marxism the article is a low apology for the "revolutionary" politicians and quotes at length from Marx in order to prove that the "revolutionary" DAILY WORKER keeps its columns so sweet and clean for its young and tender revolutionary readers as the Sunday School Times."

THE "revolutionary politicians" (as we are disdainfully called) follows along in the footsteps of the heroic battles in the realm of treatment prevailing in modern journalism, while the real revolutionary proletarian (as distinguished from us) "is no doctrinaire fanatic, trying to live and force others to live, Puritan-fashion by rules and regulations; he is struggling to break away from those which he has been bound—and find new ways of living. . . . He fights to express his life." (Emphasis in original.)

The "revolutionary politicians" are scorned because they "cannot undertake anything so wild and impractical as would hasten the break-up of the disintegrating bourgeois family; all they want is to take over the day-factory and turn out the boss—nothing else matters. Take over one-half the works; leave the other half in control of the enemy!"

What sublime erudition! What unsurpassed scholarship and historical perception! What matchless Marxism! Surely before that last burst of profundity we stand appalled—speechless! Blow after blow falls upon our unrepentant heads. But the final culminating blast comes when we are astonished to "Read the early socialist revolutionary pronouncements on the family and sex and compare the present aims and practices."

LONG before we ever dreamed that human ingenuity could devise such miserable apologies for social analysis as Mr. Calverton's "Modern Quarterly," we took the pains to familiarize ourselves with the early and late socialist pronouncements upon the subject and we defy the editor or any of the contributors or admirers of that magazine to point to one solitary writer of any consequence in the whole history of the revolutionary movement that ever approached the question of the family and sex in any manner other than that expressed in the columns of The DAILY WORKER.

This ridiculous screed against us on the subject of sex is a part and parcel of that same confusion that imagines it is possible for the working class to begin building within the shell of the old society the structures of the new. The principal theoretical difference between the anarcho-syndicalist and the Marxist is the fact that the former imagines it is possible to begin now, under capitalism, to build the new society, while we hold that only after we have raised the working class to the position of ruling class through revolution and established our own form of state can we begin to build the new society.

But then the type of mind that is capable of asserting that if we take over the factories and do not destroy the monogamous family at the same time we will face defeat, as does our critic on page 144 of the "Modern Quarterly," cannot be expected to comprehend Marxism. And certainly if one is no Marxist who claims that if the working class controlled industry and the monogamous family still continued to exist it would leave one-half "of the works in control of the [illegible]

[illegible] Marx and Engels would be [illegible] to act in an [illegible] against the working class in defense of a capitalistic class that has [illegible] in a mighty revolutionary upheaval.

Furthermore, in the monogamous family a detriment to the working class? And when we want to destroy it? Only enemies of the revolution and of the working class charge us with such aims! The writer of the above against us complains that we call such as he "drifters, pessimists, decadents, or enemies of the workers." Such people are all this and more. They are perverters of the theory of the revolution, and their doctrines, if accepted by the working class, would only lead to the swamps of anarchism, where every person would consider his own self-expression the most important thing in the world, and his sex-life just as important as the control of industry by the working class. Pronounce by this time the "Modern Quarterly" readers are damning me as an incurable prude and monogamist who could change places "sexually with our old maid aunt, or with the deacon of the church and nobody would notice the difference."

Let us read one of the "early socialist pronouncements on the family and sex," written by no less an authority than Frederick Engels. On page 99 of his "Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State," he declares:

"Since sex-love is exclusive by its very nature—although this exclusiveness is at present realized for women alone—marriage founded on sex-love must be monogamous. . . . Remove the economic considerations that now force women to submit to the customary disloyalty of men, and you will place women on an equal footing with men. All present experiences prove that this will tend much more strongly to make women polyandrous.

"However, those peculiarities that make men truly monogamous, than were stamped upon the face of monogamy by its rise through property relations, will decidedly vanish, namely the supremacy of men and the indissolubility of marriage. The supremacy of man is his economic superiority and will fall with the abolition of the latter."

It is very easy for dilletanti and sex-anarchist vulgarizers of Marxism to refer glibly to "early socialist pronouncements," but the facts reveal them to be as ignorant of the facts of the history of the revolutionary movement as they are of the correct application of revolutionary theory.

Perhaps Marx and Engels were old fogies! Perhaps Lenin was also a puritan as he is sneered at by our critic from his self-constituted promontory disdainfully refers to the "'Russian complex' of Leninism."

WHAT would our critic have the proletariat do to enable it to overcome capitalism on the sex field? He does not openly advocate "free love," but he glides in for suppressing or discountenancing such ideas, so the inevitable conclusion is that he prefers that sort of sex-life.

He thinks that workers suffer from sex-hunger and that the "perverted" popular taste in matters of sex is the result of repression of natural impulses." (Emphasis is our critic's.)

Not only does the writer who so bitterly assails us not understand the theory of the revolution but he knows nothing of the pastimes of the majority of the working class or he would know that it is precisely sexual excesses and not repression that most seriously affects the workers. Again we refer to Frederick Engels for the social background of this fact and to prove that it is nothing new. Says the brilliant co-worker of Karl Marx on page 128 of his "Condition of the Working Class in England in 1844":

"Next to intemperance in the enjoyment of intoxicating liquor one of the principal faults of the English working men is sexual license. But this, too, follows with a relentless logic, with inevitable necessity out of the position of a class left [illegible] [illegible] to itself, to which society can not [illegible] any duties, which has [illegible] to subject to any moral influences, which has no opportunity to raise itself to any position in which the social virtues would be of any advantage to it, which has only rights to be trampled upon and no enjoyments except those which degrade it."

Then, in order to put the blame where it belongs, and to show that the working class is not responsible for the sex-vices, Engels points out the "sexual excesses of the upper classes, carry them to the most revolting extremes."

When people are placed under conditions which appeal to the brute only, what remains to them but to rebel or succumb to utter brutality?

This was not only true of England of the 40s, but any reputable physician in a working class section of any city in the United States will report similar excesses today.

Add to the poverty and ignorance of families living in the great industrial districts the housing conditions that compel two or more families to live in small, crowded, ill-ventilated, fetid rooms and it is easy to comprehend that the rules of monogamy are frequently violated. Monogamy for many of these miserable victims of capitalist rapacity is only an empty fetish, "Syndyasmy, polyandry and incest can by no means be regarded as exceptions among a very large strata of the lower proletariat. Their very condition of life deprives them of any other form of relaxation.

AS to the parasites at the other end of the social scale, surely our critic will not pretend to deny the well-known fact that those idlers who roll in immense wealth and go from excess to excess practicing all the refinements of depravity need to be rescued from their lives of suppression. As Marx and Engels said in the "Communist Manifesto" the bourgeoisie spend their time sedncing each others' wives."

Surely those individuals who constitute the lunatic fringe of the revolutionary movement and talk sex-anarchism are decadents, apeing the worst features of the ruling class as it approaches its doom.

If they want to experiment in social analysis of something they might devote a little of their worthless time to analyzing their own role in society. But that is too much to expect of them, for they would then discover that they cannot teach the "political revolutionista" the intricacies of their weird ideas of economics and sociology, but must learn from us if ever they hope to play anything other than their present clownish roles.

THE choicest morsel of the miserable perversion of Marxism that this phrase-monger hurled against us was the charge that we are not properly "sensitive to the role of the yellow journals "in dethroning respectability." He assails Comrade O'Flaherty for accusing these yellow sheets of "feeding the popular appetite for sluah," and indignantly asks us "what sort of proletarian interpretation is this?" Must we always give to the proletarian analysis of slush when we mention it? True, these periodicals, called yellow journals, do talk a great deal about sex and exploit the escapades of the plutocratic rabobs as well as the morons like Snyder and Gray, but they also indulge in the most nauseating morality. If O'Flaherty's criticism of the "Graphic" is unintelligible to the "Modern Quarterly" writer that is not his fault. It is not one of the duties of the Communist Party to cater to any decadent who disagrees with him a new set of brains. It is sufficient for us that our writings are understood by the proletarian readers of our paper who do not seek their revolutionary inspiration from the phrase-mongers, plagiarists, publicity-seekers and perverters of revolutionary theory and practice.

Get Out of Peking and Out of China.

John Van A. MacMurray, representative of American imperialism at Peking, objects to moving the legation from that city to Tientsin because it would be viewed by the other powers—Great Britain, France and Japan—as an admission of defeat of the powers and an "admission that Western Influence had come to an end." Reports also declare that General Smedley Butler, marine commander, is opposed to moving the legation and that he advises employing airplanes to bomb Chinese who attempt to interfere with railroad transportation between Peking and Tientsin, a distance of 80 miles.

Approximately 11,000 foreign troops are situated at Tientsin of which 4,000 are Americans in various branches of the service.

Not only should MacMurray be forced to get out of Peking and stay out, but he and all the rest of the agents of Wall Street, including its 4,000 gunmen should be forced to get out of China and stay out. "Western influence" has brought to China nothing but the curse of opium, (in which traffic America shared with Britain) despotism, slavery, and christianity in the service of imperialism. It is to be hoped that if the powers do not withdraw of their own accord (and they won't) the mighty power of the Chinese revolution rises high enough to scourge them from the country.

In such a task they will have the sympathy and support of the advanced section of the working class of the great powers who recognise their governments as the enemies alike of the workers and the colonials and semi-colonials.

Summer Plans of the Theatre Guild

With the "Tyranny" taken off the boards last Saturday, and the closing this evening of "Right You Are If You Think You Are," the Pirandello play which has been playing at the Theatre Guild is "resting" its summer schedule. Four plays will continue through the summer if the heat and attendance does not interfere.

"Ned McCobb's Daughter" plays at the John Golden next week, after which it moves to the Garrick, where it will run through the summer. John Cromwell, who played in the Chicago production will replace Alfred Lunt and Hortense Alden replaces Margalo Gillmore. Philip Leigh returns to his original role of Pen McCobb and Naurice NeRae will play George. Mr. Lunt and Miss Gillmore will continue in "The Second Man," which is now running at the Guild theatre. Earle Larimore is also out of the "McCobb" cast and will continue in "The Second Man."

"Mr. Pim Passes By" will play next week at the Garrick, and the following Monday will move to the John Golden and there alternate with "The Silver Cord," which continues at that theatre. Edward Lighter is playing Elliot Cabot's Role in "The Silver Cord," and Maurice McRae will take up the role of George in "Ned McCobb's Daughter."

And Still They Come

"Merry-Go-Round" Runs True to Form at the Klaw

TO ask a proletarian writer to criticise a Broadway musical show is very much like asking Eddie Cantor to do a polemical book review for Sinclair Gorlin—only more so.

If the duties which devolve upon one engaged in labor journalism are anything, they are multitudinous and varied. There are conventions to report, and strike shoot reviewers are left among them.

"Merry-Go-Round," at the Klaw runs true to form. There are the girls (a handful of beautiful girls whose names or nicknames remain out of the chorus and to exist in blue, color, chorus). The cast of hard boiled that editors rather than

By T. A. JACKSON (London)

GEORGE LANSBURY'S reminder of the parallel between the Irish national struggle and the fight around the Trades Disputes Bill derives point from memoirs of parliamentary "Diarists" reminiscent of the days of Parnell.

It is no longer possible for an opposition group to delay proceedings quite to the same extent as it did in 1881, but it is still possible for a Parliamentary Party of eighty odd members to pursue a policy which will (as it did) at once concentrate attention upon the justice of their political foes and thereby help to support the enthusiasm of those whom they represent.

The characteristic Irish method of obstruction was not entirely to speak, and at great length, in opposition to measures of coercion; it was to oppose systematically every measure of legislation which, and especially to create such a state of congestion in the parliamentary business as to force, and be permanent to a frenzy.

This was carried to the length of moving the adjournment of the House—and persuading the majority of the members—after announcing the desire to do so, on some trivial pretext.

Review of Conditions of Working Women in the U. S. A.

(Ending of 1926 and the beginning of 1927.)

By MARGARET COWL

IN THE DOLL INDUSTRY employing about 5,000 women in New York City, the employers have devised a new scheme for cutting down wages. Every worker is required to sign an agreement that she will not join a trade union and will not strike. As a guarantee that she will live up to the agreement 5 per cent of her wages is deducted each week for one year.

TOBACCO FACTORY, Perth Amboy, N. J. more than 200 girls were discharged because of the introduction of new machinery; prices for remaining girls were reduced; many of the discharged girls were re-employed (in some town) by a men's shirt factory at $6.50 per week.

AMARET COTTON MILLS in Maynard, Mass. About 600 workers jobless; 200 children in need of relief; Mrs. Crotty, a mill worker, stated that instead of 4 quarts of milk per day, the family has to have only one quart. The Crotty baby is 16 months old.

—Drawings by CHAMBERLAIN.

SWIFT MEAT TRUST. Since 1921 wages were reduced and hours increased. The Company reported net profits for 1925. The Forth Meat Packing Company has established a company union.

FRUIT & VEGETABLE CANNERIES. In the state of Pennsylvania, according to the report of the Factory Inspection Department, 2,000 women and children are employed. Actual slavery exists among the workers in these canneries.

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY in Schenectady, N. Y. reduced wages of its employees since 1921.

GOODYEAR RUBBER COMPANY. In the first half of 1926 the workers had a demand for an increase in pay and went in league. The Goodyear netted for 1926 over $16,500,000. A company union exists here.

UNDERWEAR. On January 17th, 1927, 300 girls employed by the Goodrich and Bixler Underwear Co., Paterson, N. J., struck against wage reductions. Some of the workers are girls between 14 and 15, many of them showed pay envelopes of but $5.00 for a week's work after the new reduction. They say a week after the new rates were put into effect the pushers (foremen) would reduce the speed of the machines. Some workers were placed on piece basis. The girls had to buy needles, machine oil and the girls had to pay a fine when they reported late for work.

TEXTILE WORKERS in Passaic. About 12,000 workers (60 per cent women) out on strike against 10 per cent reduction in wages. The average wage before reduction was for male workers $18.00 per week and for women $14.75. Average work week 54 to 60 hours. Thousands of mothers doing night work. Brutal police attacks against men, women and children, attempting to force the workers back to work. Courageous activities of women in picket work.

THE FARMER'S WIFE. According to Frank O. Lowden, a member of the Republican Party: "Their earnings (farmers of middle west.—M. C.) including management and family labor, have shrunk from $1570 as an average to $648 a year."

MINER'S WIFE. To keep the family from starvation, thousands of miners' wives have recently been forced into the Scranton, Wilkes Barre, Pittston, Old Forge, etc., candy, silk, textile mills to work at from $18.00 to $15.00 per week. They must walk two to four miles to and from work every day.

BILL FOR 48-HOUR WEEK for women was defeated in New York State. For 12 years organized labor attempted to put thru a 48 hour week bill for women workers. Every year it was defeated. This year the 48-hour bill was modified to 49½ hours with 78 hours additional for overtime in busy seasons, and was thus enacted into law. According to the Graphic Survey, "Its various exceptions, modifications make it hard to apply and complicated to enforce." The new law reflects less than half of the working women in New York State. The Women's Party opposed the passage of the bill. This is how the employers got rid of the 48-hour bill. The 48-hour bill in Illinois has been contin ously defeated for a number of years. In all other States in the U. S. a 48 hour law for women w rs exists mostly with exceptions and modifications similar to the New York law.

SOME OF THE 1926-1927 STRIKES. In many of these strikes the workers were bitterly fighting injunctions issued against them, prohibiting them to rightful picketing.

Paper Box Makers; Willamantic American Thread Co. workers; Shoe workers; Cloakmakers; Furriers; White Goods workers; Passaic Textile workers; Laundry workers; Auto wor ers; and these where no women are employed: Interboro Rapid Transit Company workers; Cap workers; Barbers; Miners.

The above are conditions affecting only some of the sections of the working women in the United States.

CHILD BRIDES. Up to 1926 the lowest age at which a girl was allowed to marry by law, in New York State was 12 years of age. The 1926 Legislature raised this age to 14. Now there is a bill introduced to raise the age to 16.

According to the 1920 census, 343,000 girls in the United States married at the ages of from 11 to 15 years. Each year since, the number of child-brides increased. To escape intolerable conditions in homes and to get away from the factory is the reason for most of the early marriages. The men marrying these girls are mostly unskilled workers. The low wages paid to these workers are not sufficient to maintain a family, making it necessary for the wife to go back into the factory. The mother occupied in the factory is not able to give attention to the children. The street attracts the children for whom children's courts and houses of correction are established. Raising the marriage age to 16 will not do away with the cause for the misery of these thousands of child-wives. Only when the government representing the interests of the employers will be abolished and a Workers' Government established will the conditions of girls, even tho they will marry at an early age, be made better. It is to the interest of working women to cooperate with men workers in the struggle for a Workers' Government.

BODIES BY BRIGGS.

In the recent fire at the Briggs Body Plant in Detroit an unknown number of men were burned to death. Twenty bodies were recovered. None of the Briggs officials were arrested and no gunboats were sent to protect the interests of American workmen.

At the Auto Show:

Soft glowing lights in pillared hall, with music softer still,
The soothing blend of palm and rose and golden daffodill,
The swirl of fashion's silken tide, sweet laughter's vibrant thrill,
Dame and mistress gathered there a languid hour to kill.

Came through the crowd a money king, silk hatted, boorish, grim,
A fur clad strumpet on his arm, her form divinely slim,
They paused before a gleaming car—last word in speed and trim,
He helped her in, the cushions soft embraced each dainty limb.

"Oh, Dan!" she cried, "this car for me," his check book out he digs,
"Tis just the thing to set them wild, those cattish, women prigs.
A clever salesman fussed around, his job to sell these rigs,
"No better car in all the world, this body's made by Briggs."

At the Auto Factory:

Deep in the murk of spray booths that stink like the pit of hell,
The workers sweat at the paint guns on cars that shownmen sell,
Gas laden air and poisoned lungs their labored breathings tell,
Stark hunger's whip the foreman cracks, they speed to every yell.

A thunder crash and death rode through, astride a blood red flame,
The workers died in their bondage, each black and blasted frame,
Burnt offering to the god of greed; great Christ the cruel shame,
Incense at profit's altar their scorching flesh became.

BODIES BY BRIGGS, this cinder heap of things that once were men,
Bone of our bone, our brothers they, slain in that flaming den,
Such the tally of wealth and greed through all of mortal ken,
Death marks the score in worker's blood using a golden pen.

A Hobo on Halsted Street

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

IT was eight o'clock in the morning on Halsted Street, Chicago, where husky employment sharks fleck their muscles on the sidewalks and urge wage slaves out of work to step right in and be shipped to distant parts where one can labor in return for anything from 30 to 60 cents an hour for his toil.

"Shipping them right out now boys."

The vocal sounds are jerked thru the nose giving the performance a somewhat professional effect.

Here was a tall lean man with his two hands in his empty trousers pockets looking at a sign announcing that railroad labor was wanted. One week ago he had hit the town with a roll of bills he liked to fondle. He spent it and while he was spending it life was pleasant indeed. When he peeled the first bill off the roll it seemed that he could never get to the end of it, but moonshine and the acquisitive women that one is liable to run into on Madison Street, between Racine and the River, are anything but slow. They must live, and an adventurous lumberjack wants to be accommodated.

There he stands now with the earnings of several months only a dream. He tries to kid himself into the belief that he got his money's worth....

"Shipping them out today."

He walks right in and trusts himself to the tender mercies of the employment shark.

He goes to work for some boss who may now be sporting on the Riviera or whose daughter may be straining her spine bending before the king and queen of England in Buckingham Palace. And the little that he spent on the ladies of easy virtue in Mid-City or in the bootleggerica that dot the topography of that section would not be sufficient to tip the maid that bathes his master's daughter's poddle. Yet it took him months to earn that money. Now he must go and bring in another roll.

On a side street leading off Halsted over one hundred men are lined up waiting for an office door to open. It does and they troop in. Two surly faced persons and a woman man the place. It is an agency for distributing circulars. They receive a certain sum from department stores to distribute circulars and they advertise for broken-down men to do the distributing. They get rich on the racket. The distributors keep on gettings poorer and poorer.

The component parts of the que were leary about telling how they came to this. Could you blame them? Under a different social system they might be useful members of society and they might not be. Perhaps they might be let starve. Unless they were physically unfit. Parasites in rags or parasites in silk hats. It is a difference in degree. Which is the greatest parasite? But we are now concerned with the parasite under the silk topper. He is the lad whose scalp we are out to misappropriate.

I walked into McCauley's store and purebased the American Mercury and the Nation. I would sit down in a restaurant and read what one of our favorite cynics had to say, over a cup of coffee. And one could contrast the dignity of the Nation with the sordidness of the Slave Market. A polite liberal on Vesey Street might be cursing like hell on Halsted.

With my head full of random thots and my eyes on the conglomeration of dirts that festooned the street, I walked along. It would not be pleasant to be shipped out on some railroad job. It might be work in the hot sun or in the bitter cold. And then it would take such a long time at 30 cents an hour to save the price of a suit of clothes. And if one did not feel like buying clothes for his savings it would not last very long anyhow.

Suddenly something stopped in front of me. It opened its face and three long yellow teeth seemed to snarl at me. But the eyes were twinkling with merriment and the head was cocked to one side like that of a child planning out the strategy of borrowing the price of an ice cream cone from her father or a girl trying to switch her suitor from eloquent recitals of the way he made the boss notice him to more intimate the perhaps even sillier vocal efforts.

The clothes on this animated piece of protoplasm seemed to have been designed for a good sized baby elephant. The color was gray.

The stranger's face carried at least eight ounces of coal in its pores but between the tiny black spots there was a diffusion of color which indicated that the bearer was not consumptive.

"How about staking a fellow for a meal?" he asked. I tickled my 60 cents and took a good luck at him.

"If I give you the price of a meal," I replied, "what guarantee have I that you will not spend it on liquor."

"This fellow must have been brought up in a boudoir" I soliloquized.

"Anyhow" he continued, "I find that it pays to be on the level. When I want a dime for a 'shot' I put it that way and I rarely get turned down. But when I want a 'shot' and tell my man that it is coffee I want he can tell that I am lying. So I stick to the truth as a matter of business."

"This game is tough," he continued. "I collected twenty cents a few minutes ago and before I had the dough lodged in my jeans a bunch of buzzards were on my neck and I had to give it up."

Every business has its own undesirable qualities, I thot, and said to the stranger:

"Alright, let's go and eat."

"I know where we can get a meal for twenty cents," he observed. "Let's go."

Sitting at a table my new found friend introduced himself.

"My name is Shawneen Henley" he said.

"Sounds rather Irish."

The yellow teeth showed again, the eyes twinkled and he gave me a quizzical look.

"God knows when my people came from Ireland but they tell that I look like one."

"My name is O'Flaherty," I reciprocated.

A sense of greater security seemed to overspread his face and he looked at the menu with greater enthusiasm. He evidently thot he had struck luck. I did not show him my bank balance and hoping for the best I encouraged Shawneen Healey to go as far as he liked with the ment.

He looked the card over with an appraising eye and I almost had a heart attack when he ordered poached eggs on toast, corned beef hash and a cup of coffee. I could see my sixty cents proving inadequate but I still had my watch so in case of emergency Old Ben was around the corner.

Mine was a cup of coffee.

While the waiter was waiting for our orders we sat in silence for a few minutes. Then Shawneen looked at me with one of his eyes on half cock as if trying to size me up. Then he said:

"You know, I felt sorry for you when I saw you with the papers under your arm."

"Why so?"

"Oh I thot you were one of those poor fellows who have to distribute circulars. You are too good for that kind of work."

I admitted it tho I would not mind distributing circulars for ten dollars a day. But two dollars for that kind of work was beneath me.

"As for me," continued Shawneen loading his fork with a cargo of corned beef hash painted with poached egg, "I don't go in for that kind of thing. I am a painter by trade and when I get a job I get money. But work hasn't much attraction for me."

"I used to be a chronic wage slave many years ago. Then I got fired and found that I did not have a dime but I had a pair of bum lungs. So I took to the road and have not worried about money since. Now my lungs are like two pieces of rhinocerous hide and I can stand the cold and the heat with equal comfort. I am not a bum. I am just a hobo. Say, why don't you quit it and turn over a new leaf?"

He talked to me like a fond mother begging her wayward son to cut out chewing gum. Or a preacher urging an intelligent citizen to dig out his brains and swallow the bible. Or an insurance agent appealing to the father of a large family to add $500 more to his insurance. Here was a man with a cause he believed in.

"I work on a labor paper," I said by way of excuse, "and I am not in much danger of being corrupted by the acquisition of wealth."

"That's different," said the hobo, "but it's funny how people like to work for others."

I thot they had to work for others or eat on others under the capitalist system but when I looked at the check and learned that it was only twenty-five cents I almost agreed with Shawneen.

We walked to the desk to pay the bill. Shawneen saw me putting a quarter back in my pocket.

"I am not holding on to a nickel," he said.

"Here are two of them to play with," I answered, and we both went our ways whistling merry airs.

ROOMS FOR TRANSIENTS

Said the landlady—
"I don't want any more
ladyroomers.
They lock themselves in the bathroom and wash their clothes out.
They cook their meals over the gaslight.
I'd rather have MENroomers
than LADYroomers . . ."

And being what she is,
I guess she would.

THE COUNT

They killed this stiff three times—
Once when they tortured him in the death cell;
once when they burned him
in the chair;
last when they buried him in a numbered convict's grave under the prison yard.
And god knows
what'll happen to his family . . .
It's hard to satisfy a state that wants three lives for one!

No Holy Picture for Janek

By WALT CARMON

THE Polish settlement consists of eighteen blocks between Western Avenue and Warsaw Street. The church of St. Stanislaus, like a feudal castle, stands in the centre, towering above its domain and exacting tribute from it. The Reverend Mieczyslaw Szczepkowski is pastor. He is God's own representative; counselor of conscience, advisor in matters political and practical, collector of nickels, dimes and dollars to further the glory of God and feather the nest of his agents.

Twice every Sunday he preaches in the Polish settlement. Monday Apostles, useless men godless.

In the hearts of women and children buying soap and groceries passes the word, in Pasek's grocery, Domski, in the butcher shop of Wladislaw Kosciusko:

"Remember, remember the priest will visit all the houses. You must scrub from cellar to roof. Have you told that to the child?"

"Yes," the woman would answer, sometimes hesitantly, "I told her to look for your blasphemy."

". . . and tell children the dark thing?"

To old women who made the sign of the cross. The children looked at the ceiling.

"Tak, tawk," Domski emphasized, "all that these old women have to do mostly and long."

". . . and pinken our good looking priest, eh Pasek?"

But Pasek was in business. And his business came mainly from people who praised the priest. Besides, why couldn't a person make Sunday on this question? Wasn't it proper that he serve as censor of himself as our God?" It doesn't pay! So Pasek nodded and kept silent.

"Then you will be disappointed. The priest don't get to children's houses . . . He's got a good housekeeper, Domski opened.

The other women nodded but did not answer. Many facts on the matter were common gossip.

At church hours in the parish. Women and children came all day to buy chalk that had been blessed, holy water, a tiny whisk broom to sprinkle it with—whatever was looking for the visit of the priest. The money went to the upkeep of the rectory. Here is a well furnished home behind the church.

Those were days when women ran outside the room when the priest came, when mothers and girls took pains to wash and sprinkle it, then in the expense of their means. Visits cost seven subsistence expenditure of the apprehensions of the mass.

"After the visit" Antonina Kosciusko Avenue and Warsaw Street shone brightly. Floors were scrubbed clean. Curtains newly ironed. Best linens on the table.

Antonina spoke to her son:

"The priest looks clean, doesn't it, Janek? We need not be ashamed when the priest comes!"

"Yes, mother," Janek looked up from his book,

"and he'll ask you why you don't send the kids to parochial school."

Janek's younger brother and sister attended the neighboring public school. Even the small sum charged per month at the catholic school could not be spared.

"Ah, Janek, but the price is good," his mother defended weakly.

"Good at collecting!"

Janek's mother loved him. The priest did not like him. He did not go to church. Janek led his class in high school. But gossip brought to the priest's ears that Janek read "socialist" books.

"That boy will hang some day!" the priest once said. "The devil always makes his disciples wise."

"Janek is a good boy," his mother answered.

He worked after school hours. He helped at home. His mother, meek as a mouse and fearful, secretly admired her boy. He dared even to oppose the parish priest!

Preceding the priest an altar boy went from home to home to announce his coming. This allowed time for final preparation. To borrow money when none was in the house.

"The priest is next door!"

Janek's mother gave a final glance around the room. Yes, the adjoining room Janek looked at the table. A crucifix stood in the center. Aside of it, blessed chalk. A receptacle with holy water. The sprinkler. A dollar bill lay in front of it all.

"Say, ma, that stuff with the dollar bill in front of it sure looks funny!"

"Sh . . . Janek, the priest will come!"

But the priest did not come quickly. The neighbors were among the best contributors to the church. Some claimed that donations to the church could be guessed by the length of the priest's visit.

When the priest entered Janek was reading in the next room. His mother kissed the priest's hand and the children followed. Janek pretended reading.

The priest said a short prayer in Latin. He sprinkled holy water around the room. Then with blessed chalk he wrote three letters over the doorway. Initials of the three wise kings who followed the star to Bethlehem. The household was blessed. The holy script above the doorway would guard the home against all evil.

"These two are lovely children," the priest complimented, ignoring Janek whom he could see.

The altar boy collected the small donations. He vouched for the single dollar on the table.

"Yes, . . . they are all good," Janek's mother ventured timidly.

"They should be going to parochial school. They must be taught religion."

Janek smiled in the next room.

"I try to teach them their prayers," she answered meekly.

"Well, we must be going. There are many homes to visit."

A single dollar is but little encouragement to priestly conversation.

"And for you two good children," the priest smiled over to the altar boy's wall trained, extended hands, "here is a holy picture to keep you with God."

The children urged by Janek's mother, accepted and kissed the priest's hand.

As the priest moved to the door, the altar boy noticed Janek in the adjoining room.

"Father, there is another in the family!"

The priest looked at the tactless altar boy sharply. Such a fool! He turned in feigned surprise.

"So there is! But Janek does not welcome the priest. Holy pictures are only for good boys!"

Janek smiled but kept his face to the book.

As the footsteps of the priest died out Janek entered the room. His mother put her arm around his shoulders.

"You're a good boy, Janek!"

"And you're a good mother, too. But a foolish one."

Janek looked at the lettering above the door. Then he glanced at the table.

"Well, the priest is gone. So is the dollar!"

"Ah, Janek, we will earn another."

"But the next one had better go for shoes for the kids!"

Janek led his class in school. Janek did not even fear the priest!

Janek would be a great man some day!

The Chinese Revolution and India

By J. T. MURPHY

THERE are more reasons than the fact that Great Britain has over sixty million pounds invested in Shanghai to make the British imperialists deadly enemies of the onward sweeping Chinese revolution. The south-western frontiers of this revolution meet the north-western frontiers of the Indian Empire. Within the frontiers of that Empire, 350 million people have been held in subjection for many generations by British imperialism which is now so scared over the prospects of the effects of a victorious Chinese revolution.

As a writer in the "Empire Review" says in an article on "The Indian Sword and World Politics": "Spreading as she does from the frontiers of Burma to the Pacific, a strong China might easily become a menace to Southern Asia." This is stating the case mildly, so permit Lord Meston, an ex-Indian Governor, to say his say. Spreading himself over three columns of the Tory paper, "The Sunday Express," he says—in contemplation of the passing of Shanghai into the hands of the National Revolutionary forces—"If Shanghai falls it will not be Shanghai alone that we shall have lost. Throughout the entire Eastern world one interpretation and one interpretation only will be put upon such a catastrophe, namely, that Western civilisation has been defeated by oriental nationalism." He goes on to say: "Every blunder, every hesitancy, every weakness on our part in China goes running down the whispering galleries of Asia and weakens our whole position in the East."

He is especially concerned with India, for here he goes on to say that there is a "persistent underworld of restless, fanatical hatred of the West and all that it implies in India." He concludes "That a weak or vacillating policy in China is a danger, sufficiently great in its reaction on those countries with which we are most closely allied, to reconcile all thinking Englishmen to the measures that are now being taken."

"Slaves in Burma."

In another Tory organ of the bourgeois press, Lord Birdwood protests against any possibility of the reduction of the military budget of India and warns the world against the Bolshevik menace.

Still more direct in its relation to the important events developing in China is a visit of the British Commander-in-Chief to Burma. The British have suddenly discovered that in Burma there are slaves to be liberated and expeditions are sent there to abolish slavery in this benighted country, and incidentally, to make a military inspection of the frontier of Burma which borders the frontier of the Chinese revolution.

All these facts point conclusively to the fear which reigns in the minds of British imperialists concerning this mighty revolutionary movement. And, of course, they have good reason to be alarmed. For ten years they have seen the U.S.S.R. emerging from its difficulties, growing in strength, and by its very existence inspiring the peoples of the East to gather their forces and rise for the liberation of the masses from the power of imperialism. To see this mighty revolutionary movement extending to the millions in China who, in the process of their struggle, realise more and more that the great friend of their liberation is the organised dictatorship of the proletariat in the U.S.S.R., is driving them to a state of hysteria.

They know that a liberated China must perforce beckon to the millions of India, Egypt, Palestine and Africa. They know that the masses of these countries are watching every step forward of the Chinese National Army, and, steeped in a hundred years of experience of "how to deal with the Asiatics," they feel themselves impelled to discard even the semblance of liberalism in their policy and to attack the Chinese revolution with all their force. They regard the Asiatics as slaves and have determined that slaves they shall remain.

In the process they perpetrate blunder after blunder, and outrage upon outrage, not one of which passes unnoticed by the teeming millions of these countries. The Indian masses, for example, know full well their own experiences under British rule. They know the precautions they have endured from their overlords and when they see the Chinese National Army marching from victory to victory, when they see that the atrocities of Shanghai, of Wanhsien, and of Nanking are unable to deter the revolution, but on the contrary, arouse the masses to more powerful organised action, then this is at once an inspiration and a lesson conveying new perspectives for their own future.

A Warning Voice.

For example, the organ of the Swaraj Party of India, "The Forward," for the 27th of January, 1927, writes: "If Japan has been spared the fate of China, India, Persia, etc., it is only because she too has taken a leaf out of the book of European imperialists, become a votary of force and has learned to pay European nations back in their own coin . . . The first condition of a successful stand against White Imperialism in Asia is to have a strong and independent China fully trained in the modern arts of warfare." This is at once a warning to the imperialists and a portent of coming events.

But this is not an isolated voice. In response

HIS MAJESTY'S GOV'MENT

Thru forgery they rose to power
This slimy bloody tory band.
And now at the eleventh-hour
At cracking safes they try their hand.

No ruling click has ever shown
Ill manners like these knights and lords.
Such vile behavior was unknown
Amongst the crudest savage hordes.

There's nothing sacred to these asses,
Except their power and their gold.
They tear up treaties, murder masses
Anything their loot to hold.

Men of England! You the toilers!
Crush this parasite crew
Rid your country of despoilers
You are many, they are few.

to a speech at a banquet by the President of the European Association in Calcutta in which this gentleman said: "A continuation of British rule in India was necessary for the good of the Indians themselves", a leader of the Swaraj Party writes: "Events in China ought to have opened the eyes of the extremely high-spirited members of the European colony. The Europeans in India should not forget that they form an insignificant minority. Half-a-million desert people would be enough to cause so much disturbance that the British would realise their unusual position in the country." This

"DISCOVERING THE REDS"

By WILLIAM PICKENS

OUR daily papers have just published a list of Communists and other American "reds," which the London police took in a raid on a Russian trading company. And these papers pretend to have "discovered" something in the names and addresses of the American radicals. That is pure propaganda: for every intelligent person in America has known the names of most of these people for years. Know that they are Communists and radicals. Even those of us who are not Communists have long been perfectly familiar with the names, addresses and activities of these "reds." Think of any newspaper "discovering" to us that Lydia Gibson or Robert Minor or Ruthenberg is a Communist! What a joke! These people have never tried to hide their names, their addresses or their political beliefs in America. In fact Ruthenberg, until he died, was the head of the American Communist Party, and known all over the world.

This is one of the serpentine methods of propaganda: to excite the people by making them think that something "terrible" has just been "turned up." Even the English police knew all about these people before the raid was made. It looks to us as if the truth is that London police were looking for something which they failed to find, and are therefore making the best of what they did find.

While they were "discovering," they might have discovered a few really big things: that the Czar was killed, that Lenin is dead, that Trotsky is still alive, that there is a revolutionary civil war in China, and that unopposed British and American guns killed several thousand Chinese women and little children in Nanking.

Some of these things are vastly more important than anything discovered in this raid. Everybody who is intelligent, already knew that Russia is fighting "anti-red" propaganda by "red" propaganda, all over the world.

is placing the finger on the pulse of British imperialism with a vengeance.

But not only is the warning sounded. On all hands the voice of protest is raised against the intervention in China and especially against the sending of Indian troops to crush the Chinese revolution. It is already reported that some of these troops have revolted and they are being taken away from Shanghai to Hong-Kong. The voice of protest extends from the most extreme right of the Indian National forces to every section of the Indian National Movement. For example, the "Bombay Chronicle", the organ of the Right Wing Nationalist elements, says in a leading article of January 25th: "The Viceroy has announced that his masters installed at Downing Street and his government had agreed to co-operate by constituting a contingent including Indian troops as India happened to be the closest port from which troops could immediately be despatched to China. Is not the Viceroy aware that India has always bitterly resented the use of her soldiers in Egypt, Mesopotamia and China, whenever they have been unscrupulously used to stem the tide of patriotism and trample down the leaders of their people? Has not the Legislative Assembly voiced the uncompromising opposition, that the people of this land object to this cheap device of using now again Indian troops as helpless mercenaries for helping selfish imperialist designs, and does not the very name of the Indian stink in the nostrils of all oppressed nations because they have been employed in sanguinary conflicts in Shanghai and Cairo? The long and shameless record of British relations with China include the long-continued opium poisoning of these people, the ruthless exploitation of its cheap labour and vast resources; and the fierce and oppressive treaties forced on its governments at the point of the bayonet disclose a purpose and a policy that cannot be called defensive."

Against Troops Going.

All the leading papers of the Nationalist movement have voiced their protest in more or less strong terms, and the National Assembly itself desired to vote against the sending of troops to China. "There is not the least doubt that this Assembly, the majority of whom are the most constitutionally-minded of Indian politicians, would have carried a decision reflecting the great mass sympathy of the Indian people for the Chinese revolution. But the Governor-General stepped in as the representative of the nervous British imperialists and forbade discussion of any kind on this question.

This decision at once had the opposite effect. It inflamed the Indian press and great mass meetings of protest were made on every hand. The following resolution adopted at great meetings in Bombay is a duplicate of the resolutions passed at many meetings in all the great cities in India: "This meeting of citizens of Bombay desires to express the sympathy of the Indian people for the great Chinese revolution in the struggle which they are waging for their political and economic freedom. The meeting strongly protests against the proposal of the government of India to send Indian troops for intervention in China and declares India's sense of humiliation at the use of her resources for the advancement of capitalist imperialism in the East."

"The Forward," the organ of the Swaraj Party in Bengal, discusses with strong contempt "the claim of any man, be he Viceroy of India, to offer up the blood and lives of the sons of India to the service of Britain's mission on Chinese soil. India is not at war with China. India has no quarrel with China. If the truth is to be told, the people of India have the warmest sympathy for the Chinese in their desperate struggle against the unjust aggression of the foreign devils on her soil. Every true son of India will warmly sympathise with Chinese aspirations to recover their country from the deadly grip of unjust usurpation."

Toward Mass Action.

Such are the characteristic terms used with regard to this development. But a still further concrete example of the way in which the Indian masses look in regard to the struggle of the Chinese people can be seen in the decision of the Indian workers to send three thousand Indian ambulance men to serve with the Chinese National Revolutionary Army. The Hindu "Seva Dal" has undertaken to organise the contingent but we can say with certainty that the British government will prevent such a contingent leaving the shores of India. Nevertheless the action will only add fuel to the flames. The Indians themselves will learn from these events that until they also pass from the path of passivity to that of organising the power of the masses and overthrow them with the means of victory, their subjection will continue to endure.

This great lesson will be learned as every echo of the Chinese revolution falls upon the Indian soil. Indeed, they are learning. It is this fact which is driving the British imperialists to frantic anger. But what are anger and stupidity in face of hundreds of millions of slaves who have learned how to fight for freedom?

Fuller's Role of Sacco and Vanzetti Case Hits Defense

BOSTON, June 9.—Response to the social and vague charges that have been stirred up by the Illness of Governor Fuller and the task of making copies of the transcript of the evidence for the governor's personal use, was heralded by President Lowell of Harvard.

Twenty stenographers have been put at work on the transcript so that the committee may soon have all the testimony in its hands. In the meantime the governor has requested 30 to 40 witnesses to see him during the week.

Georg Branting, Swedish attorney, representing Scandinavian labor groups, is conducting the third inquiry. He has conferred with the governor and plans to interview Judge Thayer, who condemned Sacco and Vanzetti to the electric chair and former Prosecutor Katzmann, who framed the case that put two innocent workers in prison to die.

The Colorado Federation of Labor in convention has commended Fuller's determination to investigate the case. Seattle Aerie No. 1 of the Eagles, with some 20,000 members asks a reviewing commission to study the case while William Allen White, famous Kansas editor, condemns the intolerance of Massachusetts, in a letter to Fuller.

City's Left Wing to Meet at Picnic of Workers Party

The first picnic this season has been arranged by the Workers (Communist) Party for Sunday, June 26th, at Pleasant Bay Park, Bronx.

Those who remember the Workers Party picnics for the last two years will know that this picnic is not only an occasion for good fun and relaxation, but that it is the meeting place of the left wing of this city. Nearly 5,000 were present last year and this year with the growing influence of the party it is expected that a much larger crowd will attend.

There will be many features in the picnic this year. There will be the usual baseball game between the Workers Party and the Young Workers' League and also a baseball game between the furriers and the I. L. G. W. U.

The Young Pioneers, the Communist children's organization, is arranging a special program.

Games for all and dancing will be another feature. The grounds will open at 10 a. m. and the picnic will continue until midnight. Admission will be 35 cents.

Directions: Take Bronx subway or "L" to 177th St., then take car to the end of the line (Unionport) West Side Broadway or subway to 181st then crosstown car to Unionport. Free busses will take you from and to station.

Amalgamated T.U.E.L. to Meet This Evening

given them by members of the police force.

Three pickets were arrested yesterday. They were Abe Lefkowitz, 20 E. 125th St.; Jack Abramson, 1560 Park Ave., and Maria Rosenzweig, 1560 Park Ave. Arrested Monday was Max Tired Hill, A. Arrested Tuesday evening was Samuel in the night court.

Shops Walked Too Slowly.

A stenographer on her way to work yesterday morning was also arrested. Walking slowly along Seventh Ave. near 27th St., she was taken into custody charged with disorderly conduct. When brot to Jefferson Market Court she was found guilty. The union paid her fine of $5.

The police, detectives and gangsters were out in full force yesterday. Along 28th and Seventh Ave. as many as five and ten patrolmen could be seen on one block. Except when they chased the pickets there was no disorder, in spite of this unusually large display of armed force.

UPTON SINCLAIR COURTS ARREST ON NEW NOVEL

Promises to Read Parts On Boston Common

Upton Sinclair will defy arrest on Boston Common by reading parts of the Songs of Solomon contained in his recently published novel, "OIL!" which the Boston police are attempting to suppress.

Arriving here from his Pasadena, Cal., home to challenge Boston's suppression of his book, Sinclair in a session with newspaper men declared he regarded charges of obscenity raised in connection with Oil! as a "ruse." The real reason for police action against the novel is the "open portrayal of former President Harding as the pawn of the oil interests in the 1920 Chicago Republican convention.

Sinclair is accompanied by his son David, 25, who is willing to testify on the stand in Boston that his father has not "corrupted his mind or morals."

The noted labor writer, whose novels have been read by tens of millions in America and Europe, will have been arrested four times, if the police pull him down from the rostrum in Boston Common. Once he was arrested for reading the Constitution on private property with a permit from the owner by San Pedro police during the waterfront strike there several years ago. Another time he played tennis on Sunday in Arden, Del., and in 1914 he gained his first arrest by wearing a black band of mourning on his arm in a labor funeral parade.

Plumbers Helpers Submit Affidavits to Estimate Board

Four affidavits were submitted yesterday by President C. E. Miller of the Plumbers Helpers' Association to the budget committee of the Board of Estimate in support of the union's demand for city recognition of the union and the $9 scale.

The first sworn statement declares that the helpers with a membership in excess of 3,500 are on strike for the $9 day. The second asserts that two shops, A. Weiss of 295 Broadway, Astoria, Queens and the Premo Plumbing and Heating Co. of Brooklyn have signed contracts with the $9 scale for the eight hour day and union recognition.

Four firms are willing to sign up with the union at the $7.50 scale while two more are willing to pay $8, declares the third affidavit while the fourth says that scales of $6 and $6.50 are too low to support an American standard of living.

Te Board of Estimate will consider the statements, it is hoped, with a view toward including plumers' helpers in the recently announced increase in unionized city employes' wages.

Chamberlin declined quick to accept, this other at once. Levine said that he would consider it and give an answer later.

Plumber Pickets Are Released by Court

Nine striking Brooklyn plumbers were released from custody in Coney Island Court yesterday. They were arrested for picketing near a building at 1040 W. Fifth St. last Monday.

The pickets declared they were merely persuading strikebreakers to leave their jobs and that they "moved on" when ordered to do so by a policeman who was not satisfied with their speed. They were arrested a block from the building.

$250,000 PROFIT FOR LEVINE ON PLANE LETTERS

Deal Adds to His Ill-Gotten Fortune

The unsavory record of Charles Levine, the financial backer of the Chamberlin New York to Berlin flight, was disclosed further yesterday. Levine patronized a postal superintendent to cancel stamps of 250 envelops carried on the flight and as a result will reap a profit of $250,000 on the deal.

Each envelop has a value of $1,000 to philatelists, it is declared. Whether the postal superintendent will participate in the profits is not disclosed. He will be disciplined by postal authorities for violation of the code, as Levine is not an authorized mail carrier.

Levine has figured in clashes with the post office department over bids for carrying air mail. Although lowest in two bids, Levine was not given the awards as it was discovered that he had framed a deal with air mail pilots to participate in the profits on the mail they were to carry.

Levine's fortune is built up on the salvaging of the government's war supplies. The department of justice has started numerous suits against him to recover hundreds of thousands of dollars he is accused of having plundered the government.

Greek Fur Workers Elect Delegates to Washington Meeting

The Greek furriers held a large meeting Tuesday evening at Bryant Hall, Sixth Ave., near 42nd St., and elected two delegates to the June 13 convention of the Furriers' Union to be held in Washington, D. C.

Many Greek furriers, members of the scab Local 70, were present and joined the other workers in voting in favor of a resolution asking for the issuing of a charter for the Greek furriers.

A picket committee of 25 women was selected at the meeting. The delegates elected to the Washington convention are John Pappas and Mike Pericardis.

The meeting was addressed by Isidor Shapiro and Irving Potash.

Fascism in Power

BOTTLING UP VESUVIUS

The Fascist Charter—Will It Suppress The Class Struggle?

The Italian Labor Charter

By RAMINGO.

In the very heat of the political reaction and economic attack on the working class Mussolini has presented Italy with a "Labor Charter' which the fascist press extols as a document of far greater importance than the "Declaration of Human Rights" of the French revolution, as the beginning of a new era in the relations between labor and capital.

What is there new or remarkable in this "historical" document?

The most superficial acquaintance with the "Labor Charter" will show that there is nothing specially new or remarkable in it.

The charter is a hybrid mixture of general statements, good intentions and a few injunctions and is, moreover, by no means an official legal act, but merely a declaration of the "Great Council" of the fascist party, in which both employers' organizations and the fascist monopolist trade unions are represented.

The Corporation As State.

The first clause of the charter is devoted to the laying down of the principles and organization of the "Corporation as State." This clause states that "the Italian nation is an organism which in its aims, life and means of resistance is more important than the individuals or organized groups of which it is composed. It represents a spiritual, political and economic unit which is entirely embodied in the fascist state. Labor in all its aspects—brain-work, technical work and manual labor—is a social duty and as such is under state control."

Further come asseverations that "trade union organization is free"! It is true an explanation follows that only legally recognized monopolist (i. e., fascist) unions under state control have the right to represent the interests of their members, both before the state and before other trade union organizations. They alone have the right to conclude collective agreements binding on all and impose compulsory dues.

Having thus established the unalterable freedom according to fascist standards of the trade unions, the charter goes on to explain the meaning of the collective agreement which it appears is nothing but an expression of the solidarity existing between labor and capital, since in the agreement "the conflicting interests of employers and employed are reconciled and their submission to the higher interests of industry achieved."

These phrases, which may be boiled down to the simple fact that the workers and employes ought to work not for their selfish interests but in the higher interests of "industry" (i. e., the employer's pocket) while the employer answers for his actions only to the state (i. e., to himself) are regarded by the fascists as a new discovery, as the establishment of equality between labor and capital.

Another point to which the fascist attribute vast importance is the expression in the charter of something between a desire and an order that all employers' and labor organizations should conclude collection agreements only for the members represented by them. All agreements must contain clauses dealing with standards for discipline within enterprises, with length of probation period for newly-engaged workers, with methods and rates of wages and with working hours.

The charter refrains from the establishment of minimum wages in terms of the demands of the fascist labor unions. Wages are to be fixed by agreement with the respective organizations, and in case of it being found impossible to come to an agreement, by a labor court whose decisions must be ruled by "normal demands according to cost of living, industrial potentialities, and labor productivity." Further follow words of wisdom from which the bourgeoisie is at liberty to draw its own conclusions, with regard to the present economic crisis: "The results of the industrial crisis and their effect on the currency must be divided fairly among all the factors of industry" (i. e., among workers and employers). In the official text of the charter, published on the 21st of April, sometime after its appearance in many papers, this clause is omitted.

The charter generously acknowledges the right of workers engaged on night work, or at least those not working on the ordinary night shift, to raised wages. A minimum rate for these raised wages, has, however, not been established. Silence is maintained on the subject of overtime pay, it being evidently considered that the supplementary 10 per cent established by fascist legislation is quite enough for the worker. The charter enjoins on the workers the strict and "intensive" observation of working hours, while the employers receive no recommendations on this score. Strange to relate the charter says not a word about the eight-hour day which is formally supposed to be practiced in Italy and about which the fascist never lose an opportunity, in season and out of season, to boast. This clearly shows the fascists' intentions with regard to the establishment of a standard working day. Here follow a series of injunctions which have long also been included in practice in collective agreements and are nothing new: The Sabbath rest, the payment of piece-work in such a way that they represent in addition to the worker's normal pay, the right of workers to a few days' annual holiday after not less than a year's work (how many, the charter does not say), the right to full discharge payment, etc.

The employer has the right to fine, discharge for a certain time, or discharge without any payment workers infringing the discipline and "normal course of industry," according to gravity of offense. Conflict commissions in enterprises or any sort of labor representation for the solution of conflicts and the defence of the workers' interests in the localities are, as is well known, not recognized by the fascists.

Labor exchanges, according to the charter, will be under the authority of the corporation. The employers are given absolute freedom to choose from those registered in labor exchanges, with one "small" limitation quite in keeping with fascist right to work. They are bound to engage first of all members of the fascist party and fascist trade unions according to their party and trade union status.

The Charter as the Prelude to a Fresh Attack on the Working Class.

Such is the famous labor charter, the last word of fascist demagogic technicology.

The publication of this charter does not ease the position of the working class by a single jot. Rather may it be regarded as a prelude to a fresh attack on the working class. For it is the peculiarity of fascism to mask every fresh criminal idea, aimed against the interests of the workers with a smoke-screen of high-sounding declamations.

After Nanking

The Chinese revolution has come to the final point of political disappearance being despite the courage of the situation created by the action of the workers of Shanghai, the U.S.A. & Japan, by reason of the treachery of the Kuomintang leaders, who are working for the strategy of Great Britain, to her defeat in China at the hands of the Nationalist government which enjoys the benevolent neutrality of the Soviet Union and the sympathies of the workers of the U. S. S. R.

The following article by the Editor of The Communist International, N. Bukharin, on the Nanking massacre and the strategy of the imperialist powers in China should be read carefully with a view to acting on the signals of the Chinese situation as a key to unravel the news that is purveyed to the daily press by the capitalist liars stationed in Shanghai and Peking.

It is well to add that The DAILY WORKER has correctly diagnosed the Chinese struggle and our ability to do this is chiefly due to the correct information and political direction supplied by the various statements of the Communist International on the question.—Editor.

THE British censorship is doing everything in its power to prevent the masses from learning the truth about the destruction of Nanking and it must be admitted that so far the censor has been very successful. In Great Britain, during the first days after the massacre of the defenceless population of Nanking, the general public was under the impression that some sad incidents had taken place, that there were some victims on both sides, and that the Americans and British suffered most. Evidently, however, the ruling class of Great Britain are not convinced that the version which they have circulated to justify their brutal and unprecedented crime will meet with the sympathy of the broad masses of the population. They are using the short period at their disposal, before the secret becomes generally known, in preparing the country to receive the news about the breaking out of hostilities on a wide scale.

The moulding of public opinion along these lines began the first day after the occupation of Shanghai by the national armies. The time that elapsed between the Shanghai victory and the Nanking bombardment was utilized to convince the country of the need for more decisive action and more violent methods against the victorious Chinese Revolution.

There is hardly any necessity now to prove that the Nanking program was carefully prepared. It was not expected. The most convincing document in this connection is the appeal of the Shantung clique circulated in Nanking on the eve of the bombardment. The Shantung clique, which is in permanent contact with the imperialists, wrote in their appeal the following:

"The Great Powers will not permit that Nanking be captured by the Canton forces. The occupation of Nanking will signify its destruction. The guns of the battleships are all turned towards the town."

The Shantung predictions came true. The occupation of Nanking actually led to the destruction of great masses of the population and of some thickly populated sections of the town. The guns of which the Shantung clique spoke, actually brought death to Nanking; this gunfire will be recorded in history as the beginning of a new great war.

The military situation supplies the strategical explanation for the destruction of Nanking. But this explanation is not sufficient alone. The military aim could have been achieved without the violent destruction of a Chinese city. The character and extent of this pogrom mark the Nanking bombardment as a reprisal for the taking of Shanghai, as an attempt at military hostilities on a big scale in order to stem the progress of the Chinese revolution.

The British press started the political preparation for the military attack on the Chinese Revolution during the first days after the Chinese victory. This preparation was carried on brutally, cynically, and in an organized manner. The British press called things by their real names.

The Shanghai correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph," in the account of his visit, said Bartlett. On Monday, March 21, at 2.30 p. m., he sent a cable to this paper about the looting and atrocities perpetrated by the Canton forces. He consoled his compatriots, however, with the information that an emergency situation had been declared in the foreign settlement, joyfully emphasizing that there are 1,500 American sailors among the foreign forces who will help to restore order. A few hours later he sent another cable declaring that there are no civilians in the foreign settlement, as all have donned military uniforms. He added that there are 20,000 people of various nations in Shanghai surrounded by 1,500,000 "mad Chinamen."

Ashmead Bartlett even described the sentiment of those foreigners. Here is what he wrote:

"At night our immense front is patrolled by small gronps of soldiers behind barbed wire, hoping against hope that the enemy will attack them, for really the strain of keeping back these armed hordes by peaceful persuasion is becoming intolerable. I cannot imagine that any other troops would have shown the patience ours have displayed."

The author adds to this work of art in describing the hopes and despairs of the British that:

"It is certain that there will be disagreeable incidents during the week."

WE have taken only a few passages from these cables published in the "Daily Telegraph," of March 22nd. Two days later we find a more sober communication in the "Times." The correspondent of that ponderous publication does not spare any coloring in describing the chaos prevailing outside the foreign settlement. He describes the revolutionary Shanghai workers as hooligans and bandits.

The correspondent knows that the "Times" is regarded in Great Britain as a government organ. That organ is accustomed not merely to discuss but also to command, and the correspondent commands Bei Shun Shi to put down the Shanghai workers in 24 hours, with the methods applied by his predecessors in the struggle against the Chinese Revolution. This command ends with the ultimatum:

"If he permits terrorism to continue"—by terrorism he evidently means the General Strike —"it means that he is either a party to it, or is incapable of controlling it. Within the next 48 hours it will become evident whether there is a reasonable chance of a peaceful outcome."

WITH THE Young WORKER

A STUDENT CHIRPS UP

By STUDS.

That college students can expect nothing from so-called "liberal" college presidents has been proven by the latest action of President Robinson of the College of the City of New York in his action in removing from the curriculum the alternative course to military training, civilian drill. The course in Civilian Drill was offered as an optional course to the military drill course after some strenuous campaigning on the part of the students for removal of the despised Military Science and Tactics evil. Now the "pacifist," "broomstick" drill has been abolished on the flimsy pretext that "sufficient to give the course are lacking." The history of the situation is worth reviewing, to see the hypocrisy of the administration of this Tammany-owned seat of "higher learning."

On Armistice Day, 1925, a blistering editorial on the merits of the Military Training course was carried in the official college organ, the Campus, under the editorship of Felix S. Cohen. This was followed by a mass student agitation against compulsory military training in the colleges that threatened to assume nationwide proportions. Censorship of the college newspaper was then instituted and no mention was made of the martial course for a period of about two weeks. Nevertheless, pressure of agitation finally forced the president of the college to lift the ban and a few weeks later found a poll of the student opinion being held while a referendum of parent opinion was being taken, the results of which showed that the overwhelming attitude of the students and parents was vehemently against the new compulsory military drill in the college.

It was then that the faculty decided that its whiskers and dignity had blown too long in the lusty breeze of student opinion and that the prerogative of deciding whether the students should be drilled for cannon-fodder or not belonged to its all-knowing set only. Well . . . the mills of the gods grind slowly but oh so surely. And it takes a lot of oil to make the Tammany Hall grist-mill grind. The faculty considerations dragged for seemingly endless aeons until, almost a year later, it was announced that there would be an alternative course offered for incoming freshmen, namely the Civilian Drill Course.

Now examine some crude subterfuge, o ye deluded believers in capitalist democracy and bourgeois liberalism.

The Civilian Drill course was offered to the incoming class a few days after they had arranged their programs, causing many of the first-year men to take the Military Science and Tactics (which had already been neatly fitted into their schedules) instead of going to the trouble of changing their programs for the alternative course. Secondly, the classes for the Civilian Drill course were held at such times that it would have meant a severe sacrifice for most students to have taken the course. Thirdly, and most important for students of City College, who come from workingclass or small-merchant-class families, for the Military Training course the uniforms were supplied by the U. S. Army, free of charge; for the Civilian Drill uniforms—concerning which, incidentally, there is a strong suspicion of graft—there was a charge of seven dollars—deterrent sufficient for a poor City College student. Add to that the fact that the few remaining students were treated so viciously that it became the popular saying among the few hardy souls that dared to take the course that "This would be a good course in Civilian Drill if only the instructors would treat you civilly." Finally, when you realize that most of the work was a modified form of military drill, with wands instead of guns, military parading, psychology of Hand-to-hand combat by Individual wrestling matches, etc., you get a full bird's-eye view of what this hypocritical farce of acceding to student opinion means.

Finally comes this last bit of brazen effrontery, "that the course will not be offered to the incoming freshmen class because of limited facilities."

The situation is now squarely up to the students of City College and the students of the other colleges of the country. They may let themselves be bulldozed into taking the military training course; they may let themselves be psychologized into making good cannon-fodder; they may lay down their lives for the holy cause of dollar diplomacy.

Or instead, they may fight with their great weapons of student organization and agitation. And in their struggle they will realize more and more that they are fighting no peculiar situation but that they are struggling against a whole social system, one of the inevitable consequences of which is bloody, youth-devouring war.

Crouch Leaves Jail June 1st

WAS SENTENCED FOR REVOLUTIONARY ACTIVITY.

Paul Crouch, who, together with Walter Trumbull, was sent to jail in April, 1925, because of revolutionary activity in the American Army in Hawaii, was released on June first. He has served his term in Alcatraz Prison, California, since that date. Alcatraz is notoriously one of the worst jails in the country.

Paul Crouch was the organizer and leading figure of the Hawaiian Communist League, whose objects were to improve the conditions of the soldiers in the army and also to endeavor to liberate the natives from the yoke of American imperialism. Altho it could not be shown that they had in any way violated any laws or army regulations, Paul Crouch was sentenced to serve 40 years in jail, Walter Trumbull was sentenced to 23 years imprisonment and other men were dishonorably discharged from the army. This brutal procedure aroused such a storm among workers and farmers, and among the soldiers, that the government was compelled to commute the sentences to 8 years for Crouch and 6 months for Trumbull. The usual reductions for good behavior enabled both of them to leave prison somewhat before the terms expired.

We extend our heartiest greetings to Comrade Cronch. We welcome him into the revolutionary movement. The work he began in Hawaii will be continued. The example he set will be followed by thousands of young workers. The sacrifice he made for the movement will not have been made in vain.

We have learned that it is contemplated to arrange a national anti-imperialist, anti war conf or Comrade Crouch.

Pro Wrestling Shown to Be Completely Corrupt.

Professional wrestling has commonly been regarded, even by the most unsuspecting elements of the sporting public, as the most dishonest branch of the athletic business. From time to time facts have leaked out tending to show that the mat game is under the complete control of a trust that manipulates the bouts and the wrestlers, shifting victories and titles about in accordance with the best financial deals in view. But definite public evidence to this effect has been lacking. And now it has come out.

The exposure has been made by one Reid, who has been on the inside of the mat game for years. Reid reveals that for the last 6 years the title has been tossed about between Strangler Lewis, Joe Stecher, Stanislaus Zbyszko, and Wayne Munn—as per the direction of the mangers of the trust. Reid recounts the numerous bouts that were faked—and also the numerous double-crossings that took place. Significantly enough the papers are handling this exposure with the utmost brevity. The sports writers know on what side their bread is buttered.

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE assassination of the Soviet minister to Warsaw may be considered an accident, but it is nothing of that kind. It is part of the campaign against the government of the Soviet Union. It is more than a coincidence that just when the Soviet envoy to Poland was murdered a Russian railway carriage conveying a Polish spy to the Polish border was blown up. British imperialism is desperate and stops at nothing. Assassination is one of the weapons that Britain uses against their enemies.

THE Polish government is making a pretense of apprehending the murderers of the Soviet envoy. But all this fuss will end up like the Swiss incident. The murderer will be considered a hero and a big-hearted judge will term him none or impose a light sentence on him. Theodore Roosevelt said that the constitution meant nothing among friends. The same thing can be said about the law.

FIELD Marshall Earl Haig must be in the Winston Churchill cancus. He is a Scotchman, but then, so is almost everybody else in high places in England unless he is an Irishman. The Field Marshall has been blowing his horn a little about the world war. He claims that England did the whole thing. This is a voice from the Fascist forest. It is a blast from the faction of the British ruling class that has a bone to pick with American imperialism, and several bones with the working class.

MR. Arthur Sapp of Huntington, Indiana, was elected president of the Rotary International. We just think he could not lose. And after he was elected Sapp justified the honor by the following comment: "I feel that the highest international honor has been conferred upon me. The Ostend convention is the greatest ever held to date, but we hope that next year's will be even better. I expect to push the rotary movement, particularly in Germany." What more could a Sapp say!

THE Irish voters went to the polls yesterday to cast their ballots for the various parties running in the election. The fact that no serious incidents occurred was considered a place of news. The Ireland- is not Chicago, sometimes there are accidents during elections. That is not the most important feature of the situation. It is the political lineup.

THERE is only one workingclass party in the field and the proletarian virility of that party is rather anaemic. It calls itself a Labor Party, but is sick from an excess of respectability. It is an "opposition" party. It stands up in parliament and criticises the government, but believes in the system, in a fashion. Still, it is better than nothing.

Aaron Gross Slashed; In Grave Danger

Lies at Point of Death In Bellevue Hospital

Aaron Gross, one of the leaders of the furriers' strike who was expelled from the office of International vice president by the right wing last January is now in Bellevue Hospital in a critical condition as a result of being ambushed by a gang of right wing thugs and stabbed in the neck yesterday morning.

The attempted assassination was made under the direct supervision of Isaac Walter, executive board member of the newly formed scab union, Local 105, which the right wing is industriously trying to terrorize the workers into joining. It will be hard for the reactionary right wingers to avoid the responsibility for the death of Gross, if, as very well might happen, he should not survive the wounds inflicted by his assailants.

After being assaulted, Gross was immediately rushed to the hospital where doctors worked over him for more than three hours before they were able to stop the flow of blood. According to the physicians the loss of blood is one of the greatest dangers that faces Gross at the present time. When they heard of it, many furriers offered his assistance in a blood transfusion to save Gross' life.

Attack Pre-arranged.

According to eye-witnesses the attack on Gross was pre-arranged. Several minutes previous more than 20 of the right wing gangsters were congregated on the corner of Seventh Ave. and 28th St. in conversation with several policemen. This made many of the strikers immediately suspicious, because none of the strik-

Lindbergh Eager to Fly From Capitol, He Cables Tammany

Lindbergh, the flyer, may mess up the well-ordered arrangements for his official welcome to the city on Monday.

He has just sent a radio message to Grover A. Whalen, chief of the city's reception committee, telling him that he doesn't think it advisable to ship his plane from Washington by train. "Crowd can be avoided by not publishing time or place of landing," he suggests.

Between 8,000 and 12,000 policemen, the largest number ever required for any kind of demonstration, will be assigned to parade duty on Monday, according to Police Commissioner Warren.

Scramble For Glory.

Upon the suggestion of Mayor Walker the board of education voted to give the school children of the city a holiday on Monday in honor of Lindbergh.

Meanwhile, various groups were getting ready to take their share of the glory—Tammany politicians in charge of the city's destinies, and military officials eager to utilize the opportunity for jingo propaganda. And incidentally, hotels, restaurants and amusement places.

POLICE BEAT UP PLUMBER HELPER PICKET IN CONEY

Spectators Horrified at Brutality

Five workers, members of the plumbers' helpers' union, were arrested yesterday when they were picketing on 29th St., Coney Island. One of them, Thomas Russo, was severely beaten that spectators protested to the police against the brutal treatment given to the worker.

The workers were picketing Sam Rosen, 29th St., between Mermaid and Railroad Ave., when two policemen appeared on the scene. Giving chase to the workers they threw their clubs at them tripping up Russo, who they then pounded without showing any pity. They also arrested four other workers, all of them being released under $500 bail each. Their case will come up this morning in the Coney Island magistrates court. Joseph R. Brodsky is the attorney.

Police Lose Clews to Murder.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., June 9.—The only possible tangible clue presented them far in the murder of Mrs. Mary Arnold and her brother, John Lyons, in their Ossining home, vanished this afternoon when an investigation revealed that an axe, found near the murder spot, was not the one with which the slain pair's heads were mutilated after they had been shot and killed.

JOIN THE FIVE HUNDRED

Two days ago we issued an appeal for five hundred comrades to pay one dollar each to cover the Five Hundred-Dollar Fine imposed by Judge Murphy in Special Sessions last week. Hundreds of comrades are answering that call every day. Hundreds of comrades have taken upon themselves the responsibility to pay that fine. Hundreds of comrades, recognizing the fact that The DAILY WORKER is their organ, their mouthpiece, have responded without hesitation to the emergency.

But there are comrades who have not yet responded. Perhaps you are one. If you are, we want you to make good your delay. Send in that dollar bill with a bang. And by the way, send it along with the contribution of every other comrade or honest worker you can line up on the proposition.

In New York, the Four Hundred are supposed to be the cream of aristocracy, the hoi poloi of the bourgeoisie. The Five Hundred comrades, who respond to this call, will be the cream of the labor movement, the militant front line fighters in the cause of the workers. Be sure you are in the ranks of the Five Hundred.

Pacific Labor Conference.

WUHAN (Hankow), May 28th, 1927. (Delayed)—The following resolution against imperialist war was adopted at the trade union conference of the countries bordering on the Pacific:

The struggle between the imperialist countries, above all between Great Britain, Japan and the United States for the hegemony of the Pacific, is becoming daily more intense. This struggle must inevitably lead to imperialist wars. The rivalry of the powers is expressed in the growth of armaments, the growth of the air forces and in the search for new and more murderous methods of chemical warfare. The preparations for war are being carried on parallel with bypocritical speeches in favor of peace and the limitation of armaments.

The tense situation is made worse by the fact that the imperialists attempt to represent the Soviet Union as responsible for their misfortunes. The Soviet Union is therefore under a permanent threat of war. The conflicting interests of the imperialists are becoming ever sharper and the war can therefore break out unexpectedly. From this arises the urgent duty of every proletarian and of every working class organization, to oppose any new imperialist slaughter, and to counter the imperialist conspiracy to disturb the peaceful work of the toiling masses.

The only means of preventing the imperialist war which is being prepared is to turn this imperialist war of the races and nationalities, into a class war, a war of the exploited against the exploiters. The working men and women of all countries must fight against their own bourgeoisie and build up a mighty indestructible brotherhood over all nationalities and all countries and set the power of the workingclass in the place of the power of capitalism.

SACCO and VANZETTI SHALL NOT DIE!

British Officials Not Interested in Briand's Anti-War Propositions

LONDON, June 9.—Great Britain is but lukewarm towards Foreign Minister Briand's proposals for "no more war" treaties. Officials stated that such a treaty would have no immediate effect. Great Britain feels secure, they say, behind her navy, and is concerned, not with outlawing war, but in reducing by means of "arms conferences" the danger to English shipping from submarines and cruisers when the inevitable struggle for mastery reaches the military stage. The Briand plan is likewise considered merely a maneuver by the French to consolidate a few alliances necessarily against England.

Carpenters' Council Refuses Aid to Fur Workers, Plumbers

The Carpenters' District Council, meeting Wednesday evening at 130 Madison Ave., refused to go on record in favor of the striking plumbers of Brooklyn or in opposition to the brutality of the industrial squad against the fur workers.

When Irving Steinberg, delegate of Local 2725, carpenters' union, suggested that the council protest to the mayor about the beatings of the striking furriers, Charles George, president, who was presiding, ruled him out of order. Many of the reactionary delegates shouted "get off the floor. We have nothing to do with the furriers."

Official For Plumber Bosses.

A communication from Plumbers' Local 1, Brooklyn, asking for assistance in their strike was criticised by John Hallkett, president of the Building Trades Council who charged that "the plumbers broke their agreement with their bosses and we cannot therefore support them. Another thing, we must keep our record clean so when we appear before the carpenter bosses they will have no reason to find fault with us."

POLISH WORKERS BLAME PILSUDSKI; U. S. S. R. WORKERS DEMONSTRATE

(Special To DAILY WORKER)

WARSAW, June 9.—Expressing its sorrow and indignation at the murder of M. Wolkoff, Soviet Minister to Poland, and denouncing the Pilsudski dictatorship, which shares with the imperialist powers and Russian White Guards, the guilt of the murder, the Communist Party of Poland has addressed the following communication to the Central Committee of the All-Union Communist Party:

The Central Committee of the Communist Party of Poland expresses the sorrow and indignation of the masses of revolutionary workers and peasants of Poland at the infamous murder of Comrade Voikov, representative of the U. S. S. R. in Warsaw.

FATHER OF "BOMB SQUAD" IS DEAD; HAD REAL CAREER

Noted for Foiling Non-Existent "Plots"

George Deitz Barnitz, police spy and father of the present "bomb squad" is dead at the age of 51.

He joined the New York police force in 1896 and was just an ordinary flat-foot until he developed a reputation among his colleagues as an "expert" in uncovering bomb plots, most of them originating in his own fertile imagination.

Since most of the "plots" failed to come off, Barnitz conveniently took credit for having been responsible for preventing them.

The first official recognition came to Barnitz when he was deputized to organize the "bomb squad" by the late Theodore Roosevelt, who was at that time police commissioner of New York.

During the war Barnitz attracted much public attention to himself by repeatedly thwarting German "dynamiting plots," details of which were usually lacking.

More recently he distinguished himself with the police department by the brutal attacks on subway workers during the I. R. T. strike last summer.

Gangsters Who Shot Cloakmaker Picket Freed By the Judge

The case against the three gunmen who shot Samuel Cohen, cloakmaker picket, several months ago, was thrown out of court yesterday by Judge Marqueen in General Sessions. This was an amazing procedure as the case against the three gangsters was a strong one, conclusive proof being given of their shooting of Cohen in the left leg. The three gangsters are Max Richter, Max Friedman and A. Goldman.

CAPTURED BRITISH SPY CONFESSES PLAN TO MURDER SOVIET OFFICIALS

Polish Communists Blame Pilsudski Terror for Assassination of Woikoff

Huge Demonstrations Against Imperialists Held in Moscow and Leningrad

WARSAW, June 8.—In a press interview a prominent left wing labor member of the Polish Sejm stated today that Woikoffs murder was directed by British hands with the assistance of the second department of the general staff of the Polish army and is but a prelude to war being prepared by Pilsudsky under British guidance.

The murder will be followed by raids of white guardist bandits organized by the Polish general staff on Soviet territory or direct hostilities against the Soviet Union.

Russian monarchists have long enjoyed the hospitality of Poland where they are maintained with English money under masks of members of administration or workers employed in Bedford forests leased to an English firm and have notably increased their activity since the accession to power of Pilsudsky, who now, with a sixty million dollar loan contracted with England's assistance, is systematically preparing war against the Soviet Union.

(Special To The DAILY WORKER.)

MOSCOW, June 9.—The murder of M. Woikoff, Soviet Minister to Poland, the bomb outrage at Leningrad and the assassination of Vice-Chief Opansky of the state political police are merely the most outstanding episodes of a vicious campaign of murder and terrorism that is being carried on thruout the Soviet Union by White Guardists at the instigation of British imperialists, states an official government communique issued today.

That the British die-hard government is carried on a campaign of espionage and terrorism within the Soviet Union and has actually encouraged anti-Soviet revolts and wholesale terrorism was pointed out in the communique.

Churchill Instigated Revolt.

Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer in the British Tory cabinet, personally encouraged English spies operating in the Soviet Union to carry on a terrorist campaign, according to the testimony of George Riley, a captured spy, the communique states.

Despite the denials frequently made by the British die-hards, evidence submitted in the communique clearly points to wholesale espionage and violence carried on by Britain within the borders of the Soviet Union.

Text of Communique.

M. Woikoff, Soviet plenipotentiary representative to the Polish republic, has been murdered in Warsaw. This act which reflects the actual international situation of the world emphasizes still more the criminal policy of the reactionary forces which are striving to wreck the cause of peace.

Wolkoff's murder is a link in the chain of events which taken together, mean an ever-growing menace to peace. This menace is becoming ever more real in spite of the utmost efforts of the government of the USSR to preserve peace.

In connection with Wolkoff's criminal murder, which followed a whole series of direct and indirect attacks on the part of the British government on USSR institutions abroad, and the rupture by Great Britain of diplomatic relations with the USSR, the government deems it necessary actually to make public a number of further facts which are sufficiently characteristic of the work of the British government and its vassal organs in the territory of the Soviet Union.

A certain 'merchant' with a Soviet passport in the name of Steinberg was wounded and arrested by a frontier guard while illegally crossing the Finnish border in the summer of August 1925. During the inquest he declared that he was not Steinberg but a well-known English spy, captain in the Royal Air Forces named Sidney George Riley and one of the six chief organizers of the Lockhart plot. He had been declared outlawed by sentence of the court on December 3rd, 1918. Riley further stated that he came to the USSR for the special purpose of organizing terroristic attempts, arsons, revolts, etc. He stated further that when he came from America he saw Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain and one of the most responsible ministers of the British king, who personally instructed him regarding the organization of terroristic acts and other provocative acts. His written testimony is in possession of the government

Riley's testimony was entirely corroborated by material seized in further arrests.

At the end of 1926, organs of the All-Union State Political Department prevented an attempt against Tchubar and Petrovsky. At the same time an attempt was made against Messing, chief of the Leningrad state political department, by the son of Colonel Truba, a supporter of Petlura, and commandant at Kharkov in Petlura's time, now residing in Warsaw. This criminal was at one time a member of the Communist Youth Union, which he joined the more easily to carry on counter-revolutionary white terror. He belonged to the same group as the counter-revolutionaries who prepared the murder of Tchubar, chairman of the council of People's Commissaries of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and Petrovsky, chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the USSR and the All-Ukrainian Central Executive Committee.

Attempt on Bukharin's Life.

At that same time was arrested Birinkoff, formerly a volunteer of Denikin's army, who tried through the Union of Communist Youth to join the Communist Party and prepare a revolt against representatives of the Soviet power and the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic. On March 13, 1927 an attempt was being prepared in the big (Bolshoy) Theatre against Bukharin during his report on the occasion of the anniversary of the February Revolution and it was by mere chance that Bukharin was not killed. Later this same person, who was a son of the merchant, Gorvitch, and formerly chief of the bourgeois Red Scout militia prepared an attempt

13,000 Rifles Included In Nicaraguan Grab by United States Marines

WASHINGTON, June 9.—Over 13,000 rifles, several hundred machine guns and field pieces, and several millions of rounds of ammunition were confiscated by U. S. marines from the army of the constitutional government of Nicaragua, which has now been driven into exile in order to make safe the rule of Wall Street's man, Diaz.

This was contained in the report to the state department by Admiral J. L. Latimer, commanding the American forces.

Ten dollars each for the rifles paid for the confiscated rifles, but since no expense accounts was attached to Latimer's report it is doubtful where the money went to.

In addition to receiving our general propaganda material such elements should be approached individually by individual members and not until they have made application and properly been accepted in the Party should they know who the other members are.

It is always preferable that shop nuclei meet right after working hours near their place of work. Nevertheless as a matter of safety, such meetings must not be arranged so that they become obvious as nuclei meetings to the boss or his agents. Another rule of safety which should be observed is for shop nuclei members to distribute their shop bulletins or other Party literature in the shop only when there is some reasonable assurance of not getting caught in the act. Distribution of bulletins, literature, as well as speaking at factory gate meetings should be done by members of other nuclei; the preparatory organization work to be done by the nucleus in the shop, however.

While all necessary safety measures should be taken it must nevertheless be recognized that we will not use caution to the extent of hindering our work. Fear of victimization should never cause our members to stop, or even lessen, their activities; nor to fail to accept any post in the general organization of the struggle, or cease their regular propaganda activities.

Workers Demonstrate

(Special To DAILY WORKER)

MOSCOW, June 9.—The assassination of Wolkoff, Soviet Plenipotentiary Representative in Poland has provoked an outburst of indignation from the toilers of the U. S. S. R. In Moscow, meetings of protest against the infamous crime were held. The speakers emphasized the fact that this murder was linked with the anti-Soviet policy of the British Empire. It was pointed out that the Polish government was responsible for the murder. Resolutions adopted unanimously stress the aspirations of the toiling masses of the Soviet Union towards peace, but at the same time emphasize the readiness of the toilers of the U. S. S. R. to defend to the last the conquests of October and charge the Soviet Government to demand from the Polish government satisfaction and severe punishment of the assassin, and liquidation of the White Guardist organizations in Poland. The meetings ended with a huge demonstration wherein several hundreds of thousands participated, particularly impressive were the demonstrations before the building of the People's Foreign Commissariat, which lasted till late in the evening. The demonstrators carried thousands of banners and placards with inscriptions of protest, indignation and readiness to fight.

In the demonstration Chinese students of Sun Yat-sen University and students of the International Military School participated and together with the Moscow proletariat demonstrated not only their sympathy, but also their readiness to protect the Soviet Union. Huge demonstrations of protest were held in Leningrad and Kharkov and in all cities and big towns of the U. S. S. R.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—The American wheat crop this year will fall considerably below recent years, Secretary of Agriculture Jardine told President Coolidge today at the White House.

W. Short, Seattle Labor Leader, Lies In Seattle Hospital

(By Worker Correspondent)

TACOMA, Wash., June 9.—H. M. Short, president of the Brotherhood Cooperative Bank of Seattle, was recently a patient in the Tacoma General Hospital, an institution which for long years has been a thorn in the side of the Tacoma Central Labor Council, because it has always shown a hostile attitude to union labor. It is conducted by the leading Tacoma scabs.

Short has been President of the Washington State Federation of Labor for years. He recently resigned, as he felt that he would soon be kicked out if he did not. He has always been a bitter enemy of radicals, and helped wreck the Seattle Union Record, tried to have Gompers smash the Seattle Central Labor Council, helped smash the Farmer Labor party movement in this state. He is a firm believer in class collaboration and other labor-faker ideas.

There is a hospital in Tacoma, and several in Seattle where Short has his home, that are friendly to union labor, but he appeared to feel that a scab hospital was more appropriate for himself.

Laundry Girls Out On Strike Against Tacoma Wash Trust

(By Worker Correspondent).

TACOMA, Wash., June 9.—Members of Laundry Workers' Union Local-cah-42, went on strike Friday at the plants of the Home Service Co., and three other laundries. The walkout was a 100 percent success, even the non-union girls of one laundry coming out. Three others of the large laundries are still union and will remain so, including the largest and most modern plant in the city.

The laundries are endeavoring to obtain scab crews, but have so far had no success. As they only ran three days last week, they have been unable to keep up with their work and are rapidly losing customers to union plants. The labor movement is strong in Tacoma, and the girls on the picket line are getting good support and it will probably not be long until the bosses learn that they must give in.

About a year ago six of the leading laundries, five union, one scab, consolidated. They call themselves the Home Service Co. Three plants were abandoned. It was apparently the intention of the company to build up a scab organization. For some time they have been laying off union workers and hiring non-union ones. Once they had all of the union girls they would have tried to force out the union. But the girls did not wait for this. When the agreement expired on June first, they went out at 8 o'clock on the morning of October 1st.

Some workers in the Tacoma laundries are receiving as low as $18 a week. The Tacoma workers receive less than is paid for the same work in Seattle, Auburn, Kent, and other towns in this district. But Tacoma laundries are notorious for high prices. Much of the local laundry work is done by Japanese in low prices. The laundries are small family affairs, long hours, primitive methods and insanitary conditions prevailing. The union wants the same scale in Tacoma that is paid in Seattle.

As usual, the head of the local laundry trust peddles out a line of bunk in the local capitalist press. He claims that the strike was entirely unexpected, meaning that he wanted the workers to wait until he had scab crews ready to take their jobs. He also claims that the workers did not want to go out, but were forced to by the union officials. This is a lie. Under the aggressive and militant leadership of Miss Gertie Wetzel, secretary of local 42, the local laundry workers have built up a strong organization, and they will stand by it, and win their fight.

Tacoma is a live wage town. While it is a strong union town as compared to many, organization is mostly among the more skilled workers. The lumber mills employ thousands of unorganized workers who receive $2.60 to $3.40 a day in most cases, and are never sure of a full week's work. Because of the low wages, the workers have little to spend, and the result is that local merchants are always complaining that business is poor. It is the ambition of the local business interests to make the $3.40 scale of the lumber mills a maximum wage. They can not do it. Over a year ago an attempt was made to lock out the building trades when the workers demanded the same wage scale that is paid in Seattle, Portland, and Grays Harbor. This failed and only one important building has been built since by the low paid scab labor, this being the Masonic Temple. The attempt to defeat the laundry workers will fail in the same way.

Orders Return to Work With Scab Plumbers

John Halkett, president of the New York Building Trades Council has ordered the rule of non-intercourse.

By whose fiat would he orders all building trades in Brooklyn who had refused to obey an order to work with plumbers, to return to work.

Workers Defy Order.

The order addressed to the business agents of the crafts involved follows a protest registered with Halkett by the New York Building Trades Employers' Association, who declared that the men were violating an agreement with the bosses which is operative until January, 1928.

The lie is given to this assertion by leaders of the union who declare that their agreement specifically states that only union men shall be employed on the various jobs.

Workers in the trades involved in Halkett's order refuse to be stampeded into returning to work and are indignant at his attempt to force them into the position of scabs.

Scabs With Plumbers.

On two big construction jobs in Brooklyn all the men had dropped their tools last week, according to Dan Gallgher, business manager of Local 791, who reported this fact at a meeting just held. These are located at Eastern Parkway and Washington Ave., and Lafayette Ave., and Ashland Place. On several other jobs, he reported, the carpenters were asking to be taken off the jobs on account of the presence of scab plumbers.

Workers in the locals affected are giving the cold shoulder to Halkett's order, declaring that the struggle of the 3,000 striking plumbers in Brooklyn was a situation of vital concern to their own progress.

Attack Order.

Morris Rosen, of Local 791, a leader of the progressives of the Carpenters' Union, led the fight on the order of the officialdom. Rosen was formerly president and business agent of Local 376, whose charter was revoked because of its fight against the bureaucracy in the international union.

Rosen, in moving that a protest be sent to the district council of carpenters and to the Building Trades Council, declared that such an order is equivalent to forcing the men to scab.

"The plumbers' struggle is our struggle," he declared, "if they lose their fight for the five-day week, it will be a signal for an offensive against the entire building trades."

Adopt Motion.

The motion, which was adopted by an overwhelming majority, was actively supported by McClarkin, trustee of the union, and other members, who declared that there were under no circumstances obey the orders of the officials to return to the jobs.

Britain Fighting Egyptian Effort To Run Country

LONDON, June 9.—Lord Lloyd, British High Commissioner in Egypt, has been instructed to resume "conversations" with the Egyptian Government, after the recent exchange of notes concerning the control of the Egyptian Army.

The powerful Zaghlul party has been insistent that the Army be taken completely out of British control. The British Government, while denying that anything in the nature of an ultimatum has been sent, to Egypt, is jealously guarding the power which it has usurped under the guise of a "benevolent" protectorate, and is understood to be firm in its stand that all efforts to detach the Egyptian Army from British control must cease.

Between this demand which is backed up by the guns of the three British battleships recently dispatched to Egyptian ports and the pressure of the Zaghlul forces, Sarwat Pasha and his so-called "moderate" government, recently placed in the saddle by Britain, are steering unhappily as between two horns of a dilemma.

Nungesser Search Begun.

HALIFAX, N. S., June 9. — The monoplane Jeanne D'Arc, in which Major Cotton plans to search the North Atlantic coast for trace of Captains Nungesser and Coli, missing French trans-Atlantic fliers, was launched today at St. Johns, Nfl. The plane was flown to the Cuidi Vidi Lake Aerodrome, which will be the starting point of the aerial search.

No Alaska-Greenland Flight.

SEWARD, Alaska, June 9.—Captain Hubert Wilkins has abandoned his attempt to fly from Alaska to Greenland, according to advices received here today from Fairbanks.

Wilkins and his party arrived at Fairbanks yesterday and related how, after they were 300 miles out, engine trouble developed which forced them to return.

Do You Want to Go With 500 Tourists Or Visit to USSR?

A study of social conditions and recent cultural developments in Russia is planned by a group of 500 Americans who will leave New York in July.

The party, which will be under the auspices of the U.S.S.R. Committee for Cultural Relations with Soviet Russia.

While there have been several sightseeing delegations and other special travel groups to Moscow, this is the beginning of general tourist travel. The New York agency co-operating with the Committee for Cultural Relations is the World Tours, Inc., which opened offices to-day at 41 Union Square, Room 503. The Tourist section of the new Swedish American Line "Gripsholm" has been chartered for July 14, and it will sail direct to Leningrad taking 11 days for the trip.

The American party, which is to be sub-divided into small groups which will travel in Russia, will be with interpreters and be received by delegations at the various factories and institutions, which are on the itinerary. Because of the housing shortage in Russia, each a tour would be impossible unless arrangements were made with some such group as the Committee for Cultural Relations which is responsible for rooms and meals for all visitors at all points. One of their residences will be a former castle which is now a dormitory for one of the engineering societies.

This first Russian tour will last six weeks, returning to the U. S. on Labor Day. There will be arranged by the World Tourists as public interests warrants.

Locomotive Engineer Convention Worries Over Labor Banking

CLEVELAND, June 9. — Behind closed doors and in executive session, the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has opened here.

To judge from the reports emanating from the convention, it would appear rather to be a businessmen's than a workers' convention.

The Brotherhood is interested in several banks—among them being now the Mitten Bank of Philadelphia, with which the Brotherhood bank in Cleveland recently merged. This is "high finance" and takes the mind of the engineers—or at least the bureaucracy—away from the disagreeable question of everyday work hours, wages, working conditions. Then there is the town building enterprise in Venice, Fla., in which the Brotherhood has invested money and energy.

It would appear as if the condition of the engineers in this country, despite the fact that the engineers or part of them belong to the "aristocracy of labor," would be of greater moment to the convention, composed, as it is of men at the throttle, than business enterprises. But the officialdom which is steering into the field of "labor capitalism" and is deeply enmeshed in its already thinks otherwise.

Perhaps that is one of the reasons that the convention is behind closed doors. Workers are beginning to realize that the aspirations of the officialdom are quite apart from the everday struggle of the workers.

There are about 5,000 visitors in the city as a result of the convention, this including the 500 delegates. The convention will last 30 days, it is reported, and will be replete with balls, outings, etc.

Man in Jail for Life Practically Dead, Is Verdict of High Court

A person sent to prison for life for murder is legally dead. Justice Fawcett held in Brooklyn Supreme Court yesterday when he granted Mrs. Blanche Irene Gallaway Webster, wife of Herold F. Webster, convicted slayer, the right to resume her maiden name and inherit her husbands' property.

Webster was sentenced to twenty years to life imprisonment in Sing Sing for killing his mother-in-law.

Mussolini Foe On Trial

ROME, June 9.—Gino Lucetti was placed on trial today before a military tribunal on charges of having made an attempt on the life of Premier Mussolini last September.

Lucetti is alleged to have thrown a bomb at the Premier's car as he drove from his summer residence. The bomb hit the car but rolled away and exploded without injuring the premier.

Doheny Wants Monopoly.

CHICAGO, June 8.—Unless anti-trust laws are modified to permit restricted production, American oil companies face a long period of "ruinitious operation," E. L. Doheny, the oil magnate, declared today. The hero of Teapot Dome agitates for a cartel while he is now a dormitory for one of the engineering societies.

This first Russian tour will last six weeks, returning to the U. S. on Labor Day. There will be arranged by the World Tourists as public interests warrants.

CHICAGO BANKERS WANT PORTION OF FLOOD RAKE-OFF

Negro Labor Congress Protests Slavery

CHICAGO, June 9.—Headed by Mayor William Hale Thompson, a special train bearing advocates of immediate flood control measures was to leave Chicago today for Washington to discuss the problem with President Coolidge.

Many La Salle Street bankers have been heard to say hard things about Herbert Hoover lately, because the official director of flood "relief" has left out of the picture most of the Chicago capital, and has organized his "credit corporations" principally among the financiers of Wall Street, with local, flood region, bankers as the distributors of the debt he plans to impose upon the victimized farmers.

Some Oppose Debt.

There is a large and influential section of business men, especially among the manufacturing interests of Chicago, which has nothing to profit from the mortgaging and debt slavery the Hoover plan provides for Southern farmers, and desires instead a direct gift of rehabilitation funds from the United States treasury to the Mississippi victims, so they can continue to purchase the products of Chicago and other lake ports.

Advocates of both these factions are understood to have pooled their forces to bring pressure on Coolidge.

Negroes Protest Slavery.

CLEVELAND, June 9.—At a recent meeting the American Negro Labor Congress here took action against the system of slavery that prevails in the flooded lower reaches of the Mississippi Valley, in the following resolution:

WHEREAS, thousands of poor colored and white farmers and laborers in the chief sufferers in the Mississippi flood disaster; and

WHEREAS, a system of partial slavery due to the fact that Secretary of Commerce Hoover released the Negroes only to the owners of the plantations from which they came; and

WHEREAS, our brothers have been and are being treated in a most shameful manner and are not allowed any freedom of action for themselves, but are made to cringe to the dictations of the relief committee, who have been acting in an utterly hypocritical and unfair manner, increasing rather than alleviating the suffering of our brothers; and

WHEREAS, the colored laborers in the flooded valley have no objection to working, but do strenuously object to being forced, beaten and forced to work on the levees under the guns of white civilians; and

WHEREAS, they are not allowed to leave the relief camps to seek work wherever they can, without permission of the white plantation owners; therefore be it

RESOLVED, that the Cleveland local of the American Negro Labor Congress do hereby protest and call upon the president to take immediate action in the flood district so as to afford the colored flood victims protection and the same freedom of action as is given the white flood victims, and so that both white and colored flood victims as American citizens may be given the right to leave the camp as they see fit.

Army Floods Farmers.

HOUMA, La., June 9.—Destructive work of incompetent U. S. army engineers, the same engineers whose policies of levee building made certain the present destructive flood, was severely rebuked by about two hundred farmers here today.

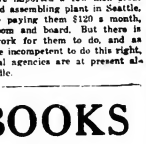
A dam erected above the town of Houma, Louisiana, by the army, prevented the water and drowning out scores of square miles of rich cotton and sugar cane. The dam was not needed to save the little city of Houma, according to the opinion of the engineers and the police they had won over to their view. After vainly expostulating for some days, the imperiled farmers blew up the dam.

Lindbergh to Get Cash at Breakfast in His Honor on June the 17th

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh will be presented with the $25,000 Raymond Orteig prize which he won by making his New York to Paris flight, at a breakfast to be given in his honor at the Hotel Brevoort on Friday morning, June 17, according to an announcement made yesterday.

Ford's Friends Hit Back?

CHICAGO, June 9.—Aaron Sapiro, Chicago lawyer and farm cooperative organizer and F. J. Lisman, New York banker and traction financier, were defendants today in a $900,000 breach of contract suit brought by Andrew Stevenson, Chicago banker and railroad reorganization expert, and James R. Howard, Clemont, Ia., president of the American Economic Institute.



Breach of contract in the reorganization of several mid-western railroads on plans Stevenson claims he originated, through which he declared, was changed in the campaign

Tacoma, Wash., Ford Repair Men Strike Over "60 - 40" Plan

(By Worker Correspondent).

TACOMA, Wash., June 9.—Mechanics at the local Ford agencies are on strike against a new piece work plan known as the 60-40 system, installed by the Ford Motor Co. The plan was to give the shop 60 per cent and the worker 40 per cent of labor charges on each job. In case work was not satisfactory it was to be done over free, the mechanic therefore receiving no pay. This plan makes it impossible for mechanics to earn a decent wage, so they struck.

There are many local garages employing union workers, and these get most of the repair work, which is frequently necessary on the flimsy flivvers. Meanwhile the local agencies have imported a few men from the Ford assembling plant in Seattle, and are paying them $120 a month, with room and board. But there is little work for them to do, and as they are incompetent to do this right, the local agencies are at present almost idle.

Labor in China

The following items on conditions of Labor in China are from an exhaustive study made by C. L. Malone of the economic conditions under which Chinese workers are being exploited today and deserve the attention of every American employer. Every item adds to a better understanding of the reasons underlying the Chinese revolt against foreign imperialism and Chinese capitalist exploitation.—Editor.

Shanghai.

Nearly half the cotton mills in China are in Shanghai—46 out of a total of 122. Of these 24, the majority are foreign-owned, 22 being Chinese, 32 Japanese and 4 British. These are the figures given by the China Year Book. Consul-General Barton in Cmd. 2449, states that there are 6 cotton mills in Shanghai of which 32 are Japanese and 6 British. Perhaps one out of five refers to actual mills and the other in part to firms owning mills.

	No.	Spindles.
Chinese	22	790,982
Japanese	32	966,172
British	4	206,320

Looms	Laborers
10,250	44,294
5,256	55,488
2,343	16,500

It will be observed that all the British cotton mills in China are in Shanghai.

Wages.—Men 30 to 50 cents per day.

Children 10 to 25 cents per day.

Over 60 per cent of the workers are women.

Average wage $12 per month, i.e., about 43 cents per day. (N.B.—The dollar in use is the Mexican dollar, raise about 2s. 2d cents is therefore equivalent to 6d. in English money and 43 cents to about 10¾d.)

The wages here are rather higher than elsewhere, but on the other hand the cost of living in Shanghai is said to be 20 per cent. higher than in the South or inland.

Hours Worked.—11.5 to 16 per day. Seven days per week.

The normal hours are 12-hour day and night shifts and sometimes 15 or 16-hour shifts on the day before the machines are stopped for cleaning, so that the women and children may have to stand for perhaps 16 hours. Very young children are employed in the mills.

There is no time or place for meals. There is very little lavatory accommodation. Babies are not allowed in the foreign factories, so they have to be entrusted to a neighbor. Women are allowed two weeks away at the time of their confinement. If they do not return then, they are liable to be dismissed. They get no pay during this period. For serious accidents compensation up to 50 dollars is sometimes given, but there is no obligation to pay any compensation whatever. Here, as elsewhere, there is no fencing of machinery, and owing to the very long hours worked and the youth of the workers very serious accidents occur.

Tientsin.

Average Wage.—30 cents per day.

Hours.—12-hour day and night shifts. Seven days per week.

60 per cent. of the workers are children, who get 15 to 25 cents per day. Women are not so much employed as in Shanghai. The Japanese provide dormitories for their men and women workers according to their usual custom. The rent is said to be 50 cents per person per month. In the course of a strike in Japanese cotton mills in August, 1925, 25 workers were killed.

Hankow and Wuchang.

Hankow, Wuchang and Hanyang form together a triple city known as Wuhan, on the junction of the River Yangtze and the River Han, most of the cotton mills being in Wuchang and the steel works in Hanyang.

It must be understood that all wage-rates given relating to Hankow are those obtaining at the time of my visit in the summer of 1926 before the Cantonese arrival. Since then the rates have gone down.

Average wage—30 cents per day. (Note.—The Hankow Textile Mill gives better pay—about 50 cents; at Tsi An (Japanese) the pay is lower.)

From the information which I received from various trade union officials, it appears that 30 cents is about the average daily wage of the ordinary adult cotton mill hand in China, though a few of the skilled men in the power house may earn considerably more—up to 62 (i.e. 6s.) per day.

Hours.—Two shifts of 12 hours each. Seven days per week.

Holidays.—The machinery is stopped for one day every ten days, on the 1st, 11th, and 21st of the month for general cleaning.

I visited several cotton mills at Hankow and Wuchang. One was the Teen Huan mill, which started in 1921. It employs 2,300 workers, of whom 1,000 are women and 1,000 little children. Some of those whom I saw were certainly not more than eight years old.

The are 94,700 spindles. One spindle produces 1 lb. of 20 count. The product of the mill is 70 bales per day, a bale weighing 430 lbs. The raw cotton comes from about 200 mills up country.

There are no meal hours. I saw the men, women and children eating from their rice bowls as they tended their machines. The machinery was supplied by Asa Lees of Oldham.

I also visited the Hankow Dee Yee Spinning and Weaving Co.'s mill at Wuchang. This mill was erected in 1915. There were 88,000 spindles and 1,200 looms. This mill employs 8,000 workers, of whom about one-third are children. As elsewhere, the hours of labor are two shifts of 12 hours. The Chinese employer said that this was not too long. They say that the work is very lazy and slack about and so on. Perhaps they mistake effect for cause.

The Teen Huan mill, which was only erected about five years ago, compared very favorably with any Lancashire mill as regards lighting, ventilation, etc. The Hankow Dee Yee mill, built earlier, was much darker. I did see some rather primitive washing arrangements, and the lavatory accommodation appeared to be insufficient. All these reports the mill compared very unfavorably with the Japanese mill which I subsequently visited.

At one factory I noticed women bringing in their babies. I followed one and finally ran the baby to earth by the machine which its mother was tending—one of 800 there. Amid the terrific din of the shuttles, in an atmosphere full of cotton dust, the mother was suckling the child. It was apparently brought in by some one else by whom, doubtless, it would be removed, when fed. There was a notice at the entrance to the factory to the effect that babies must not be brought in. I did not see very many, but this was because most of the women were quite young girls.

There is no fencing of machinery. If the workers are killed, the owner may give the family 20 to 30 dollars (Mex.) compensation.

Cotton Packing.

Cotton packing, as well as wool and hide packing, appears to be almost entirely in the hands of eight British firms, who operate hydraulic cotton, wool and hide packing presses at Tientsin, Hankow and Shanghai.

A representative of the workers in Hankow informed me that wages were 20 to 26 cents for a twelve-hour day. After some strikes the ages had been raised from 26 to 30 cents. The workers live in the outskirts of the town in poor shelters. If accidents occur they must take care of themselves.

Silk Filatures.

As has been said, the manufacture of silk is still to a large extent a peasant industry. The factory industry is established at Shanghai, Canton, Hankow, Chefoo, Soochow, Hangchow, Chungking and Chingkiang where there are steam filatures. There are also silk-weaving factories, but not so many as filatures, the factory-made silk thread often being woven in the home.

There are said to be 300,000 silk workers in factories in China, of whom 70 per cent. are women and children.

In [illegible] I was able to visit a [illegible] of silk filatures. Nearly all [illegible] were women and young [illegible] only being employed in [illegible] house, and as foremen in [illegible] where they may be seen [illegible] small cane for the correction [illegible] children.

[illegible] the cocoons, classifying, packing, a department [illegible] rooms, the main [illegible] filatures where [illegible] are [illegible] in the reeling shed. This shed contains rows of [illegible] pans. On one side [illegible] women, on the other side [illegible] children [illegible] One of the children could [illegible] than seven years old and was probably [illegible] on her side of [illegible] basin, in which [illegible] and steam is laid [illegible] the silk reels [illegible] accident [illegible] the silk [illegible] The child [illegible] when asked ever to [illegible] of boiling water in front of the women. The web from six cocoons is made into one silk thread. The woman [illegible] the six together, more than [illegible] winding-frame or drum behind her. This is driven by machinery which she stops or starts by a pedal with her feet. Each woman keeps five sets going, i.e. five threads or 30 cocoons.

The operating cocoons are unwinding whilst they also float in boiling water, so that there is ample water surface to provide steam to fill the whole shed, besides leaks in steam pipes, etc. The atmosphere was stifling and would be terrible in summer. There was absolutely no means of artificial ventilation for drawing off the steam or providing fresh air. All the women were dripping with perspiration, the whole shed being full of a hot, damp vapour. There was a pungent stench from the dead cocoons on the floor.

I saw great many infants and babies, at least one to every two women. They were lying asleep on the floor under reeling drums behind their mothers' backs—thus passing the early years of their lives in a good imitation of a foul Turkish bath.

Wages.—The women receive 28 Shanghai get about 44 cents per day (about 10½d.) and the children 20 cents (nearly 8d.)

Hours.—They work 12 hours per day. Seven days per week.

There is no night shift, because the threads are too fine to handle in artificial light. Unlike the cotton mills, there is a break for the midday meal, made necessary by the fact that the work requires both hands.

I received the impression that, bad as are conditions in the cotton mills, with their long hours, their night work and the exploitation of tiny children and women for incredibly low wages, conditions in the silk filatures are even worse, because of the great heat and damp and the awful smell of dead cocoons in which the women and children work.

Unorganized as they are, there are recent signs that the value of the strike weapon is being learned by the women. In June, 1926, 800 women in the Yung Yui Filature, Shanghai, went on strike, as a result of the refusal of the management to grant a 10 per cent. increase in wages and an hour's reduction in working hours. Two days later the woman and children at other filatures declared a sympathetic strike. Then they all presented four demands: (1) an increase of 10 per cent. in wages, (2) work to start at 6 a.m. instead of 5 a.m., (3) no wage to be left unpaid at the end of the month, (4) no worker to be dismissed without good cause.

Match Factories—Tientsin.

Wages.—Men 15 cents to $1 per day. Women 10 cents to 50 cents. Children 10 cents to 20 cents per day.

Canned Food Industry—Province of Chihli.

Wages.—Men 8 cents to 15 cents. Girls 8 cents to 11 cents.

Working Hours.—Daily, 12 hours. Weekly, 76 hours.

Holidays.—2 days per month.

The Latest Act of Terrorism Against Russia.

The foul murder of Comrade Volkoff, Soviet minister to Poland, instigated by the British tories in their violent campaign against the workers and peasants of Russia was followed by the cowardly bombing of a Communist Party meeting in Leningrad.

The reptile press of the United States, always predicting dire calamities for the Soviet Union, points to this outrage as evidence of widespread discontent among the masses of people of Russia. Being capitalists and apologists for political and industrial tyranny they realize that all similar attacks in capitalist countries usually arise because of fierce suppression. But such capitalist analysis does not apply to the Soviet Union. There the masses, released from the hideous night of Czardom by the revolution, are solidly behind the government and the revolutionary Party that led them to victory. Heavy industry has reached a higher stage of development than pre-war days and the construction of socialism goes steadily forward, with the condition of the masses constantly improving.

Far from being discontented with their government and the Communist Party which directs their destinies, the Russian masses are so determined to maintain it that the assaults against the Soviet Union by the imperialist bandits and their agents only evoke the most intense hatred and cause monstrous demonstrations in which the masses of workers and peasants plead to be permitted to shoulder arms and exterminate the enemy.

It is precisely the great advance made by Russia in the face of tremendous difficulties; the fact that of all nations in Europe the Soviet Union is the only one that has steadily progressed since the war, while the victorious allies have steadily declined that lashes the imperialists to such blind fury that they go from excess to excess in a mad but futile effort to destroy the victorious workers' state and turn that country into a vast slaughter house where the systematic extermination of the flower of the working class would proceed for years. The workers of the Soviet Union know what a ghastly fate would be in store for them if for one moment they sank into indifference and abandoned their vigilance for the revolution.

The creature who hurled the bomb at the Communist meeting in Leningrad, like the assassin of Volkoff, was unquestionably a tool of the imperialists. To be very specific, this latest atrocity was only one more of the crimes of Great Britain (through its fascist tool, Pilsudski) in its campaign of provocation against the Soviet Union.

Tory Britain, the mad-dog of Europe, that backs the fascist government of Poland, which has become a headquarters for white-guard conspiracies against the Soviet Union, is fighting for its life. Its colonial policy is breaking down and to the extent that the empire disintegrates the economic crisis at home becomes sharper and the condition of the workers more miserable.

The ruling class is no longer able to govern as it did in the past and the condition of the workers is becoming so bad that it has almost reached the limits of endurance. That condition furnishes the objective condition for revolution.

Realizing that the colonials and semi-colonials look to the Soviet Union as their inspiration in their struggles against imperialism, the tory government strives to destroy the revolution. Every attempt against the revolution makes more determined the workers and peasants of the Soviet Union and makes more powerful the iron battalions that will defend it against aggression from any quarter. The Soviet Union possesses the only army in Europe that can be depended upon to fight, because it alone has something to fight for. Every other nation that arms its inhabitants faces the danger of having its own guns turned against it. Capitalist Europe plunges toward war, but fears it because it has not forgotten the revolutionary wave that nearly engulfed it at the close of the last war.

Everywhere the vanguard of the working class fights against imperialist war, but once it comes every effort will be made to turn the war between nations into civil wars against capitalism. The workers and peasants of the Soviet Union, under the invincible leadership of the Russian Communist Party, know that they have mighty reserve forces in the Communist parties of every land and that behind these reserve forces of the imperialist countries stand the seething masses of Asia and Africa and other colonial countries that will rise by the million against the imperialist war-mongers.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Underpaid Metal Workers.

BRONX, DAILY WORKER:

If we analyse the situation in the metal drawing and stamping industry we cannot help but notice that this line is one of the worst paid and the most backward.

Workers employed on skilled or dangerous jobs usually get about $35 or $40 a week. Although metal drawing is not highly skilled, it is extremely dangerous. Those who have worked a power press realize that a worker in the industry risks the loss of his hands 15 or 20 times a minute. In many shops in which I have worked, the guards were taken off the machine as soon as the inspector left.

Most workers in New York work from 40 to 44 hours a week. Needle trades workers, have won for themselves the 40 hour week. In the metal industries the shortest working week is forty-eight hours, and in most of the shops, it is a fifty-hour week.

In all of the metal shops are stretch-out system, where there is little or no relief, where the tempo of industries into the lungs of the metal worker. Workers are laid off at a moment's notice.

For all this drudgery, under these miserable conditions, metal workers get from $16 to $24 a week; our wages range from 35 to 50 cents an hour.

These conditions are only possible because the workers in the industry are helpless and poorly organized. If we built up a strong union in the industry we would not be so helpless.

It is true that workers in our trade were unionized twice, and both times their organization went broke. But that was the fault of the leaders rather than the workers.

We have the Amalgamated Sheet and Metal Workers Union now; but all the leaders of that union care for are the building trades workers and their fat-salaried jobs.—A Reader, Brooklyn, N. Y., June 1.

SACCO and VANZETTI SHALL NOT DIE!

Whither the Trade Union Bureaucracy?

By JOSEPH EAGER.

We have had six years of prosperity. Yet there has been no organization drive of importance worthy of the name. Not a single union in the A. F. of L. leadership. On the contrary, instead of the trade unions registering big gains in membership, as is usual during periods of prosperity, there was a tremendous decrease totalling over one half million members.

Right now we have a virtual lock-out of soft coal miners to enforce a wage reduction. The employers realising the weak position of the trade unions are taking the offensive. There are several indications of a new open shop drive even in the strongly organized building industry. We have the lock-out of the New York plumbers organized and led by the Building Trades Employers Association. In Chicago we have a lock-out of inside carpenters to enforce a wage reduction.

Judicial Aid.

Thruout the country there is a tendency on the part of the governmental authorities to outlaw strikes, by judicial decisions, by police interference. Even organization campaigns are being outlawed by injunctions, as in the case of the tractional interests of New York against the subway workers' local union affiliated with the Amalgamated Association of Street-car and Railway Workers; the Watson-Parker Law practically outlawing strikes on the railroads; the latest anti-strike decision of the supreme court in the stone cutters' case, all this tends in the same direction.

The approval of the U. S. Supreme Court of the war legislation embodied in the numerous anti-syndicalist laws, as manifested in the Anita Whitney case stabilizes political repressive anti-labor legislation on a big scale and is a part of the new drive of the employing class against labor.

What has the trade union bureaucracy done during this prosperity and what is it doing now?

As already pointed out there was no organization drive on a big scale undertaken by the A. F. of L. leadership. Instead the trade union bureaucracy sought to profit, in the main personally, through this prosperity by investing the union treasuries and the workers' savings. Thru so-called labor banking and other finanetal schemes into those industrial and commercial schemes that yielded the most profit and then, for the most part are industries where the workers are most exploited.

This was the main occupation of the big trade union officialdom in all these years of prosperity. It is there that they sunk the union treasuries. The spare time they had they spent hunting down the Reds, who led the opposition against this treacherous policy. Now the prosperity seems to be waning and the employers are once more taking the offensive, but the trade union bureaucracy, is not mobilizing the entire strength of the labor movement in support of the miners, who are in the front trenches of the trade union struggle and to organize the southern coal miners without which the miners' union is in danger of a disastrous defeat.

The bureaucracy instead mobilizes all the strength they can muster and at the head of the Civic Federation, led by Matthew Woll, carries on a civil war inside the union to defeat, with the support of the employers, the opposition to them led by the left wing, by attempting to crush the left controlled local unions inside the needle trades.

Thus the center of the struggle is not the defense of the workers against the employers, which at present manifestation of all forces and movements in support of the labor movement is required, but the struggle against those that favor and fight for a policy of organizing the unorganized, amalgamation, aggressive use of the strike weapon in defense of the workers' interests; 40 hour 6 day week, political action on the part of labor in opposition to the old parties, etc.

The Whys and Wherefores of the Present Situation in the American Labor Movement.

The history of American labor shows that labor federations and bureaucracies come and went in the U. S. in accordance with the change that took place in the development of the country. We had the National Labor Union, the Knights of Labor, big organizations in their time. Who knows what may become of the A. F. of L. under its present leadership? The A. F. of L. has lost nearly half of its membership since the close of the war. With the war against the miners' union, the war in the needle trades and a probable struggle in the building unions, the Watson-Parker Law in the railroad unions, who can tell what will remain inside of a few years of these unions, if the policy of the present leadership remains in force?

We have a situation where the trade union bureaucracy is growing more and more reactionary and constantly moving to the right, nearer to the views, practices and needs of the employing class; while the workers seeing their rights abridged, suppressed and interfered with and their trade unions crumbling in morale, fighting strength and numbers, move further to the left following those that have a program and slogans reflecting their interests.

The Role of Our Trade Union Bureaucracy Under American Imperialism.

The American trade unions in pre-civil war days, when industry was in a highly competitive stage and when trusts and capitalist combines of present day type were spoken of only in Jules Verne's fantastic novels, were of course of a different type, different in policy, practice, organization, experience, etc. The Spanish-American war and Monroe Doctrine imperialism marked another stage, a stage where trustification of industry and centralization of capital had already considerable headway. Free land which hitherto was serving as an outlet for dissatisfied skilled workers and immigrants, was getting scarcer, the unions began to stick, consolidate locally and nationally and on trade lines. They were several steps ahead of the employers in this respect. The capitalist political parties were still in a state of flux. Into this period came the formation and development of the American Federation of Labor. If we trace the history these days, study the statements and declarations which embodied the policies of the A. F. of L. we find that in those days we can call it truly progressive in the sense that it corresponded closely to the situation then existing in the country and hence could get something for the workers on the economic and even on the political field.

Since those days, however, everything except perhaps the A. F. of L. bureaucracy who remained relatively speaking at a standstill, has considerably changed. Not only have the employers organized, locally and nationally thru associations and Chambers of Commerce, but enormous industries have trustified and interlocking trusts are developing where a few capitalists control several related industries. We have also seen the beginning of international trusts. The money power of the big capitalists, centralized thru the banking system and the Federal Reserve Board unites all the capitalist interests in a manner never known in American history and reflects itself daily in the policy and reaction prevelant in the local and national governments.

The control by Wall Street of the two capitalist parties, courts, press, etc., has become more positive and direct. In other words the American labor movement has not only not moved ahead of the employers in organization methods, policies, etc., but is behind, so far behind indeed, that its method of organization struggle is completely out of date with the development of American industry. The situation is such that whereas the capitalist is organized on the basis of throwing in his whole power and resources, the bonafide policies of the A. F. L. bureaucracy are to mobilize the strength of a mere corporal's guard and expel anyone who insists on doing more than that.

The Sharp Swing to the Right.

The development of industry and finance in the U. S. outlived the policies prescribed by Gompers more than 30 years ago. Steadily the A. F. L. leadership has been moving to the right and opposition movements demanding a change anticede many times the life of the present left wing opposition movement. The scope and intensity of the present left wing opposition movement however, is due to the fact that anticipated policy was steadfastly adhered to by the bureaucracy despite the fact that it got out of date more and more each year. During the last open-shop drive and at the close of the world war, the employers, taking advantage of restabilization of industry from a war to a peace basis, opened up the gigantic open shop drive in 1920-21 in effected.

Summer Revival

The Tribulations of a Male Dressmaker—Leo Carrilla in Old Role

AL JOLSON

As an example of the profundities of the female parasites of capitalist society "Lombardi, Ltd." the play being revived at the George M. Cohan Theatre, with Leo Carrill in the star part which he created some ten years ago, is superb. There pass before one the gorgeously gowned legal and illegal kept women of the exploiters of the workers in a display of finery the value of which would keep The DAILY WORKER going for some years.

All of these air their troubles in the fancy dressmaking shop of an excitable Italian, Lombardi, who is a genius for designing costumes for the elegant ladies, but who is annoyed by his bookkeeper who constantly pesters him with "little slips of paper" from his creditors.

Mr. Carrillo in the role of Lombardi again proves his mastery as a comedian and in one scene in which a mercenary female breaks the hypnotic spell she has woven over him by running away with an old rouse he displays his power as an emotional actor.

He is supported by a competent, well balanced cast; all of them handling their parts well, particularly those whose job it is to depict the idlers as particularly loathsome individuals. The denizens of Park Row and Riverside Drive may not care for "Lombardi, Ltd.," because it pictures them as they are.

Broadway Briefs

Weber and Fields will appear in their characteristic sketches as a prologue to "A Midsummer Night's Dream" which will be given an open-air performance at the Stadium, Forest Hills, Sunday night June 19 for the benefit of The Actors' Fund.

The tour of the Civic Repertory Theatre which ended in Boston last Saturday, after playing five weeks in Washington, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, was very successful, having played to large grosses all along the line. The plays produced on the road were "Master Builders," "La Locandiera," and "Cradle Song."

Donald Oenschlager, instructor of scenic design and stage lighting at Professor Baker's Workshop at Yale University, will design the scenery for the musical comedy, "Hold 'Em Helen."

Max Reinhardt is planning to form a company of his important players in Berlin and Vienna and come here next season. So far no definite idea has been decided upon as to the plays, to be shown here. Franz Molnar, the noted Hungarian playwright, it is rumored, will come to America with Reinhardt.

CORRECTION IN QUOTATION FROM ENGELS, IN WICKS ARTICLE.

In column 3, page 4, of yesterday's DAILY WORKER, a quotation from Engels' "Origin of the Family, Etc." is made to read directly the opposite of what Engels said. Through one of those aggravating blunders in typesetting Engels is made to say that the removal of economic considerations will place women on an equal footing with men and that "all present experiences prove that this will tend much more strongly to make women polyandrous." (Capitalized words left out of yesterday's article.)

SECOND CHINA LECTURE TONIGHT

Deal With Conquests And Revolutions

Tonight at the Workers School the second of the series of lectures on China will be given by H. M. Wicks. His subject will be "The Powers in China" or the great powers. For the first time the stirring events of the world intrigue of the powers in China will be subjected to a historical analysis before a New York audience. The real forces at work beneath the surface will be laid bare and the lessons with their unlimited practical fundamentals learned in the present great Chinese revolution.

Deal With Other Revolts.

Besides detailing the penetration of China by the great powers the lecturer will also deal with their effect upon the internal politics of China—all the rebellions from Taiping to the first Kou Min Tang struggles in Canton and the Boxer rising and will explain the social forces brought into play through these earlier revolts.

As usual the audience will be supplied with an outline of the lecture for future reference on China.

The lecture starts at eight o'clock sharp.

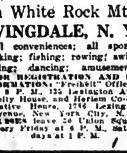
Andy Mellon Cruises in European Trouble Zone

WASHINGTON, June 9. — Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon announced today that he will spend the summer months cruising in European waters on a vacation.

Mr. Mellon, who is 72, said he had chartered a small private yacht, the Vanadis, which he will board at Gibraltar early in July.

Improved Plane Engine.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—An oil burning engine which will whirl an airplane through space at a fraction of the cost of gasoline for present day engines and virtually eliminate the danger of fire in forced landings, is the goal of experiments now being carried on by government aeronautical engineers, it was disclosed today.



Taking the principle of the Diesel engine, engineers are said to have already increased the efficiency of the oil burner so that vastly more power can be obtained with a much lighter engine.

Canton, Ohio, Chief of Police Waits in Jail for His Trial

CANTON, Ohio, June 9.—While Seranus A. Lengel, deposed Canton chief of police, was in jail here today awaiting arraignment on a charge of first degree murder in connection with the slaying of Don R. Mellett, Louis Mazer, indicted last fall as one of the Mellett conspirators, was to be sentenced.

Mazer, whose confession to his part in the plot to slay the young editor resulted in the conviction of Floyd Streitenberger and in turn the indictment of Lengel, has thrown himself on the mercy of the court. He is charged with first degree murder.

Mazer's confession corroborated other testimony to show that the high officers of the police department participated with the underworld thugs to kill an editor who was exposing their graft.

$100,000 For Return Flight? Must Ask Our Wives About It

BERLIN, June 9.—Neither Clarence A. Chamberlin nor Charles A. Levine have reached a decision on the offer of William Randolph Hearst of $100,000 for a return flight across the Atlantic to New York in the Bellanca plane. They will not make a decision until they have consulted their wives, who are due here next week.

"Everything depends on whether our wives will let us fly back," said Levine today.

POLICE BRUTALITY AGAINST STRIKERS

Crime Records of Thugs of Right Wing Cited

A committee representing the Cloakmakers' and Furriers' Joint Boards, composed of Benjamin Gold, Isidore Nagler, Louis Kraus, and Max Rubenstein, accompanied by Jacob M. Rosenbloom, counsel for the two Joint Boards, visited Police Commissioner Warren yesterday afternoon pursuant to appointment.

At the conference these were represented facts to the Commissioner relating to the activities of a group of gangsters all of whom are known to have long criminal records.

The Committee reported that these gangsters congregated at 29th Street and Sixth Avenue at 7:30 A. M. daily, from which place they spread through the fur market with the preconceived plan and object of committing assaults upon fur pickets.

In the course of this conference, the committee cited concrete and specific instances of assaults committed upon fur pickets by members of this group or gangster.

Gang Attack on Gross

One of the flagrant cases which was called to the attention of the Commissioner was the assault committed upon Aaron Gross, a well-known union official and strike leader who is now confined in the Bellevue Hospital in very serious condition.

One of the persons who was arrested, charged with having committed this assault, is a man with criminal record and not affiliated with the fur industry.

In addition to this outstanding case, there were submitted facts of numerous other similar instances.

Proof of Gangsterism

The committee further called to the Commissioner's attention concrete instances of unwarranted physical violence by the police on fur pickets after arrest.

Upon the request of the Commissioner, the committee promised to incorporate all of the facts brought to his attention in a written memorandum which upon completion will be submitted to the Commissioner.

Attention, Furriers!

A mass meeting of all strikers will be held today at 1 p. m. in both Webster Hall and Manhattan Lyceum.

Every member of the Furriers Joint Board is urged to attend one of these meetings.

Pilsudski Wants $4.5 of French Government Money Because to Pay Wall Street

PARIS, June 9.—Premier Poincare today urged the chamber of deputies to accept the project for giving the Premier power to negotiate a Swedish firm for $80,000,000, so that France might have some available cash when discussions of the American debt are resumed.

Possession of $80,000,000 would permit France to reopen the debt negotiations and to enter into discussions.

Traction Quiz Shows Phoney Stock Buying By B.-M. T. Officers

A frank admission that the B.-M. T. could get along satisfactorily on a 5-cent fare was made by Gerald M. Dahl, chairman of the board during the continuation of the hearings being conducted by Samuel Untermyer, special counsel for the Transit Commission.

"The fare is bound to be increased, however," declared Dahl with self-assurance.

Stock in Wife's Name.

It seems that Dahl personally owns only three or four shares of preferred stock of that transit line holding company. The 77,093 shares of common stock of that corporation which have been credited to Dahl are, in fact owned by a mysterious firm known as the "Waubesa Corporation," organized in Delaware and having offices and records at some point in Jersey City not known to Mr. Dahl.

The point is, however, that ownership in the 77,093 is vested in Mrs. Dahl, the wife of the B.-M. T. head.

Expected Fare Raise.

Dahl testified that he got the B.-M. T. to buy 19,650 shares of I. R. T. stock because "it would promote consolidation."

"What you mean is," suggested Untermyer, "you bought because you thought the fare would be raised."

Prolonged examination of the witness revealed the fact that the "Waubesa" owns 77,093 shares of B.-M. T. common, 12,436 shares of preferred and 8,600 shares of Interborough stock. He was hazy when efforts were made to find out just when the corporation was formed and what its capitalization is.

UPTON SINCLAIR TO READ BIBLE TO BOSTON FOLK

Passages Which Bar Oil Are All in "Holy" Writ

BOSTON, June 9.—Upton Sinclair and John Gritz, bookstore clerk and defendant, appeared in municipal court today in defense of Sinclair's latest novel, "Oil," which has been banned here.

The case against Gritz, charged with selling a copy of "Oil," was continued until tomorrow by Judge William H. Sullivan. In the meantime, Judge Sullivan said he would read the book.

Sinclair will read extracts from the Bible on Boston Common Sunday afternoon, he declared today. The extracts referred to are the alleged obscene matter contained in "Oil," or the grounds of which the book was suppressed.

The novel "Oil" is of copse not obscene in any way, not nearly as much as the Bible, from which Sinclair made a very cautious selection of passages. The reason for its difficulties is that it gives a very vivid picture of the graft, bribery and general corruption in capitalist politics, industry and society in Southern California, not even respecting some of the secrets of the "Ohio Gang" and their oil deals.

Investigator Warns of Fire Hazard to the Workers of N. Y. City

"The people of New York City take a horrible chance with their lives in most of the apartment and tenement houses."

So declared Lawrence Vellier, secretary of the National Housing Association, in the course of an attack yesterday on the present lax enforcement of the tenement house laws before the hearing in City Hall of the temporary commission appointed to suggest improvements to the statute.

Danger Increasing

Vellier charged that the building department inspectors work only with the idea of maintaining the best interests of the contractors, and "are not interested in protecting the lives of the city."

He declared that "saving laws has accomplished some good, but they were a compromise and that with steadily increasing number of stories the fire hazard increases."

DRAMA

The Moscow Stage

Meierhold's Theatre a Workshop of Revolutionary Expressionism

THERE is no doubt that the Russian stage today is probably the most active, not only in its tendencies towards the development of experimentation and ideas, but in the presentation of drama that is alive to the times. For that reason it is interesting to get a bourgeois outlook on what is taking place in the Soviet theatre. The following, taken from an article by the Moscow correspondent of London Observer, represents such a viewpoint.

"No where in the world," he says, "can the theatregoer exercise such a free choice of selection as in Moscow. Side by side with the old established theatres, chiefly theatres a number of studios representing the most varied tendencies in dramatic art are developed on the stage. And the former theatres old and new alike generously enjoy the fruits of this flowering.

"The predominant tendency on the Moscow stage at the present time is not realistic fidelity rather than realistic. Producers rather than audiences, to smash the actor and the producer somewhat at the expense of the playwright. The most iconoclastic and controversial of modern theatres at present is Vsevolod Meierhold, whose theatre is simultaneously a laboratory of experimentalism and a school that puts into execution of revolutionary ideas on the stage. Meierhold starts out by making a clean sweep of most conventional stage properties as useless and toothless. (His critics, of course, would say he is making unnecessary mess, but he is making it on this point.) His productions are illuminated by the most complicated projectors. For the benefit of his effect Meierhold abandons even the musical accompaniment which he has banished his actors, and uses clever and original stunts of acting. His actors are put through a course of physical training and many of them build almost automatic machines. To express love and sorrow, they bring their healthy, and their athletic performances are made easier by the introduction on the stage of ladders, platforms and other aids to quick and lively movement.

EDITOR'S NOTES

By ALEX BITTELMAN

HIGHLY ruinous effects of the flood disaster in the Mississippi Valley, and the immediate need of large scale governmental action for the relief of the flood victims, are becoming a political issue of first class importance. The only people who do not see it yet are the flood victims themselves and their real friends all over the country. The Coolidge administration, as well as all capitalist politicians, are fully conscious of the political meaning of the flood situation, and are acting in strict accord with the "best" interests of the big banker, merchants and industrialists.

Why does Coolidge refuse the demand of the flood victims for an extra session of congress? For a while it looked as if the political opponents of the Coolidge administration in the capitalist camp would, upon this occasion continue to "embarrass" the president and support the demand for an extra session of congress. But this did not happen. As the days went by, the following fact became clearly established, namely, that all capitalist politicians, regardless of party, and all big capitalists, are irreconcilably opposed to the calling of an extra session of congress and to any kind of governmental "interference" in the relief and rehabilitation of the flood ares.

The meaning of this opposition to congressional action became still more obvious, when upon the initiative of Hoover big business began to speak on the matter. It then developed that our big bankers, merchants and industrialists have very definite ideas of their own as to how the flood sufferers should be "helped." These ideas are, first, that congress and the government keep their hands off the whole matter; second, that whatever funds may be necessary for flood rehabilitation, these be supplied by bankers and other capitalists in the form of loans to those capable of being rehabilitated; and, third, that the big bankers be given full liberty to handle the whole matter in a "regular business way" extracting as much profit from the situation as will be possible.

As a matter of fact, the United States Chamber of Commerce is already proceeding to act on this theory. According to press reports, the executive committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce held a meeting at which plans were laid out for the raising of several million dollars (from two to fourteen millions) to be advanced to certain groups in the flood area as loans.

President Coolidge refuses to appeal to congress, but he willingly makes his appeal to Louis E. Pierson, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce; and Mr. Pierson is quite willing and agreeable. Why, not? Here is a "swell" opportunity for enterprising big business. Large sums of capital are needed for rehabilitation. Tens of thousands of people are in urgent need of funds to rebuild their homes. If congress were to come forward with large appropriations assisting the homeless in their present hour of need, there would be small opportunity left for business sharks to enrich themselves at the expense of the flood victims. But as matters stand now, the road is clear for the big capitalists to step in and take charge of the situation.

This they are proceeding to do. The voices of the flood victims are stifled and ignored. The demands of the farmers, workers and small business men are dismissed as of no consequence. All capitalists and all capitalist politicians are united on this point: exploit the flood disaster and the consequent misery of nearly a million people for the greater glory of American capitalism.

As to the Flood Control Conference held in Chicago, June 2-3-4, some very interesting developments took place there. Mayor Thompson of Chicago had a good deal to do with the calling of the conference. In point of attendance, and the volume of publicity that it called forth, the conference was undoubtedly a great success. The Chicago press reported the arrival of 12,000 delegates from 27 states. But what did it produce in terms of effective relief action? Nothing. Absolutely nothing.

Here is the essence of the decisions adopted by the Flood Control Conference:

Be it resolved that we urge immediate and effective relief be extended to all present suf-

Wages and Working Conditions in China

Exploitation That Breeds Revolution

CHINA'S first modern factory was established at Shanghai in 1890. In 1925 there were 122 cotton factories, employing about 200,000 workers.

Other lines of Chinese factory industry are growing with like rapidity, and the pressure of Chinese competition is being felt on the international market. China, with her vast stores of natural resources and her population of about 440 millions is becoming a factor with which the entire industrial world must reckon.

What are the labor conditions under which these Chinese goods are being produced? According to all of the evidence they are frightful.

Powers Hapgood, returning from a recent visit to China, reported that he found workers striking to have the workday cut down to 12 hours! He also found children of eight and ten at work in the factories, and children of ten and twelve, inside the mines, pulling baskets filled with coal, because children were cheaper than mules.

Now comes an English observer, C. L. Malone, who has just completed an exhaustive study of working conditions in China. His findings have been published by the Independent Labor Party of Great Britain. They are so detailed and so well presented that they are well worth a careful study by American wage-workers, who will sooner or later be forced to compete with Chinese industrial enterprise.

Factory Work.

As has been said, modern industrialism, spreading outwards from the small foreign self-governing communities, known as Concessions or Settlements, is growing up side by side with the local industries run on primitive lines and to some extent displacing them. A very rough estimate, made some years ago, leads one to believe that there may be 1,500 modern factories in China, besides thousands of semi-modern ones, many of which are simply extensions of home industry, the so-called factory being really an overgrown workroom or shop. How many persons are at present employed in modernized industry in China it is difficult to say. 153,918 workers are said to be employed in factories in Shanghai, by far the largest industrial centre. It is said that all over China the cotton mills employ 209,759 "laborers"—though what exactly this term includes, I do not know; and that there are 300,000 persons employed in silk factories, making rather more than half-a-million in these two predominant factory industries. Beyond this, there do not seem to be even rough figures. Possibly there are 2,000,000 to 4,000,000 persons employed in modern factories, a tiny percentage of the whole population. It must, however, be remembered that forty years ago there were practically none and that industrialism may spread at an immense speed; as witness the emergence of Japan, in about half-a-century, from a state of mediaeval feudalism to the position which she now holds—ranking amongst the foremost industrial nations of the world. Although there are but few what we should call industrial cities in China, machine-run factories, since their first introduction some forty years ago, have sprung up like mushrooms, and it is said that modern industrial enterprises of one kind or another, either Chinese or foreign, are now to be found in more than fifty different centres. While, therefore, in considering the factory areas of China, we are looking at what are at the moment, as it were, only small spots in this great continent of agricultural and handicraft workers, they are tremendously important spots, because of their tendency to spread, because of the growing industrialization of China. Especially important are they to the workers in the west, whose livelihood has been cut away from under their feet by the erection of factories in China, to do the work hitherto done by mills in Lancashire and elsewhere. This, however, is not perhaps the whole story, certainly not in this gen-sufferers; that the measures which may be recommended by existing Federal agencies for relief to the lower valley, so as to protect it against a recurrence of the present disaster, be carried out promptly, and that the necessary appropriation therefore be made.

This is all the conference had to say ON IMMEDIATE ADEQUATE RELIEF for the 70,000 homeless, starving and ruined people in the Mississippi Valley. No concrete demands upon the federal government or the Coolidge administration. No concrete proposals as to how relief funds should be raised and distributed. Only a plea with that "the measures which may be recommended by existing federal agencies for relief. . .be carried out promptly."

Undoubtedly, large numbers of delegates left the conference very much disappointed and disillusioned. There was a strong feeling in the flooded areas that the Coolidge conference might actually undertake a study of the immediate needs of the flood sufferers. But the big capitalists and their political henchmen, which dominated the conference from the very first day, saw to it that from the very first day nothing would be done in the way of immediate relief. The Chicago Evening American was forced to report that:

"The problem of immediate relief and restoration of the flood-swept Mississippi Valley remained in the hands of the Red Cross and other relief agencies. . . DESPITE LEADERS' EFFORTS TO GIVE THE RIGHT OF WAY TO PERMANENT FLOOD CONTROL PLANS." (Cape ours)

Not a word was said for the small business men of Louisville, the following remarks:

"In one week nearly 100,000 persons and, probably, more will be in the public flood area, are destitute. I have talked to many of these people and every single one of them has expressed the desire to go back and start all over. These men want to be the ones to have the honor that they have earned and the burden will have to carry them along. I am also convinced that the Federal Relief Board did not have a representative at this meeting and I am also convinced THAT IT WAS NOT PROPOSED TO PLAN FINANCIAL RELIEF AT THIS CONFERENCE (Caps Ours). FLOOD CONTROL LEGISLATION CAN WAIT; WHAT WE NEED NOW IS FINANCIAL AID."

The capitalist point of view, representing the interests of the big banks, was expressed by William J. Conners, president of the Hibernia City Trust and Savings Bank, and chairman of the bankers' division of the conference. His opinion was:

"While the purpose of the conference is flood control and not relief, and that they were in no sense bankers but as delegates on flood control. . .

"Mr. Bush has nothing to worry about. . . Louisiana will not have to leave the 300,000 bales of cotton in the fields. . . Cotton will come to town AS A BANKER and negotiate loans on his own account. This is the point of view of Coolidge, Hoover and Mellon. This is the point of view of the bankers' conference. This is the point of view of the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S.A. This is the point of view that eventually prevailed at the Chicago conference on the Flood Control.

The interests of the flood victims were sacrificed to those of the capitalist politicians and big business men that engineered and dominated the Chicago conference.

What is needed is immediate large scale relief for the flood victims, not in money, but only in supplies, such as food, clothing, shelter, medicine, etc. Not a penny of the billion dollar industry of the Mississippi valley must be allowed to be used for the immediate relief of the flood victims. The demand must be made for the immediate confiscation of the property of the big capitalists that the relief may be carried out by those who can be trusted to look after the interests of the farmers, sharecroppers and workers in the flood areas.

The Executive Committee of the American Federation of Labor, at a meeting in Washington, has refused to [illegible] to the flood victims. [illegible] the Executive Committee [illegible] to contribute to the relief of the flood victims

ARCOS AND THE EIGHT-FIFTEEN

He paused. His audience had made a great impression.

"Or perhaps they were Russian state documents pinched by the British Secret Service and now the Russians have got 'em back again?"

Sensation!

"No Gavver, the fact of the matter is that the whole is all bunkum. The fact of the matter is that the friends of your party hate workers' Russia as much as such, that they just hit out blindly and damn the consequences!"

"Hear, hear!" sounded approving voices from the front of the stage and the billy cans who were leaning forward following the debate with the greatest interest.

One of the inhabitants of Hampton Court lost his temper completely.

"Well, what about it? Let them get out, bag and baggage! They can nothing but a lot of deceitful lousy scoundrels, violating our hospitality. Let them clear out, we don't want them here!"

The last despondent man and his friends roared with triumph.

"There you are!" "There you are!" "That's the stuff to give 'em the raid!" "Don't talk about questions of agreement and bosh of documents and all the rest of it!" "There you have it!" "Real good old down the cornerstone Tory-ism!"

"What 'bout Stanley? Who doesn't want 'em? You're not the only ship in the cabbage patch you know."

There was laughter. The leader of the Plebs, who had been trying to get a word in, now succeeded. "But I wouldn't be at all surprised if you've succeeded though, and the Russians really do go. But what say words, they won't go alone. They'll take trade goods with them."

This latter were attentive.

"They" counted a bald-headed man in the corner "they certainly, their trade! Let them take it. We can do with it."

This broadsheet was turned to the little man. "Once again Mister, who is this 'we'? Who can get along so well without Russian trade? May I have your question?"

"I've got no cotton-spool, 'Pike and Barrymore' sir, side of the Mersey."

"Yes, yes," said the opponent cutting him short, "I've got a cotton-spool, of course, you" (accent on the "you") "do without Russian trade. What you've all sorts of spools, Lawyers, jobbers, sharks in shares, shareholders and what not. Of course, you can afford to do without it. But what about the workers? Can they do it? Perhaps they're so fond up with cotton from abroad that they can afford to forego Russian trade too?

The proprietor's club paused for a reply, but none came.

"I tell you, this front policy of the die-hards is simply out of order to spite the Russians' faces."

"Spite their faces! Good gracious! Can you name any other way in which the workers can get here that they can get work? Or in Germany? And in the meantime, millions are idle, overtaxed walking about the streets looking for work, and starving at the hands and making profits, they and their fellow-workers in Russia. And, as I remarked before, I won't let 'em!"

There was a pause of four the men with the determined face. The position of class forces had changed considerably. It's a long way from bourgeois Hampton Court to the city, and the journey goes through Whitechapel, Stepney and Wandsworth and then through Proletarian Battersea, Lambeth and Brixton.

And as the battle raged, By the time the train pulled up at London Bridge the carriage showed as the result of the struggle that it got the most exacting proletarian could ever desire. The two parties drew out in battle array. The workers laughing and determined, the bourgeoisie serious and defeated, and some decided reformist itself. And then it was pulled again, leaving a shadow of a doubt, the bourgeoisie could not hold the workers down and Russia do not hold the workers down. "East is East and West is West, and never the twain shall meet."

The Changes in the Egyptian Government

By J. B. (Jerusalem)

THE ten months of the government of Adly Pasha, which came into office in June 1926 as a result of the compromise between the Zaglulist majority in the Egyptian parliament and the British government, has not brought any benefit to Egypt. In the sphere of politics, not one of the questions vitally important for Egypt — evacuation of the British troops, union of Egypt with the Sudan, abolition of the capitulations—have been solved or brought nearer to a solution. In the economic sphere, the outbreak of the cotton crisis led to the impoverishment of broad sections of the population; and the government did not succeed in doing anything to reduce the high food prices. On the other hand there were a great number of inner political difficulties; disturbances in the religious university of El-Ashad, labor conflicts and unsuccessful attempts to carry out reforms.

The government was in a constant state of embarrassment: Parliament with its Zaglulist majority, which in general is much more radically inclined than the leaders of the Party, and in particular of those moderate elements who were sent as representatives of the party into the Adly Ministry, insisted in every question on definite decisions, and overwhelmed Adly and his minstrs with awkward questions, which the government in most cases answered evasively or were unable to answer at all. The reason for this humiliating position of the government is that the independence of Egypt is, in the last resort, only a fiction. Without the sanction of the British no minister is able to carry out any measure. While, however, Adly Pasha and also the Zaglulists in his cabinet always tacitly yielded to the desires of the British, the parliamentary deputies would hear nothing of this.

Conflicts between parliament and the government became more and more frequent: The question of the discharge of British officials, which parliament demanded to be carried out thoroughly while the government, under pressure to British pressure, sabotaged; the question of the British Supreme Command in the Egyptian army on the liquidation of which parliament insisted; the constitutional problem, whether local authorities shall be elected or appointed (parliament demanded that they be elected, while the British adviser insisted on the retention of the system of appointment)—all these provided material for conflict which reddered the position of the government impossible.

Finally, it came about that the constant intervention of parliament hindered the government in its work. The Liberal Constitutional Party, whose program demanded that cooperation with Great Britain which the Prime Minister Adly Pasha carried out, wished to show the Zaglulists that they are not to be regarded as a mere facade of the cabinet, behind which the Zaglulists could proceed with their attacks in order to preserve their popularity as friends of the people and consistent nationalists, but that they are just as indispensible to the Zaglulists as the Zaglulists are to them.

Precisely at the moment when the British and a portion of the Egyptian press again published news regarding direct negotiations between Zagful Pasha and the representative of Chamberlain (the result of which would be to render the mediation of the Liberal Constitutionalists superfluous), and when the Zaglulist majority in parliament again undertook an attack in order, if possible, to bring into power a purely Zaglulist government, Adly Pasha made a clever maneuver in order to render possible the resignation of the entire cabinet: he used as a pretext the chance rejection of a vote of thanks to the government on the occasion of a financial transaction.

The fact that this action of Adly Pasha precipitated the crisis clearly shows that a ministry formed by Zagful or consisting only of Zaglulists would meet with just as much opposition on the part of the British as it would have ten months ago. There remained only the choice; open conflict with Great Britain, which would have immediately led to the dissolution of parliament and to a new period of an "unconstitutional" ministry (the "Ittehad" Party is only waiting for a "favorable moment" in order, with the aid of the British and of the king, to come to power again), or fresh compromise, acceptance of persons agreeable to the British.

Although the Nationalist Party and some radical Wafd organs recommended an open conflict (there were even hints that in view of the China adventure it would not be possible for the British Foreign Office to proceed drastically against Egypt), Zagful Pasha, with whom this time also the decision lay, again decided on a compromise: Adly Pasha was thrown overboard and his place taken by Sarvat Pasha, who was hitherto Foreign Minister in the Adly Cabinet and is even more closely connected with the British. In addition to this the Zaglulists had to give up the two most important posts in the ministry, which were the cause of frequent conflicts with the British advisers on the one side and parliament on the other, namely the finance ministry and the war ministry, to Liberal Constitutional candidates. As a result the Liberal Constitutional Party, even though numerically unchanged, emerges politically strengthened out of his cabinet crisis. The only compensation the Zaglulists received was the office of foreign minister, which is to render it possible for them to continue direct negotiations with Great Britain.

The changes in the cabinet do not in any way alter the main problems of Egypt. The cabinet was received very coldly by parliament, and the vote of confidence was granted with considerable reluctance. It is clearly perceived that it is only a question of a temporary solution in order to give Zagful Pasha the opportunity of arriving at an agreement with England. Should Zagful Pasha, in view of the obdurate line of British policy, not succeed in this, then the government of Sarvat Pasha will result in a considerable strengthening of the forces of the left wing of the Zagful Party which are in favor of the Anglo-Egyptian differences, which are continually concealed and glossed over, being fought out in the open.

Historical Sketch of the Chinese Labor Movement

A Decade of Progress In Eight Years

By EARL R. BROWDER

DUE to the widespread interest in the great revolutionary upheaval of the Chinese masses, this sketch of the history of events in particularly of interest to every worker. The tremendous growth of the Labor movement in China should serve as inspiration to the workers.—Editor.

The following sketch of the history of the Chinese Labor Movement is the result of notes made in an interview with the Chairman of the All-China Labor Federation, Sou Cheu-tsen, who is also the new minister of labor in the Nationalist government, and with the secretary of the All-China Labor Federation, Li Li-san.

The Chinese trade union movement dates from 1919. It arose during the great anti-Japanese movement, protesting against the "21 points," known as the "Fourth of May Movement." This began as a students' movement. Some embryonic organizations of workers had existed previously among the railway workers on the Peking-Mukden line, and the Peking-Hankow line, but had not yet become properly a trade union movement. These embryonic groups were transformed into trade unions during 1919.

At the same time in Shanghai there broke out the strikes of textile workers and dockers, who were in Japanese employ, 20,000 in all; while in Hongkong occurred a large metal workers' strike. These were successful, and imparted a great impetus at the Labor Movement elsewhere. During this time the trade unions in Kwantung Province made especial progress, in Canton alone their number increasing from 20 to 100 during 1919. This year may therefore be called the real beginning of the Chinese Labor Movement.

Among the most important influences affecting the course of development of the Labor Movement, were the following

1. The Russian revolution, which was made known to the Chinese masses through several weekly propaganda papers.

2. The rising Chinese Nationalist movement, which began to absorb masses into its ranks. A seamen's union was organized at that time by the Kuomintang; there existed the Social-Republican party, and also many anarchist groups. The political movement was especially strong in Canton.

3. The workers had lived through several insurrections which had failed, from these, the lesson of the necessity of strong, centralized organization had penetrated large masses.

4. Organization of the Chinese Communist Party, which furnished a central direction for the movement; this was done through a special organ, called the "Secretariat of the Chinese Labor Movement," with branches in Shanghai, Canton and Hankow.

After 1919, the trade unions grew steadily. But it was not until 1922, when another national wave of struggles broke out, that the First All-China Congress was held. First among the battles of 1922, was the great Hongkong Seamen's strike, which was declared on January 12th, and lasted 56 days. Before it ended in the granting of the workers' demands, all Hongkong labor had been drawn into the struggle, in a General Strike which included the railwaymen. The successful outcome of this struggle stimulated the workers of the entire country.

The centre of the 1922 movement was the Railwaymen's organization particularly that of the Peking-Hankow line, which had 16 branches with 18,000 members. A successful strike on this line was quickly followed by railway strikes throughout Central and Northern China; Peking-Mukden line, Shanchou-Haichow line, etc. Through this movement 50,000 railwaymen were organized in the union.

In the Province of Hupeh, a General Trade Union (Provincial Federation) was established with 23 trade unions, and 35,000 members.

In Honan Province, after a long strike of 13,000 miners of An-yuen, the movement was established, with 25 trade unions in which were 40,000 members.

The Shanghai movement was very active, with strikes of seamen, silk filature workers, postmen, and others. All these strikes, except that of the seamen, were, however, unsuccessful, and the movement there received a setback, only 20,000 members being organized as a result of the 1922 movement.

On May 1, 1922, the First All-China Labor Congress was held in Canton, on the initiative of the "Secretariat of the Chinese Labor Movement." A membership of 230,000 was represented. The most important resolution at this congress was that providing for the industrial form of organization.

It had been decided at the First Congress to convene the Second Congress at Hankow on May 1st, 1923. But on February 7th, occurred the massacre in Hankow of the railway union leaders and others by Wu Pei-fu, and white terror reigned throughout China. This massacre and repression was planned and ordered by British imperialists, who were financing Wu Pei-fu. The immediate occasion for it was the creation of the General Union of Railwaymen on the Peking-Hankow line; Wu Pei-fu dissolved the union whereupon a general strike broke out, which was joined by all Hankow workers. An All-China strike was imminent. But the movement was crushed by the army of Wu Pei-fu, who executed 43 leaders, imprisoned unknown hundreds, and dissolved all trade unions. Even sympathising schools were closed, and active unionists were driven from the factories and railroads, when not imprisoned and shot. During this reign of terror the entire movement was crushed, except at Canton, where the trade unions remained intact.

Until September, 1924, there was a period of reaction. Then the movement began to revive again. On January 18, 1925, occurred the beginning of a series of strikes in Shanghai, Tsintao, and Hankow cities. These were all successful, and regained some of the losses of hours, wages, and conditions which had been lost in the year and a half of reaction.

The period of inaction after the defeat of 1923, had been made use of by the workers to assimilate the lessons of the past experiences. There also occurred during this period a great change among the leaders of the Kuomintang, who finally had come to realize the vastly important role of the working class in the Chinese National revolution. The masses themselves had achieved political consciousness, and learned the necessity of strong trade unions. International relations had been established during the struggle, when the Russian and Japanese trade unions sent telegrams of solidarity, and the Chinese trade unions had addressed themselves to the trade union movement of the world.

On May 1, 1925, the Second All-China Labor Congress was held at Canton, in an atmosphere of a rising movement. More than 600,000 members were represented. At this congress, the All-China Labor Federation was definitely formed; theory, tactics, and organizational methods firmly established, and a recognized central leadership set up.

Quickly thereafter followed the massacre of 30th of May at Shanghai, and the Shanken massacre at Canton, on June 23. These occurrences were the signal for a national upheaval. Strikes broke out everywhere. The most notable of these was the glorious strike of the Hongkong and Canton workers against the British, and the blockade of Hongkong for more than a year. In Shanghai, more than 300,000 workers came into the trade unions. Great movement sprang up at Dairen, Tientsin, Tsintao, Nanking, Klukiang, Hankow, Liuing and wuchang conditions were everywhere improved. In Shanghai a general wage increase of 15% was secured. Not only the industrial workers, but also the artisans throughout China, flocked into the movement.

The Third All-China Labor Congress was held on May 1, 1926, in Canton. Already there were 1,200,000 members. Concrete resolutions were adopted on all problems of the movement. The movement after May 30th had raised the level of the entire working class. Previously, the political side of the trade unions had not been firm; now the trade unions were deep in the political struggle and leading it. Active and permanent contact had been established with the International Labor Movement. The movement had become mature.

Militarist agents of imperialism still tried to crush the rising trade union movement, especially at Tientsin, Tsintao, Shanghai and Mukden. But steady and rapid progress continued and continues up to day. The masses of all China had been won to the trade unions and for the revolution.

The Northern Expedition of the Revolutionary Armies was prepared by the great national strike movement following May 30. This was the basis of the military victories, which resulted in the occupation of the Yangtse Valley, the capture of Hankow and Shanghai, and the present drive toward Peking. When the revolutionary army entered Shanghai, for example, they found the city already policed by the Workers' Guards, and an administration jointly established by the trade unions, commercial associations, and students' unions, already functioning.

This is a general and very brief review of the history of the Chinese labor movement results, which in Europe or America would have taken decades to accomplish, have been accomplished in China in a few years. The demands of the trade unions now run through the whole scale, from the most elementary economic demands up to participation in government and management of industry. And these highest demands are now being realized, with Comrade Sou Cheu-tsen in charge of the labor ministry, and the trade unions already participating in the administration of the railways.

section. In another generation, when the Chinese have gained in industrial skill, things may be otherwise. For the moment, the west is probably feeling the results of Japanese competition more than the industrialisation of China.

Industries which are carried on under the factory system are: cotton spinning and weaving, silk reeling and spinning, silk weaving, cigarette making, match making, printing, engineering, electricity, distilling, brewing and aerated water manufacture, moulding, flour milling, rice milling, oil refining, bean pressing for oil and cake, sugar refining, fruit, fish and meat canning, egg preparing, saw-milling, tea curing, hosiery knitting, hair net examining, wool cleaning and press packing, ice and cold storage works; and the manufacture of soap and candles, cement and bricks, carpets and rugs, towels, biscuits, glass, porcelain and earthenware, paper, chutzoug, lacquer and enamelware.

Cotton Mills: General Conditions.

As regards the actual structure of the factories and the arrangements for lighting, ventilation, cleanliness and sanitation, there is little to choose between those in China between Chinese, Japanese and British owners. A Chinese mill built in 1934 is better than a British mill built in 1910 and a British mill built in 1924 is better than a Chinese mill built in 1910. The same applies to Japanese. Date is more or less the governing factor, as far as I could see from visiting a number of mills of different nationalities. The textile machinery is either supplied from England, from such well-known firms as Asa Lees of Oldham, or from America; and the layout is very different from the lay-out of mills in Lancashire, except that the rows of spindles are very much lower, so as to suit the height of the small children who so often tend them. I have heard it said that when New England introduced law abolishing child labor, the low child-size machinery which did not go to the Southern States of America was exported to China. It is said that one of the mills of Nagai Wata Kaisha Cotton Spinning and Weaving Co. in Shanghai is the most up-to-date cotton mill in China and I do not think that anyone has ever disputed this claim.

The cotton spinning and weaving industry is carried on largely by the labor of women and children. I have seen it estimated that of all the cotton workers in any one area were, 40 per cent children, and 35 per cent women. I can assure you, however, really young men are employed in the mills which I visited, except as foremen and as engine-men in the power houses. My general impression was that this is a women's and children's industry.

Standard of Life.

At the present time the life of the mass of the Chinese is extraordinarily poor. The peasant farmer and fisherman who constitute nearly three-quarters of the population of China are said to spend 55 per cent of their earnings on food; the coolies in the towns about 70 per cent. I have seen the workers in the cotton mills partaking of their midday meal, a small bowl of rice or bean or millet. And the industrial workers are in general not worse paid than their coolies. Yet this is all that they can possibly afford and the cost of this food is so great that it runs away with anything up to nearly three-quarters of their earnings, and leaves little over for anything else. Note, indeed, that quite clearly their wives and children are forced to work if the family is to live at all, even at their low standard.

It is generally admitted that the wage of the father of the family is not sufficient to keep the family. Both foreign and Chinese factory owners represent that, because of this, the employment of women and children, and especially, of children, is in the nature of a charity. It does not seem to have occurred to anyone that another solution would be to make the man's wage adequate for the maintenance of the family.

Very little attention has so far been paid to the lives of the Chinese workers and very little evidence has been collected. Some slender information, however, exists regarding Shanghai, the commercial and industrial capital of China, which is at the same time an International Settlement, in the government of which Great Britain overwhelmingly predominates.

Housing.

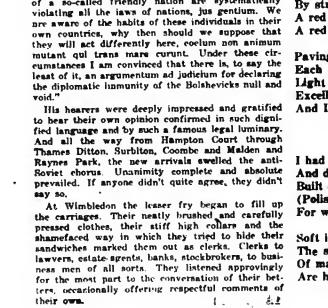
Nothing could be more miserable than the housing conditions of the factory workers in China. I visited a number of workers' dwellings in proximity to the cotton mills at Shanghai, Hankow and Wuchang. Many of the two-storeyed houses front on dark streets, so narrow that hardly a rickshaw could pass, even if the piles of garbage were cleared away.

In Shanghai the rent of a four-roomed house was $15 to $20 per month. This is frequently paid by the man who owns the front room on the ground floor and probably works in it. The other "rooms," which often consist of rough wooden partitions made out of old packing cases—and if there is any wall-paper, it is just Chinese newspapers pasted on)—are sub-let at about $5 per month. A room, 10-ft. by 12-ft. which I saw, housed two families. But a back partition with two more families only cost $4 per month, as there was no window. In the rooms were two wooden beds—crude home-made affairs, little more than raised planks, about 5-ft. wide, covered with a torn and dirty piece of matting. In one I did see a real bed. The only other furniture was an open brick brazier—there was no fireplace—and some old clothes hung on a nail. These dwellings were just outside two cotton mills, where the average wage of the cotton mill hands who inhabited them is given as $12 per month. Probably the wife and children were also wage-earners, otherwise one-sixth of the wage would go in rent, even if the workers shared with another family the worst kind of room with no window.

There was generally a water supply from a tap in each street, similar to the village pump in our old-fashioned villages, but no evidence of any sanitary arrangements, and refuse was just thrown into the street. In Shanghai, I was told that some workers pay a rental of 10 cents per month for a plank in a room with thirty other workers.

It is possible that replicas of some of these filthy grimy brick or stone dwellings could be found in parts of East London or Glasgow. But a great number of workers in China live in mere huts, grouped near the mills or factories on any waste ground available. This I saw both at Shanghai and Hankow. Some that I saw at Shanghai were just outside the Ewo Cotton Mills, owned by one of the two largest British firms out East. They consist of low huts with not more than 5-ft. head room, made of bamboo poles stuck into the ground and covered with mud plaster. The police frequently come and burn these houses down, as being too insanitary; but they are soon rebuilt. At other times, except in periods of drought, winds and heavy rains often carry off the roof or wash away the whole house. These huts consist of just one room, containing a bare mat or two to sleep on, a brick oven, bowls and sometimes a broken chair or table. The surrounding stench was almost overpowering. There was stagnant water and, of course, no drainage system or sanitation. Skin diseases appeared to be very prevalent. The following is another description furnished by a Chinese Y. M. C. A. investigator, of one of these huts, of which there are now apparently many thousands in various parts of Shanghai, built of bamboo, mud, lime and straw:

"The house with six inmates, father, mother and four children, occupied a space of about 10-ft. by 14-ft. The roof, built of bamboo matting and straw, now in a dilapidated state, lined underneath with soot and cobwebs, lets in water even in a shower. The walls, riddled with holes, are caving in and afford no privacy and no protection against cold and storm. There is no flooring, everything rests on an uneven mud floor. There is no drainage and no lavatory. The house is surrounded by garbage heaps and cesspools. One's throat becomes inflamed in this neighborhood in ten minutes. On rainy days water contaminated by refuse and manure enters and floods the house to a depth of several inches. After a storm the author has seen the inmates moving about in water and mud up to the knees and little children covered with filth confined to the spaces on beds and chairs. In this place which they called home is to be found their living room, bedroom, kitchen and bathroom all in one. In this particular working community there are nearly 400 such 'homes.'"



Some of the mill owners, notably the Japanese Naigai Wata Kaisha Cotton Spinning and Weaving Company, Ltd., have built special quarters to be rented by their workers and their families at a low rental. This is, of course, an immense advance on a mud hut; but from what I have seen elsewhere, I doubt whether employes in Japanese mills and other factories are not practically prisoners housed in a compound.

I will conclude this section on housing in the modernized industrial cities of China, by quoting Mr. Thomen Tchou, Director of the Shanghai Benevolent Industrial Institution. Mr. Tchou has recently conducted an enquiry, a report of which is published by the International Labor Office, into the problem of China's modern slums, the slums into which are crowded the Chinese workers, drawn into the great industrialised foreign Treaty Ports, as our own workers were drawn into the factory towns of Lancashire at the time of the Industrial Revolution. Mr. Tchou says that these slums, which have grown up recently around Shanghai's great new Western factories, are so horrible that "their equal has never been seen in the Western world, nor in China in past generations, except in abnormal times of famines, floods, and similar calamities."

Here empires rise and fall, here wars are made,
And in their chairs the bankers, gray and staid,
Here daily plan, as calmly as can be,
The destinies of man, from ten to three!

"Arcos" and the "Eight-Fifteen"

By ANDREW WILLMER

THE "8-15" to London Bridge was under steam. The driver's head poked out of the cab of the panting engine and looked down the platform to where the guard stood with one eye on the station clock and the other eye on the station entrance for late-comers. Inside the train well-dressed and well-fed gentlemen settled down comfortably into corner seats with their newspapers before them.

The "8-15" starts every morning from Hampton Court and carries a very select load into town. There is always plenty of room, for the train only fills up later on. In the meantime the comfortable citizens of Hampton Court and the near-by stations have always bagged the best seats.

The last stragglers scurried along the platform and wrenched open the carriage doors. The green flag of the guard waved in the air and a sharp blast sounded on his whistle. 8.15 a. m. and the train slowly slid out of the station gathering speed and rushing through the beautiful countryside fresh in the morning sun. Hampton Court is a very select residential quarter. It has been since the sixteenth century when Cardinal Wolsey built a palace there and presented it to the English Bluebird, Henry VIII. No factory smoke ever sullies its skies. Industry is banished from its breast and the smell of jam and pickle factories never offends its delicate nostrils. The only smoke that curls around under its placid skies is the peaceful, friendly smoke of the English fireside or the long romantic trailing smoke from the funnels of hurrying trains.

In the roomy carriages of the "8-15" lawyers greeted better-class estate-agents whilst stockbrokers discussed the latest news with other professional and business men of all descriptions. The smoker quickly became animated.

"Good morning." "Ah, good morning, how d'you do?"

"Have you read that about 'Arcos'?"

"Why of course, splendid piece of work. Ought to have been done long ago."

"You're right sir. I have the impression that this Joynson-Hicks is a very capable person and he certainly has very fine men under him. There is nothing to beat our police sir."

"No, you're right, finest body of men in the world. High time they kicked those damned Russians out, bag and baggage!"

"I can't understand what the government was thinking about to let it go so far. Seven tons of documents, and all in Russian! Just think of that!"

"Yes, and secret safes let into the walls and hidden with wall-paper. Something fishy about that, what?"

"Arms have also been found."

"What? Arms! You don't say so?"

"Yes sir, there it stands in black and white."

"And that's only the so-called trading establishment. What do you think a search of the embassy would reveal?"

"That's right. I don't know what the government are about I'm sure. The murderous rabble ignore all the normal rules of civilized conduct, it's far too decent of us to treat them with kid gloves."

"What do you think of that suggestion as seen from the legal point of view Mr. Cholmondely?"

The pompous gentleman in the corner thus deferentially addressed looked up from his scrutiny of a bundle of papers tied with red tape and the strain on his row of double chins relaxed a little. He peered over his gold-rimmed pince-nez at his fellow travellers, cleared his throat with a little cough and declared ponderously:

"In my opinion one may reason from the present case of the trade institution to the embassy, ab uno disce omnes. The law officers of the crown are undoubtedly in possession of a mass of evidence showing that the representatives and institutions of a so-called friendly nation are systematically violating all the laws of nations, jus gentium. We are aware of the habits of these individuals in their own countries, why then should we suppose that they will act differently here, coelum non animum mutant qui trans mare curunt. Under these circumstances I am convinced that there is, to say the least of it, an argumentum ad judicium for declaring the diplomatic immunity of the Bolsheviks null and void."

His hearers were deeply impressed and gratified to hear their own opinion confirmed in such dignified language and by such a famous legal luminary. And all the way from Hampton Court through Thames Ditton, Surbiton, Coombe and Malden and Raynes Park, the new arrivals swelled the anti-Soviet chorus. Unanimity complete and absolute prevailed. If anyone didn't quite agree, they didn't say so.

At Wimbledon the leaser fry began to fill up the carriages. Their neatly brushed and carefully pressed clothes, their stiff high collars and the shamefaced way in which they tried to hide their sandwiches marked them out as clerks. Clerks to lawyers, estate-agents, banks, stockbrokers, to business men of all sorts. They listened approvingly for the most part to the conversation of their betters, occasionally offering respectful comments of their own.

At Hampton Court, cigars and the "Times" with eggs and bacon and coffee for breakfast had held undisputed sway. At Wimbledon, however, cigarettes and the "Daily Mail" with tea, bread and butter, marmelade, Quaker Oats, etc., for breakfast, began to get the upper hand.

At Earlsfield a liberal-minded bank clerk, the secretary of his debating society clambered into the smoker and actually began to cast mild doubts upon the advisability of the government's action. He was instantly bombarded with reproaches from the ring of excited gentlemen.

The inspiring example of the idealistic bank clerk caused one or two other gentlemen who had not previously dared to express any opinion, to air mild doubts also and up to Clapham Junction the dissident Liberals wriggled under the attacks of their more pugnacious conservative brethren.

But at Clapham Junction a change came o'er the spirit of the scene. New arrivals came in considerable force and occupied most of the still vacant seats. A big broad-shouldered man bore the first pipe into the smoker like a standard of battle. He was followed by others. Having taken a seat he bent over sideways to drag a doubled-up newspaper from his side pocket. In doing so he tipped the top hat of a fat stockbroker over his eyes.

"Sorry Mister. Couldn't be helped."

And with a final wrench the newspaper came out. Its owner straightened it out. The first "Daily Herald"! There were others.

A fat Conservative encouraged by the previous weight of opinion on his side, leaned forward.

"Well, and what do you think of that my man?" he asked loftily. "Seven tons of documents, arms, secret safes, letters in code!"

PAVING STONES AND ASPHALT

I.

I had a dream,
And dreamed that the Revolution
Would be founded
Upon paving stones.
Fondly I viewed them,
Piled high by laborers in the cities,
Newly chisled,
Or lately torn from old streets
By strong hands,
A red flag stuck in each pile,
A red lantern by night.

Paving stones,
Each a hundredweight,
Light missiles for strong men on house-tops,
Excellent material for barricades—
And Labor temples!

II.

I had a dream,
And dreamed of wide boulevards
Built of smooth asphalt (Polished like glass
For wheels of swift pleasure cars.)

Soft in the fierce heat—
The steel-shod feet
Of marching multitudes
Are held fast in black mire!

—HENRY REICH, JR.

The broad-shouldered man looked up and met the challenge.

"I'm not your man, guvnor. And if you want to know what I think about it, well, I think it's the dirtiest, meanest bit of blackguardism I've seen for many a long day."

"What!" "What's that?" "The man's a Bolshevik!" "Why, what do you mean sir!" burst from the startled gentlemen from Hampton Court to Wimbledon. Sounds of agreement with the broad-shouldered one came from some of the new arrivals.

"What do I mean? Well, I mean this: the people who are always talking about honor and loyalty, the members of the gentlemanly party, the Conservative Die-hards have broken the plighted word of the British government as though it were worth less than nothing. They have raided houses which were guaranteed immunity by themselves, smashed open doors, stolen diplomatic correspondence, ill-treated the employes, let the women be searched on the body by male police and in general conducted themselves like their Chinese bandits."

There was a moment or two's silence of sheer paralysis. The speaker went on.

"The Conservatives accused the Russians again and again of breaches of agreement, but when they were asked to prove it, they couldn't prove one single concrete instance."

By this time his listeners had recovered from their astonishment and there were almost roars of dissent from the irate Conservatives, but the broad-shouldered one stuck to his guns.

"Can anyone of you prove one concrete practical breach of the trade agreement?" he persisted. "If you can, then you can do more than Chamberlain has been able to do."

Half a dozen voices assailed him with, "But the propaganda. . ." "Communism!" "Bolshevism!"

"That's no argument," declared the stalwart. "The propaganda doesn't come from Moorgate Street, most of it comes from King Street. And I remember just such propaganda years before ever an official representative of the Soviet government set foot on our shores, before the Soviet government existed in fact."

"That may be so," interposed an apoplectic looking old gentleman, "but we have certain proof now that the Russians have subsidised and encouraged this anti-constitutional propaganda."

"Ho! Ho! Ho!" laughed the man with the pipe, "you are jolly fine ones to talk about the constitution, when your party has just proved that it is ready to fling all the laws of the land into the sea to get it's own way!"

"But the seven tons of documents, the arms, the secret safes!" they bombarded him.

"Seven tons of fiddlesticks!" said another man near the door, speaking for the first time. He also was broad-shouldered with big red hands and huge hob-nailed boots. Between his feet there was a tin can which obviously contained his dinner. "Fiddlesticks!" he repeated energetically whilst his friends laughed. "If you went into any big business concern and pinched all the papers you could lay hands on, I dare say you'd get seven tons of 'documents' too if you weighed 'em!"

There was renewed laughter and one or two of the well-dressed passengers looked a little foolish.

"I suppose you think the Russians have been carefully writing down all their conspiracies and savin' 'em up until they got seven tons of documents all ready for the navvies to nice little 'safes.'"

There were roars of laughter. No one made any attempt to answer.

"And as for the arms," said a thin young man with a union badge wedged in between a brace of pistol brokers, "they were shot guns for export to Siberia. Who thinks you can make a revolution with shot guns?"

At the next station, Vauxhall, matters got still worse. More men with smelly pipes and their hands got into the smoker. They all had their food in billy cans which they deposited on the floor of the carriage. There was not a pair of spats to be seen amongst the lot of them. And some of them even were chokers instead of decent collars and ties. In consequence the rebellion of their forces, to the Marxists call it, changed still further to the disadvantage of the citizens from Hampton Court to Wimbledon.

"The fact of the matter is," snapped a beaky-nose solicitor from Raynes Park, "that these foreign spies have captured British state documents of paramount importance, and the government is to be dilluded in sheer self-defence, by any strong possible means to recover them." And his little beady eyes glittered angrily at the broad-shouldered man who had first taken up the cudgels. But the latter was not in the least put out.

"Tell that to the horse marines, Mister. Those seven tons of documents the police have taken were all in Russian. You said that yourself. Now even if you even seemed to think it was justifiable for deceitful for Russians to write in Russian, but British state documents are written in English which means that the dullest blockhead in the world is able to find 'em in a jiffy if they were really there."

SOVIET WORKERS, PEASANTS HIT AT IMPERIALISTS

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

SEVERAL members of the Bomb Squad had a mild surprise coming to them last Monday, when divers, not belonging to that large but respectable fraternity known as the workingclass peeped on the said pillars of the law and disclosed the arrests in their trousers. There was cursing and gnashing of molars. The members of the Bomb Squad are not accustomed to this kind of treatment. It reminds us somewhat of Chicago.

ONE exciting night a labor faker handed out local union membership cards to half a dozen members of the detective bureau of that city. A new set of officials were to be elected that night. The detectives showed up alright, but so did the membership. And there was a lot of fun for all those who remained neutral, watching the dust getting chased around the hall thru the impact of the bodies of the detectives on the furniture. The detectives came around to maintain law and order. They got lots of order but very little law.

THE members of the police force have no more right to use violence on citizens than have ordinary thugs. But right means nothing to those we are charged with the task of defending the interests of the capitalists. We have no record of the police attacking the bosses. In the present strike conducted by the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union against the employers that violated their agreement with the union and against the scabbery of the bureaucrats of the A. F. of L. the police are clearly on the side of the bosses and the bureaucrats.

THAT white guardist officers under the inspiration and very likely in the pay of the British government had planned a wide campaign of assassination of Soviet officials is suggested in articles appearing in the Moscow press in comment on the murder of the Soviet Minister at Warsaw. Those scoundrels were plotting to dynamite the Kremlin and also a congress of workers and peasants in session in a large theatre.

THE imperialists feel that the removal of Stalin, Buharin, Rykoff and other outstanding leaders would rob the Soviet Government of some of its best minds and make the tasks of overthrowing the government easier. After the French revolution and up until the time that England succeeded in crushing Napoleon her daggers were as busy as her cannon against the French revolution and the French military hegemony on the continent. Lloyd George recently pointed out in the house of commons that Britain spent millions trying to restore Czardom as she did trying to restore the Bourbons in France.

YET those hypocrites have the impudence to charge the Soviet government with interfering in the domestic affairs of Great Britain. It is a device almost universally used by capitalist governments to blame a revolutionary movement or a revolutionary government for the discontent that prevails in their own countries. The real blame rests on the shoulders of the greedy exploiters.

• • •

THE British Royal Air Force is busy dropping bombs on villages on the North West frontier of India. Fifty of the unfortunate victims of British imperialism were slaughtered by the valiant heroes of the air. American aviators bring the blessing of "Civilization" to Nicaragua and the Philippines and they are now using young Lindbergh and his great feat in the propagandize the masses in favor of the biggest air navy in the world.

Meet this Furious Hatred!

David Gordon, the writer of the poem "America," which has offended the dignity of the Military Order of the World War, the Keymen of America, as well as the august judges on the bench, has been sentenced to the reformatory. In the proceedings in the Supreme Court, Part I, during which the request for a certificate of reasonable doubt for William F. Dunne was argued, Judge Mullan proclaimed the sentiment that the writer of the poem should be "tarred and feathered". These are expressions of the hatred of the ruling class toward our paper.

We glory in the fact that the ruling class hates us so bitterly. Their hatred is born of the fear of our power and influence upon the masses of oppressed and exploited workers. We glory in it all the more because through our courage and militancy we have at the same time aroused the deepest affection and devotion among the masses of the workers. The decision of the court in the case of Comrade Gordon will add new enthusiasm to the flow of contributions which are coming in to The DAILY WORKER. For every word of hostility uttered by the judge and the district attorney we will match a dollar from the loyal supporters of The DAILY WORKER. Don't wait. Do it now.

Contributions Pour in for Construction of New Air Squadron; Workers Give Wages

(Special To The DAILY WORKER.)

MOSCOW, June 10.——All over the Soviet Union, in the most remote towns of Siberia, in all parts of the Caucasus, Crimea and Central Asia demonstrations and meetings are being held to protest against the brutal murder of M. Woikoff, minister to Poland from the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

Pledging their full loyalty to the workers' and peasants' government and branding the series of outrages against the Soviet Union as entirely inspired by British imperialists and in no way reflecting the sentiments of any portion of the population in the U. S. S. R., huge meetings of workers are denouncing the provocatory acts of the imperialist powers.

Scientists Also.

A group of Ukrainian scientists and Georgian authors have published declarations in which they point out that the October revolution has opened the greatest prospects for scientific, cultural and economic construction and express their willingness to do everything possible for the defence of the achievements of the revolution.

Build Air Squadron.

Many workers' and peasants' institutions instead of laying wreaths on the grave of the murdered envoy to Poland have assigned funds to the Bureau of Aviation for the construction of a new air squadron.

The workers of Kiev, Tiflis, Kharkov and other towns are giving portions of their wages for the construction of the squadron.

VICTORY NEAR IN 12-WEEK'S FIGHT OF THE PLUMBERS

Helpers Will Be Brot Into Union

Victory for the Brooklyn plumbers, on strike since April 1, is seen as a result of a conference between Plumbers' Local 1 and the United Masters' Association, which has announced that it will employ all of the workers now on strike beginning Monday morning.

This independent group of bosses has broken away from the principal employers' group and has promised to hire all the workers on the five-day week, $12.50 a day basis. They also pledge to raise the pay to $13.75 a day as soon as the rest of the building trades gain the five-day week.

The independent bosses and the local union also agree to take up the question of getting the plumbers' helpers into the union before the end of the year. The independent group represents 77 bosses. A. Libsky is their president.

Last night's meeting was held at Ace Hall, Brooklyn. Thomas Oates, president of the local, read the report of the conference committee.

When this edition of The DAILY WORKER went to press the workers had not yet voted whether or not they would accept the bosses' terms.

BALTIMORE, June 10.—Walter J. Biesemann, who during the war was fair price commissioner for Maryland, was today sentenced to six months in jail by Judge Coleman in Federal Court on conviction of having embezzled confidential government information.

CLENCHED FISTS ANSWER BALDWIN IN SOVIET UNION

Spontaneous Protest Thunders in Streets

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.
(Special to The Daily Worker).

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.—((By Mail)—An intense and mounting wave of hitherto unexpressed ire against the growing series of provocative acts of the Baldwin-Chamberlain government in Great Britain is sweeping over the Union of Soviet Republics.

This raid on the Soviet Trade Delegation in London came on the heels of the raid by the British puppet, Chang Tso Lin, on the Soviet embassy in Peking. And now (May 25) the die-hard intention seems to be to break off all diplomatic as well as trade relations with the Soviet Union.

This feeling of Soviet Labor against the British imperialism that is plotting the new war against the Soviet Union, was brought vividly home to me during the visit to the "Amo" Plant, Moscow's automobile works.

"We are going to have a meeting at quitting time," said Vladimus Yelesian.

"What about?" I asked.

"About the raid on the offices of Arcos and our Trade Delegation in London," was the answer.

Sure enough. At that very moment the great throng of workers was assembling outside this very building. No long speeches were necessary. The workers had all read the facts about the raids in their own press. They had discussed them thoroly among themselves. There was a short statement by one of the workers. Then the reading of the resolution. In an instant, as the reading of the resolution ended, a hillowy sea of hands—of clenched fists—rose high above the throng. The "Amo" workers had spoken unanimously against the British imperialist foe. The resolutions adopted were as follows:

"The workers and employes of the factory Amos have learned from the newspapers and from the report of Comrade Shellenbaum, concerning the new and unheard of behavior of the

Plumbers Helpers Will Be Tried On June 14 In Coney

The five striking plumbers' helpers arrested Thursday when picketing in Coney Island were released in $500 bail for trial June 14 yesterday in Coney Island Magistrates Court.

Thomas Russo, one of the pickets is still nursing a sore leg as a result of the beating he received at the time of his arrest.

According to the American Association of Plumbers Helpers, which is conducting the strike, the struggle is still going strong and will continue until victory is achieved.

At the Universities of Geneva and Paris, Woikoff studied mathematics.

MORE COAL MINE DEATHS PROVE A UNION IS NEEDED

Miners Picket as Scabs Consider Low Wages

BLUEFIELD, West Virginia, June 10.—Another non-union mine accident, adding to the truly stunning record so far achieved this year, has demonstrated that without organization among the miners, there is no possibility of forcing the employers to maintain even ordinary safe working conditions.

Four miners are dead here today, and another is in a critical condition in a hospital as the result of a slate cave-in at the Keystone Coal and Coke Co. mine last night.

Mine Known Dangerous.

The dead are:—Joe Talazarro, William Braddon and Morie Hooks, all white, and Grady Crider, Negro. Henry Griffin is suffering internal injuries, two broken limbs and a crushed foot.

The men were clearing the main entry to the mine, preparatory to resuming operations after a shutdown. The mine was known to be unsafe, and several of the miners objected to the dangerous plan of the management to remove props and other timber and "clean her all out" in the entranceway. They were ordered to continue and when a certain amount of support was removed, a fifty ton slab of slate came down from the ceiling, and the third fatal accident in McDowell County within one month was accomplished.

Hundreds Picket.

NEW KENSINGTON, Pa., June 10.—Reports that the Valley Camp Coal Company has resumed operation on a non-union basis in their Kinloch mine near here, with scabs imported from out of town, has created deep resentment among the union miners.

A. F. L. ATTEMPT TO WHITEWASH GROSS ASSAULT

Thirty Shops Sign With Joint Board

The attempt to place the murderous attack on Aaron Gross, furrier leader, last Thursday morning as a fight between two factions within the Joint Board, was made by Edward McGrady, American Federation of Labor representative, was branded as an utter falsehood by the Furriers' Union Joint Board yesterday.

The Joint Board pointed out that the attorney representing the two gangsters when they appeared in court was a member of the law firm of Samuel Markowich, counsel for the International.

According to the latest information Gross is still in a serious condition.

Two Big Meetings.

The striking furriers held two large meetings yesterday afternoon. In spite of the intense heat thousands of workers jammed Webster Hall and Manhattan Lyceum to capacity.

Amid loud cheering the assembled workers were informed that since the strike started last Friday, 30 shops have signed up with the Joint Board and six others are expected to sign very shortly. This is seen as the beginning of the break in the ranks of the manufacturers.

"We challenge the city authorities to thoroughly investigate the attack on Gross," declared Gold. "If they are not cowards, huildozed by William Green and his clique they will do so.

Were In A. F. of L. Pay.

"The two gangsters who attacked Gross were in the pay of the American Federation of Labor and were protected by the police. I am not speaking in Yiddish so all the spies who are here this afternoon can hear what I have to say.

"The police department says it is not taking sides in the struggle. Those are sweet words to hear, but from our experiences we know differently. McGrady and his friends would not dare attack the fur workers unless they were sure of having the support of the police department."

To Give Proof.

"We intend to present to the police commissioner definite proof of our charges. We will show that Isaac Walter gave the orders to the two gangsters, Friedman and Cohen to attack our fellow worker and comrade, Aaron Gross."

McGrady's Bluff.

"McGrady, of the A. F. of L. Reorganization Committee, has tried to deny that the two gangsters who attacked Gross were right wing hirelings; but it was the lawyer of the International who defended them in court, and it was I. Walter, a member of the Reorganization Committee who pointed out Gross to the two men who attacked him.

"We challenge Police Commissioner Warren and Mayor Walker to prove it by finding the persons who are guilty of the assaults which have been made on our workers during this past week."

Deported for Fight Against Fascism

A group of revolutionists and anti-fascists held a farewell to Enea Sormenti, Communist editor, and political exile from the bloody clutches of the fascist tyranny in Italy, whose order for deportation from the United States becomes effective in a few days, at a meeting hall on 39th Street Thursday evening (and this morning).

Instead of bewailing the faith of revolutionists who come to this country and are sent away by the Wall Street government, the sentiment of the meeting was that those who remain in the country will put up a more determined fight than ever, not only against fascism, but against the

SHANGHAI UNIONS BOYCOTT BRITISH, JAPANESE GOODS

Appeal for Funds to Aid Nationalist Wounded

SHANGHAI, June 10.—Steps are being taken here for the organization of anti-British and anti-Japan, boycotts.

The rapid advance of the Hankow Nationalist troops has again brought to the fore the danger of an open imperialist war against China and workers here are arousing popular sentiment against the purchase of their goods.

The proposed boycott is not a move on part of the right wing supporters of Chiang Kai-shek who are in control of the city. It is a spontaneous protest on the part of the masses of workers who are almost unanimously in favor of the Nationalists. British and Japanese trade has already dropped from 15 to 30 per cent in the last 4 months.

An especial effort to raise funds in the United States to aid Nationalists troops wounded in the armed struggle against domestic militarism and foreign imperialism is being launched at Hankow.

The leaders of the DAILY WORKER who wish to aid the Chinese liberation struggle are urged to send whatever they can to Mme. Sun Yat Sen, who is directing the drive, with the aid of many prominent foreigners, among them Anna Louise Strong. Mme. Sun Yat-sen can be reached at the care of the Chinese Red Cross at Hankow, China.

'AMERICA' AUTHOR GIVEN LONG TERM IN REFORMATORY

Gordon May Serve 3 Years for His Poem

For writing the poem "America" David Gordon, 18, was yesterday sentenced to serve an indeterminate sentence up to three years in the city reformatory by Justices Murphy, Kelly and Fetherstone, in special sessions.

For publishing the poem in The DAILY WORKER, William Dunne editor, is now serving 30 days in the workhouse, and a fine of $500, the maximum under the law, was imposed upon the paper.

In imposing sentence upon Gordon, an active member of the Young Workers' League, Justice Murphy expressed regret that it was not within his power to sentence him to the state penitentary.

The judge put the youth thru a severe grilling, and expressed great indignation at the sentiments of the poem which he characterized as a "libel against the United States".

Gordon was asked if he was a Communist and, various other questions dealing with his attitude toward the present order of things.

Before being sentenced Gordon attempted to speak concerning the poem, but was cut short by the judge.

Friends of the young man were appalled at the severity of the sentence imposed, especially in view of the fact that in the case of the actress, Mae West, and others convicted under the same statute against "obscenity", a sentence of only 10 days was imposed.

White Guard Plots Bared in U. S. S. R.

Russ White Guard Plots.

MOSCOW, June 10.—The activities of White Guardists in the Soviet Union, acting in conjunction with the Fascisti units now led by the ex-Tsarist ambassador to Rome, Count Carlo Sforza, to overthrow the present government to foment a counter-revolution, are being uncovered here.

Among the terrorist plots that have been headed are attempts on the life of Chicherin, commissar of foreign affairs, attempts at the assassination of members Soviet representatives in Berlin, and the brutal murder of Vorovsky.

The plans of various white terrorist groups, organized with the aid of the British, included the assassination of Stalin, Bukharin and Rykoff. Various attempts at stirring the peasantry to revolt were made. The attempts were futile because of the unswerving loyalty and profound devotion of the workers and peasants to the Soviet government.

The Collegium of the All-Union State Political Department has issued the following communique:

Seeing that monarchist white guardist elements are acting from abroad at the instructions and with the funds of a foreign intelligence service which has openly passed to a terroristic diversional destructive struggle, the Collegium of the All-Union State Political Department, has decided to publish the death sentence by shooting which was passed at a sitting on the ninth of June, 1927, on the following persons:

He was one of the ex-closest assistants of Boris Savinkoff in the whiteguardist "Union for the Defence of Motherland and Freedom" and one of his ex-assistants in organizing, with British government funds, together with George Sidney Riley, officer in the British intelligence service and air forces, attempts on the Soviet delegation at the Genoa conference, headed by Chicherin, when that delegation passed through Berlin; organized numerous other attempts on Soviet representatives in Germany within the period from 1921 to 1923

(12) Boris Naryshkin, ex-officer in the Tchernigov Russian regiment, Cyril's supporter, who advocated the necessity of British intervention and systematically worked for the creation of illegal counter-revolutionary groups. He rendered spying services to numerous foreign representatives in Moscow.

ARMY EXPLOITS LINDBERGH SAY HIGH OFFICERS

"Don't Wear Uniform" Is Appeal of U.S. Aces

WASHINGTON, June 10. — The army officials fear that the U. S. Army is trying to exploit the airplane trip of Col. Lindbergh and make an orgy of recruiting and militarism out of his reception back in America has been noticed even by certain very non-radical organizations.

Latest of these is the "United State Air Force Association" in which the two chief figures are Colonel (formerly Brig. General) Wm. Mitchell and Eddie Rickenbacker, leading American ace in the world war.

Sends Radiogram.

The U. S. Air Force Association has sent the following wireless message to Lindbergh.

"Army officials endeavoring to get you in uniform for the exploitation of the army. Your success was made as a civilian. Do not fall for their stuff."

The air force association claims a membership of 20,000.

"The government officials have spared no efforts in their attempts to belittle aviation", declared J. Edward Cassidy, director of the association today after sending the radiogram, "and took no notice whatever of Col. Lindbergh's efforts until he had made a success and had received a royal reception abroad. He was then forced to come to Washington before reaching New York. This was effected by having the president issue a "royal command" to have Lindbergh brought direct to Washington on a warship.

"Bureaucratic Chicanery."

Referring to the uniform incident, Cassidy said that the war department is trying "to get Lindbergh into a military uniform for his arrival in order that the public may be led to conclude that his success was in a army affair.

"The practical exclusion of civilian bodies from the escort of Colonel Lindbergh, and the elimination of Billy Mitchell from any consideration in the reception, are features which should receive the attention of the public as a piece of petty politics and bureaucratic chicanery."

Await Lindbergh.

Lacking the authority to create a public holiday, Mayor Walker yesterday declared Monday, the day of the arrival of Charles A. Lindbergh here, a day of public celebration. In a "proclamation" His Honor asked that the national colors be displayed everywhere.

Wall Street Dictatorship Endangering Peace Again of Clandestine Plot

SUNDAY, June 10.—Great preparations are being made in Washington, diplomatic authorities to have them visit Washington and other capitals of Europe, and to settle outstanding issues so as to prevent the hastily heralded "airplane diplomacy" from coming to make the U. S. just a little too friendly with "Sky" late enemies, still oppressed by the Dawes plan.

The Hindenburg officialdom and the Nationalist party has acted on the occasion of Chamberlin and Levine's visit to make some adverse criticism of Lindbergh, who, under similar diplomatic guidance, established from entering any but allied countries.

At the advice of the American embassy, Chamberlin and Levine have decided to forego the pleasure of meeting their wives on their arrival at Bremen next week and have accepted invitations which will keep them away from Berlin for ten days or more.

MASS MEETING IN BOSTON TO HEAR SINCLAIR

Bookclerk Selling "Oil" Fined by Judge

BOSTON, June 10.—Upton Sinclair today launched into a campaign against the Massachusetts book banning law.

As the prosecution of a bookstore clerk, who sold a copy of Sinclair's latest novel "Oil," moved toward a jury trial, the author announced that he was going to hire a hall for a free mass meeting Monday morning to "explain to all who care to hear me the very unjust law which cripples the book business in this state."

Sinclair said he would exhibit Shakespeare's "Hamlet," the Bible and a copy of "Oil," to show that both "Hamlet" and the Bible contain passages which, he said, "are incontestably obscene under the terms of the Massachusetts law."

"If the law were enforced, selling the Bible would be a crime," he said, adding, "I shall point out the objectionable passages and invite the police to buy the offending book and arrest me for selling it."

In Municipal Court Judge William H. Sullivan found John Gritz, 29, bookstore clerk, guilty of selling "Oil," which, in his opinion, was in violation of the statutes. Gritz was fined $100 and trial by jury was set for July following an appeal.

Wet Lowman Dry Head

WASHINGTON, June 10.—The appointment of Seymour Lowman, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of New York State, as assistant secretary of the treasury in charge of prohibition enforcement, was officially announced today by President Coolidge. Lowman succeeds General Lincoln C. Andrews, resigned. He has been considered a "wet" in politics.

500 N. Y. Workers to Visit Soviet Union On Six Weeks' Tour

500 workers of New York will have an opportunity of making a tourists' trip to U. S. S. R. July 14 to study working class conditions and recent Soviet cultural developments. The World Tourists, Inc., which has just opened offices at 41 Union Square, Room 803, are the sponsors of this enterprise. They plan to charter the tourist division of the steamer "Gripsholm," a new 2500-ton ship of the Swedish American Line and sail for Soviet Russia the middle of next month for a six weeks tour. The trip will take in Leningrad, Moscow and a number of other neighboring cities under the guidance of the U. S. S. R. Committee for Cultural Relations with

While there have been several student delegations and other special travel groups to Moscow, this marks the beginning of general tourist travel.

The American party, which is to be sub-divided into small groups when it reaches Russia, will travel with interpreters and be received by delegations at the various factories and public institutions, which are on the itinerary. Because of the pressing shortage in Soviet Russia, such a tour would be impossible unless arrangements were made with some such group as the Committee for Cultural Relations, which is responsible for rooms and meals for all the visitors at all points. One of the residences to be used by the tourists will be a former castle which has been transformed into a dormitory for one of the engineering societies. The tourists will be given the best chances of visiting the various factories and workers' unions.

The first Russian tour will last six weeks, from July 14 to Labor Day. Other tours will be arranged by the World Tourists as public interest warrants.

The price for the complete trip, including rooms, theatres, meals, boat and train fares both ways, is $575.

Those interested in this tour to Russia are urged to make inquiries and applications at once at the office of the World Tourists, Inc., 41 Union Square, Room 803. It will be open daily from 9 to 7.

Wall Street government that aids Mussolini against his enemies in the United States.

Pennance Deportation.

The affair was in the nature of a banquet with Fascisco Coco as chairman, who spoke of the work of Sormenti in this country and who called upon other speakers present to voice their sentiments. Celso Tresca delivered a speech in Italian and H. M. Wicks spoke in English, telling his hearers that the United States, once the haven of refuge for the oppressed of all lands had now become the bloodhound for every fascist despotism in Europe and mercilessly scored the hypocrisy and duplicity of the Coolidge-Wall Street government at Washington. He concluded with the declaration that the Communists in America would eventually lead the working class to revolution against the most powerful and arrogant imperialism in the world and that the time would come when Sormenti and other revolutionists deported from these shores could come back and laugh over the corpse of the tyranny that sent them away.

Rose Baron spoke for the International Labor Defense describing the fight that had been made to save Sormenti from being deported to the fascist assassins and the partial victory inasmuch as he has been permitted to leave for any other country he chooses—where he can get in.

In conclusion Sormenti spoke in Italian and English and declared that no matter where he was he would be fighting for the American working class.

Sormenti is to speak Sunday at a Mettecti memorial held at the Church of All Nations, 2nd Avenue, near First Street.

cted night and day by hundreds of miners.

Company Fortifies.

The company has erected a sort of fort around the mine and the company houses, and armed coal and iron police are constantly on guard. The mine area has the appearance of an armed camp.

Employment agencies in large cities are recruiting scab labor with promises of good working conditions and no trouble. One out-of-town arrival who was approached by the miners explained that he had a wife and five children, and that he had accepted the job in a desperate effort to keep them from starvation.

The miners in New Kensington and the Valley are waging a grim fight to hold their union intact in the face of the onslaught of the coal barons.

Pittsburgh Coal Opens Office.

BROWNSVILLE, Pa., June 10.—The Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Company, whose miners were locked out when they refused to accept the company's ultimatum for a non-union shop, and are on strike to preserve their union, has opened an employment office, is offering to ship scab workers to the non-union fields. Members of the local union of Lyill Mine are making an official picket of the employment office, and will take further action at the local meeting tonight, to be held at Miners' Hall, West Brownsville.

According to miners who have lived in this town for 12 or 15 years, "here has never been a miners' employment office here before."

Wants Not So Sure.

The Wheeling Steel Co. controlled by the James D. McLaughlin Steel Corporation has set up a schedule of wages, but no date at which they will try to resume operations with scab labor at these rates. They are offering to pay 63 cents a ton for machine loaders, instead of the old rate of 73 cents; 83 cents a ton for pick labor, instead of the former rate of $1.03; 72 cents a run to machinemen, instead of 10, and other wages in proportional reductions.

SENATOR'S PROBE SHOWS U. S. BANK RULES NICARAGUA

Toribio Tijerino, former Nicaragua consul general in New York, in reporting a special investigation undertaken at the instance of Senator Shipstead and a senate sub-committee, declared yesterday that Nicaragua is absolutely under the dominance of two New York banks, the Guarantee Trust Co., and J. and W. Seligman Co.

The bankers' control was effected by means of a million dollar loan negotiated March 21. The contract connected with the loan, Tijerino points out, obligates Nicaragua to give the bankers complete charge of the board of directors of Pacific Railways of Nicaragua and the National Bank of Nicaragua. Half the surplus of all treasury revenues and the new taxes established in 1927 are mortgaged to the bankers.

Seize the Money.

The new board of directors of the Nicaraguan National Bank include R. F. Loree, vice-president of the Guarantee Trust, Phillip Tillinghast, J. W. Jenks, Earle Bailie and H. C. Breck. The board of directors of the railroad includes Loree, Bailie, Jenks, Tillinghast and Chost.

The loan was for only a million, but the first thing the new boards of directors did was to transfer to the two American banks all the cash in sight, amounting to about $3,500,000.

Cheat On Interest.

"The $3,500,000 deposited by Nicaragua with the New York bankers obtains no more than 2 and 2½ per cent interest per annum," Mr. Tijerino continues. "But for the credit which the bankers extend to Nicaragua, Nicaragua pays 6 per cent annual interest plus 1 per cent commission capitalized from the start of the life of the credit."

"Through the mortgage given on 50 per cent of the treasury surplus," says Tijerino, "the bankers quite naturally exercise an undue influence on the government of Nicaragua, as the government cannot undertake any work of improvement, such as road construction, etc., nor in any way dispose of its surplus money without the consent of the bankers.

"Without risking or spending one cent, without making an investment of any kind, the New York bankers have taken absolute control of Nicaragua, its transport system, its currency and credit, and, by those means, the government of Nicaragua itself, is in the hands of J. and W. Seligman Company and of the Guaranty Trust Company of New York," is the conclusion drawn in the report.

The Executions of the White-Terrorists and British Agents

The workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union has been more lenient with spies and agents-provocateurs than any other government in the history of the world. It could afford to exercise extreme clemency against its enemies because it is the government of the overwhelming majority of the population of the country. All previous revolutions in history have been revolutions of minorities attempting to impose their wills upon the vast majority. The Bolshevik revolution is, as Marx and Engels and Lenin always declared proletarian revolutions must be, the movement of the vast majority in the interest of the majority. Its internal stability insures it against the success of any counter-revolutionary attempts, so it could regard with disdain the feeble attempts levelled against it on the basis of striving to arouse the masses against its authority. To the surprise of the whole world the social revolutionaries, who were tried and convicted in 1922 of being paid agents of the French military mission in Russia in the early days of the revolution, were permitted to live, on specific orders of the Council of Peoples' Commissars that revoked the death sentences and substituted prison terms instead. They permitted them to live in shame, despised by all revolutionaries of the world. Some of the ignoble hirelings of imperialism, tried in 1922, had engaged in terroristic acts against the leaders of the revolution and it was proved that the executive committee of the so-called social revolutionary party had given orders to the forlorn hag who fired a poisoned bullet into the body of Lenin in an effort to destroy the foremost revolutionary leader of all time—a wound that unquestionably hastened the untimely death of our world leader.

But when today the Soviet Union is being attacked on all sides, when Britain—the mad-dog of Europe—is on a rampage inciting raids against Soviet embassies, indulging in an orgy of forgeries and inciting assassinations against the representatives of the workers' and peasants' government in every part of the world, and when it goes to the extent of aiming, through its whiteguard czarist hirelings, at the lives of Stalin, Bukharin, Rykoff and the other outstanding leaders of the Soviet Union, it is time to call a halt.

Twenty paid agents of Britain, who tried to supplement with terror inside Russia the acts of the tory government outside in trying to create a military bloc of adjacent nations against the revolution, have been shot, after unimpeachable proof of their crimes were produced in a trial court. Their crimes are related in detail in another part of this paper. This gang of unprincipled assassins, who tried to aid Britain in its efforts to invade the Soviet Union and turn that nation into an abattoir, shed oceans of blood in the relentless extermination of the flower of the working class and reduce the surviving inhabitants to vassals of imperialism, met precisely the fate they so richly deserved.

The time for temporizing with the enemies of the revolution who, for pay, perpetrate the crimes that these vile dogs were guilty of, has passed. It is to be hoped that all of their kind are immediately exposed and summarily dispatched.

Let the contemptible scoundrels of apostacy in the ranks of the social democracy who act as apologists for imperialist despotism against the workers and peasants of the world indulge in banal twaddle about the "new terror" in Russia! Let the liberals who serve imperialism by praising the fraudulent democracy with which capitalism tries to conceal its diseased blotches that herald its impending death talk about abstract political liberties. People who do not distinguish between a government of capitalism, torturing the defenders and leaders of the working class, and a workers' and peasants' government, defending the working class against imperialist spies are, either consciously or unconsciously, playing the game of the enemies of labor. They would save the lives of these traitors in order that they may carry on their nefarious work of paving the way for Britain and her agents and allies to pile corpses mountain high throughout all of Russia. They would save the lives of people not fit to live in order that millions of useful workers might perish.

At a time when Britain is indulging in every conceivable provocative act, mobilizing the very scum of the earth against the revolution, we cannot stop to discuss abstractions with social-democratic agents of the bourgeoisie and the liberal elements of the capitalist class itself.

The agents of the imperialist powers, who have assassinated Uritsky, Volodarsky, Vorovsky and Voykoff and plotted against the lives of other leaders of the revolution should be exterminated like rattle-snakes and if the Soviet Union decides upon that policy it will have the loyal support of every intelligent worker in the whole world.

One Voykoff is worth a million mercenaries of imperialism!
Down with the conspirators!
Scourge from the earth the British agents in Russia!
Throttle the assassins!
Long Live Revolutionary Russia!

Right-Wing Assassins Fight Against Union

Hiring gangsters in labor disputes, once the exclusive policy of the employers against labor, has now become a fixed policy of the right-wing leaders of the furriers' union, who are doing the dirty work of the employers and carrying on a union-wrecking campaign on a greater scale than the employers themselves have ever attempted.

The right-wing first learned from their masters how to conduct guerilla warfare against militant workers; they now teach them more vicious methods than they themselves ever conceived.

The murderous attack upon Aaron Gross Thursday, when he was beaten with the jagged pieces of broken bottles and savagely stabbed with knives, not only convicts the right-wing gang of trying to wreck the union that they have lost control of because of their subservience to the employers, but proves that they are so desperate they will even resort to assassination in order to continue their foul careers as agents of capitalism. ORGY OF MILITARISM OVER LINDBERGH

Current Events

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE return of Lindbergh has driven almost every piece of important news off the pages of the capitalist press. Because the young aviator has captured the imagination of the masses—the section that likes to go off on an emotional jazz for nine days at a time—everybody, or concern with something to sell from the vendor of a can of gasolene to the manufacturer of airplanes and from the cockroach business man who makes a living by securing semi-derelicts to peddle flags and buttons on the streets to the publishers of mighty newspapers—all are out to coin an honest dollar out of his feat.

WE confess to an occasional stroke of nausea over the business. Not that Lindbergh does not deserve credit for his accomplishment. It is the bawdy conduct of the bourgeois hucksters that sends us scurrying to an open manhole when we read about Chambers of commerce and frankfurter factories paying money to the papers to advertise their hypocritical love for him. Lindbergh may get rich out of it. He is worth millions to the American captalist class and he is now too firmly in the grip of the masters of the nation to break lose if he ever had an inclination to do so.

* * *

"LIKE father like son," may a good old adage as far as the configuration of a man's nasal appendage may be concerned, but ideals and the desire to sacrifice for them change, with time and changed conditions even as the indignation of farmers changes with the bettering or worsening of the crop situation. The young lad who is now feted by capitalists, their kings and presidents, does not carry around the social grouch-fodder that made his father a tartar to the rich on the plains of Minnesota.

* * *

THE American capitalists are wealthy enough to bridle their promising young men and their unusually enticing young women. The latter are extremely useful in times of war when strong men forget the horrors of the trenches as they march down Fifth or some other avenue, as the well-groomed if not over-groomed daughters of the Wall Street gamblers and singers that look good to the eyes the hard on the ears, waft kisses at them. Men die but once so the poor docker or plumber or fireman whose appearance in ordinary times would send those parasites fleeing for ammonia has his day and he throws out his chest believing that he is fighting for his country.

AND the Lindberghs! They are always useful. We want the largest air-navy in the world. Let Lindbergh say the word and Coolidge can push the appropriation thru congress, knowing that the politician who would oppose it would be committing political suicide. And should the civil war in Nicaragua have a relapse or resume activity one word from Lindbergh, our hero, would help silence objection. Without wishing to cast the slightest reflection on the young man, we advise our readers to watch the methods, that our ruling classes will use in extracting the maximum advantage from the Lindbergh flight. This is the day of the capitalists. The masses follow them like sheep, but those who believe that the masses will follow them for ever, do not know history.

New York Times Comments on Lindberghs

May 23, 1927

This clear-headed, clean-lived, modest but daring son of America who drew the peoples of many nations together in their consentration upon something of their supreme and common admiration."

May 29, 1918

Commenting on the fact that the father of the flyer had been refused a hall in which to speak in Duluth: "More fortunate than many of the managers and operators of that concern (the Non-Partisan League) Mr. Lindbergh, so far as we know, is not under indictment for sedition."

Perhaps the "Times" and the other denizens of the journalistic red light district can select one of their prostitute crew to attempt to explain how it is possible that the son of a father who exposed the fraud and sham of the world war could possibly be considered a hero.

The "Times", like any other kept lady, is not supposed to be consistent in her flattery or fury. Ten years ago the name of Lindbergh was anathema with the patriots because the father of the present hero, a congressman, fought against it. Now, however, the warmongers are trying to exploit the private achievement of the young Lindbergh for their own ends.

Lindbergh is an American, but not the kind the "Times" would have us believe. If he has not forgotten the teachings of his father he must thoroughly despise the slimy politicians and the kept editors who fawn upon him, but who tried to fan the flames of fanaticism against his father.

CHIANG KAI SHEK LOOKING FOR WAR LORDS' ALLIANCE

PEKING, June 12.—Chiang Kai-shek is reported to have resumed negotiations with Chang Tso-lin, Manchurian war lord, for an alliance against the Nationalists who are rapidly sweeping north to Peking.

The only obstacle to Chiang's open alliance with the northern war lord is his objection to Chang Tsung-chang as war lord of Shantung. Chiang is reported to favor Sun Chuan-fang, who opposed the Nationalists at Shanghai, as Shantungese war lord.

Chang Tso-lin is reported to favor Chang Tsung-chang, who is notorious for his brutality. He may, however, discard the former Shantung war lord in order to secure the support of Chiang Kai-shek.

Early Nationalist Victory.

Nationalist leaders it is stated are expecting to enter Peking by the end of July regardless of any combination of war lords. General Yen, Governor of Shansi, who commands one of the best-drilled armies in China, is almost certain to remain neutral.

DAILY WORKER IS GREETED IN USSR PRESS CONGRESS

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

(Special to The DAILY WORKER.)

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R. (By Mail).—Students of the Communist University of the Toilers of the East, gathered in a Press Week Demonstration here, voted unanimously and with great enthusiasm to send their greetings to The DAILY WORKER, the Central Organ of our American Communist Party.

U. S. Workers Students Here.

Students of scores of nationalities, numbering more than a thousand in all, attend the university here.

Some of them have been in the United States. Thus I found two who had at one time worked in the Ford Plant in Detroit. Many spoke either the English or the German languages, so it was easy to converse with them and get the feel of the enthusiasm with which they carry on their work.

They extended an invitation for me, on my visit to the university during the day, to address their Workers

Victory for Negro and White Workers Ends 9 Month Fight

(By Federated Press.)

Negro and white motion picture operators are victors in a nine-month strike against a big Harlem concern operating several theatres. Men of both races struck together, stood on the picket line together and won together under the leadership of Operators' Local 306.

Braving injunctions and police, the operators got the help of Musicians' Local 802, whose members walked out of the houses affected and crippled the movie boss so effectively that he has signed up, granting all wage and union demands.

The motion picture operators and Harlem Negro papers are boasting now of the fine interracial co-operation shown in the successful strike, which was waged in the center of New York's famous Negro district, inhabited by 200,000 colored people.

SACCO and VANZETTI SHALL NOT DIE!

Fines, JAILS, Assassins

These are the methods whereby the ruling class shows its fear of the rising tide of discontent among the workers. These are the methods whereby they hope to terrorize those elements who refuse to submit meekly to the yoke of oppression. These are the methods which are being employed against the outstanding figures of our movement.

But these oppressive and violent methods have the opposite effect. Instead of driving people away from our movement, it draws them nearer. Instead of terrorizing the workers, it develops new enthusiasm, new courage and new devotion.

This is well shown by the tremendous burst of indignation and support which The DAILY WORKER has received since the attack upon it by certain patriotic societies. The jailing of Dunne, and Gordon, the young comrade who wrote the poem la question, the ruthless and unwarranted Five Hundred Dollar Fine, all these things are bringing daily to the paper contributions from all over the country. No unit of the Party, no comrade in the Party, no sympathizer, or reader of The DAILY WORKER should fail to do his share at this time.

Flier Chas. Lindbergh

A brave aviator—the militarists are using him as cannon bait; the capitalist politicians quarrel for a share of his glory.

LETTER TO WOLL FROM BEN GOLD ON PICKET LINE

Tells of Criminals the A. F. of L. Uses

Before his departure yesterday afternoon for Washington, where he is to be one of 30 New York delegates elected to the bi-ennial convention of the International Fur Workers' Union, Ben Gold, manager of the New York Joint Board of the Furriers' Union, despatched the following letter to Matthew Woll, acting president of the National Civic Federation and chairman of the Furriers' Reorganization Committee which was appointed by the American Federation of Labor officials to effect the expulsion of the Joint Board local unions

The letter to Woll follows his announcement that he is calling upon New York labor unions to conduct a demonstration in the fur market against the striking fur workers.

Gold writes: "Our attention has been called to your communication relative to the strike situation, which appeared in the newspapers of June 11th, 1927.

"You spoke in your communication of providing 'mass protection'. This has apparently already been attended to. The strike area is at present infested with gangsters with long criminal records. These thugs are seeking to terrorize members of the New York Joint Board by murderous assaults. As instance we cite the murderous attack upon Mr. Aaron Gross, an officer of the New York Joint Board. One of his assailants is a man with a long criminal record. Upon this man's arraignment in the magistrate's court he was represented by counsel acting for yourselves and the so-called International Furriers' Union.

NEW YORK WELCOMES GREAT FLIER TODAY; PATRIOTEERS GET GOING

Stench of Tammany Politics and Military Propaganda Spoils Mammoth Reception

Today Charles A. Lindbergh will land in New York harbor to receive the most tremendous ovation that has ever been accorded to an individual. No conquering hero, no president has ever been the object of preparations as elaborate as those which are being made for the reception of this shy gawky middle western boy, whose courage and simplicity have won him the admiration of millions.

Feeding upon his reputation like harpies, are the Fat Boys, the war department, the professional patriots. Shop windows of New York are crowded with pictures of young Lindbergh, carrying captions like "The Army Made Him."

Innocent War Bait.

Lindbergh is friendly and ingenuous. He is naturally—and naively—pleased at his tremendous popularity. He does not realize that he is being used by the professional militarists, and the fat boys who pull the strings, for war propaganda.

Lindbergh's father, who was no less courageous than his son, bitterly fought capitalism which plunged the world into the long and bloody World War. He was reviled and spat upon. Young Lindbergh rides in triumph on a battle cruiser, and is acclaimed by Cal Coolidge. He is acclaimed by Cal and the fat boys because they can use him.

EXPOSE MORE WHITE GUARD PLOTS; RYKOFF SCORES BRITISH WAR MOVE

BULLETIN.

Considering that the Polish government's reply to the Litvinoff note, regarding the murder of Soviet envoy, Woikoff, at Warsaw recently, is only partly satisfactory, M. Litvinoff is addressing another note to Poland, demanding that "Poland take immediate and energetic measures against the anti-Soviet terrorists, monarchists, and bandits operating in Polish territory, and expel these from Poland."

The Soviet Union government declares that the assassination was not merely an isolated case, and says that the break in British relations encouraged monarchistic activities in Poland, which have not been sufficiently curbed. It says also that Polish citizenship was granted to the assassin after his expulsion from Russia.

MOSCOW, June 12.—Masses of workers filled Kremlin Square last night and silently watched the burial of M. Woikoff, murdered Soviet minister to Poland.

Woikoff's body arrived in Moscow from Warsaw late in the afternoon and was placed on a red-draped gun carriage. Six horses slowly drew the carriage to the Kremlin Square

In the meantime reports from various sections of the Soviet Union indicate that White Guard plots, instigated, it is believed by the British, are being uncovered. Sixteen spies in the service of the Rumanian government have been arrested in Odessa, while in Novorossiyak, Caucasus,

Demand the Immediate Calling of an Extra Session of Congress for Relief of the Victims of the Mississippi Flood Disaster

Statement by the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party

Nearly one million men, women, and children in the rich Mississippi valley find themselves at present without shelter, food, and clothing as a result of the criminal negligence of the Federal government to guard against flood disasters, aggravated by the failure of the Coolidge administration to provide immediate and adequate relief for the victims.

The American capitalist class, which holds the greatest concentration of wealth in any single country in the world, which claims the highest developed technique and power of production, chooses to continue to develop spectacular measures of flood prevention and control. The result is the present terrible disaster in the Mississippi valley.

And when the disaster occurs, ruining hundreds of thousands of people, the ruling class of the United States and its government in Washington again manifest the same disregard for the well-being of the masses. While the capitalist press talks loudly about flood relief, and funds are being collected from individual contributions, the Federal government persists in doing nothing to relieve the conditions of the flood suffers.

Spend Millions While Masses Suffer.

The American government is quite ready to precipitate a world war to protect the property of American imperialist exploiters in China. But the same American government has no concern for the protection of the lives of thousands upon thousands of farmers, workers, small business men and their wives and children in the Mississippi valley. The Coolidge administration finds plenty of funds to build and maintain the navy, the army, and a whole host of officials, to despoil and oppress the peoples of Latin America, to establish the domination of American imperialism in China, but it refuses to find the means to help adequately and rehabilitate the ruined and suffering masses in the Mississippi valley.

Secretary Mellon boasts tremendous surplus of governmental income over expenditures, and advocates the reduction of taxes upon corporations and high incomes, but does not find government funds available for immediate flood relief and rehabilitation.

Secretary Hoover likes to indulge in high talk about the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars for the development of super-power and other industrial projects to enrich the American capitalists, but in the matter of flood prevention and immediate flood relief he, together with Coolidge and his entire administration, prefer the policy of small individual voluntary assistance. Coolidge, Hoover, and Mellon prefer to leave the tremendous task of rehabilitation to the bankers and to the Chambers of Commerce to utilize the disaster for their further enrichment.

Why does the Coolidge administration refuse to call Congress into extra session? Why does the Coolidge administration refuse to make instant preparations for large scale governmental relief for the flood victims? Why do the big capitalists insist that the whole matter of flood relief and rehabilitation be left to the private initiative of the big capitalists?

Coolidge and his administration are afraid to call an extra session of Congress, because they fear the criticism and attack of their failures, and because they are opposed to adequate governmental flood relief. Coolidge and his administration are afraid of any investigation of the flood and its cause. Since investigation would disclose the over flowing stream of graft created by Congress by its appropriations for the Mississippi river regulation, the workers and farmers of the river valley are left inadequately protected against floods, altho the staggering total of appropriated funds would suffice to make such disasters forever impossible. Coolidge and his administration, together with the big capitalists, are determined to leave the flood victims ruined and helpless to enable the big bankers and merchants to exploit in their interests the misery of the masses.

Football for Politicians.

The so-called Flood Control Conference, organized in Chicago by capitalist politicians of the western states, and by Mayor Thompson of Chicago, and others, offers no hope for immediate relief. The elements dominating this Conference hold the same views on the matter as the Coolidge administration, despite the anti-Coolidge maneuvers carried on by some capitalist politicians in the Conference. The big bankers, merchants, manufacturers and capitalist politicians of the Republican and Democratic parties which dominate the Flood Control Conference have succeeded in confining the Conference to questions of future permanent flood prevention, and excluding all effective action for immediate relief and rehabilitation by the Federal government.

The demand of the farmer, repre-

Welcome Used for War Propaganda.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—With the exception of Secretary Coolidge, expressing approval the transcontinental flying race from Colonel A. Lindbergh by way of Long Island, official Washington let the event pass without comment on his return from France. Hence he had flown from New York in a monoplane. Without giving any opinion on the merits of the model character of the development of aviation; without taking advantage of the opportunity to show the value of the rapid development of aviation, the president of the United States devoted his whole time to a sentimental talk about the great personal achievement of young Lindbergh.

Talks About War.

The real motive for the official welcome was to encourage recruiting for the various branches of the military service that the United States government is rapidly building up in order that the military forces may keep pace with the rapidly growing economic powers of Wall Street, and is constantly reinvests its surplus wealth pillaged from the workers in other parts of the world. Although Coolidge did not mention any preparations of future wars, thereby carrying out the fraudulent policy of talking pacifism while preparing for new wars, he did mention the last war. He said, in referring to Lindbergh:

"Too young to have enlisted in the world war, he rose become a student at one of the state universities."

Has War Stand of Father.

Although mentioning his father, C. A. Lindbergh, a congressman from Minnesota who, during the last war opposed it and faced the fanatic denunciation of all the dollar patriots, Coolidge did not refer to the father's stand at that time.

Coolidge was so dishonest he did not add that the father would not have permitted his son to enlist had he desired to do so because he understood the fact that war was not for the benefit of the workers and farmers of the country but for the profiteers and Wall Street magnates.

The demonstration in Washington was a huge affair with all the government employees and other mobilized to kid the military machine in its propaganda. —Whether young Lindbergh approved the affair or not is not known as he has made no statement. It is noteworthy, however, that he did not wear an army uniform, but civilian clothes.

Peabody Mayor, Others, Will Denounce Statutes Crushing Foreign Born

BOSTON, Mass., June 9.—A very wide opposition to the anti-alien legislation discriminating against the foreign born has been aroused in Peabody, where the population is largely foreign born.

A mass meeting, to explain the viciousness of the anti-alien legislation pending in congress, has been arranged by the Salem & Peabody Council to be held in Odd Fellows Hall, Walnut & Central Sts., Peabody, on Friday, June 10th, 7:30 p. m.

Wright H. Gregson, secretary to the mayor, will be chairman and the mayor of Peabody, Robert A. Bakeman, who has expressed his opposition to this type of legislation, will be one of the speakers. Other speakers will be Miss Anna Kelly, principal of the Evening School Americanization Classes, Robert Zelma, member of the executive committee, Boston Council for the Protection of the Foreign Born, and A. Konstantinou of Lynn, who will speak in Greek.

A letter has been received from Charles Frederick Weller, international executive of the League of Neighbors, who was also invited to speak, expressing his regrets at being unable to attend the meeting because he is leaving for Europe June 8th. "I should like to give my greetings to all your colleagues in the Council for Protection of the Foreign Born through you," he writes to Phyllis Feingston, New England organizer. "I am genuinely deeply interested in your work.

Cal With Eye on 1928 Election Leaves Now for the Wide Open Spaces

WASHINGTON, June 12.—President Coolidge will start his little western publicity stunt in preparation for the coming presidential elections tomorrow, when he will leave for his vacation in the Black Hills of South Dakota.

On his way to the Black Hills, Coolidge will stop at Hammond, Indiana and Pierre, South Dakota. He will be accompanied by Postmaster General New, fourteen secret service men, a corps of newspapermen and a battalion of White House flunkies.

From Page One Ten Years Ago Today

New York, June 10, 1917.—Tom Lewis, Lindbergh's father, knew what was happening to the world just ten years ago? Can he possibly say (June 10, 1927) that the great war for democracy was fought in France? Perhaps he will claim that the millions of dollars wasted by Wall Street on the side of the Allies in France and Czarist Russia ought to be enough?

The fresh, jubilant, buoyant blood of the youth and young manhood of America, were on a lark. Many of them, from the factory, fields and mines, knew danger for the first time in their lives. Life, had suddenly changed for them. The old monotonous, sordid, unromantic drudgery of the past was left behind. Many of them actually believed that they were engaged in a holy cause and that Wilson's words about "making the world safe for democracy" and "freedom for all forever" and "this is the war to end all wars," really described realities. They did not then know, what every one knows now, that it was not the last war. They did not know that they were in France as cannon-fodder to make the world safe for Morgan's investments; to make possible for the great bankers and industrialists their right to continue to exploit the workers of the United States and extend their power to the remotest parts of the earth.

New Wars Being Prepared.

Today, ten years after, the warmongers are again beating the tom-toms; again the bands play and the steady tramp of uniformed ranks are heard in the streets. Not, as in 1917, to march directly to war, but only to make easier the tasks of the patriots for profit who perceive upon the horizon in the East and in the West the clouds of another war arising, gathering force that still cause the earth to reel and millions die where thousands died in the last war.

Proudly civilians are are the clouds that herald the next war is the fact that Lindbergh, a flyer, was chosen as a symbol for the war-mongers. The next war will be one of the air far more than of the land or sea. Swift-flying planes will hurl thunderbolts from the sky into the streets of cities, towns and villages and lay waste the country-side. Not only the soldiers, but whole populations will be wiped out.

Ten years have passed since United States troops first stepped on French soil to engage in the world war have seen tremendous development in the art of destruction of human life, and everyone who perceives its meaning must fight against the imperialism that is responsible for these new and more frightful preparations.

N. Y. Times Reporter Tells How Furriers Are Beaten by Police

How strikers are beaten up in New York City police stations is graphically described by a New York Times reporter in a current issue of the "Nation", a liberal weekly.

Hundreds of pickets in the garment workers', furriers', paper box makers' and other strikes in the past year, have been thrown into jail, and many of them have been subjected to third degree tortures their treatment has been exactly like that accorded to criminals and innocent citizens against whom the detectives want to "get something". A. C. Sedgwick's account of a typical beating up is told in these words:

One detective takes a piece of rubber hose, which is part of the equipment of the detectives' bureau and is favored for its obecause it leaves no marks. Another takes out his blackjack. Others grab anything—blackjacks, revolvers, night sticks. "I seen you before," bawls a detective. "No, sir," the prisoner answers. The detective strikes him. This is the signal. The "shellacin'" has started. Blow after blow from the rubber hose, blackjacks, and night sticks. The prisoners fall to the floor. The blood pours from their faces. They spit and cough blood. The detectives, still in a rage, look at them. The door opens. A young policeman in a uniform pokes his head in. "You fellers is easy with 'em," he says. "Is that so?" roars a detective and kicks a prisoner in the face, pulls him to his feet, props him against the desk, then with the butt end of his revolver makes a gash in his head. The three prisoners go to the hospital."

If it were asked of any official source wat happened to these men it would be said that they received their injuries resisting arrest, or perhaps that the "sidewalk came up and hit 'em."

The newspapers later said the three men were questioned and admitted not only that they were smuggler but all sorts of "stick-ups" in the last six months. They admitted everything. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

The war makers, the capitalist nations of Europe and the United States of America, have already begun an undercover murder campaign against the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics. The assassination of Weikoff last week was but one incident in a planned military tactic of attrition, intended to wear down the Soviet Union bit by bit, by killing off its leading statesmen.

Confessions of the British spy, Sidney George Riley, show that all the heads of the workers' and peasants' government were on the death list of England and her allies, and that attempts to kill Trotsky and Petrovsky, Mooning of the Leningrad police, last winter; plots to blow up the Bolshoy theatre while Soviet officials were there, in March, 1927; the plan to kill Rykoff and Stalin, in April, 1927, and to blast the state political police building in Moscow, June, 1927, as well as many other attempts, are all traceable to and financed by the British coalition against the Soviet Union.

Asks Week's Strike Every Year Against British Strike Bill

(Special to the Daily Worker.)

LONDON, June 12.—A one week's general strike of all workers, this year and every year upon the anniversary of the signing of the pending trade union and trade disputes bill, is the bold answer proposed by Spencer Bagehot to the Tory government's new plan for crippling the labor movement.

In passing the bill, says Bagehot, who at one time was an official in the post office department, argument, entreaty, edulty, law, and justice will be trodden down.

"Let it be understood now, and let it be declared now," he states "that from the day that King George signs this bill, conversing it into an act of Parliament, every worker throughout the land, every trade unionist will cease work for a complete week, and upon every anniversary of the signing of this act he will cease work for a full week, without any reference to his union or any call to arms from leaders in or out of Parliament.

"This general strike, annual and perennial, will not bring its leaders or its followers under the penalties of this vile and finss-cursed act. Establish the right now; proclaim the general strike now, and let it be enacted and followed year by year and every year; and let the king understand now before he puts his august signature to this detestable bill that forever his name will be associated with this general strike, for we shall call it King George's General Strike!"

French Police Arrest Communist Leader As Royalist Goes Free

PARIS, June 12.—While Leon Daners are a little skeptical about the inically, by the police is still at large, M. Semard, Secretary General of the French Communist Party and editor of "Humanite", has been placed under arrest.

M. Semard was arrested Saturday evening as he returned home from his office and was prevented by the police from seeing his wife and children before being rushed away to jail. The Communist leader has been sentenced to eight months in prison for attacking French imperialism in Morocco.

The excuse given for the failure on the part of the police to arrest Daudet is that he is guarded by a number of young followers. Workers are a little sceptical about the inability of the police to overawe a handful of young Royalists.

The Future Wars and the Working Class

By D. MARETZKY.

The capitalists are consciously heading for a new war. The finals of the first imperialist war was Versailles. But real peace was not concluded at Versailles, nor could it have been, for the sole reason that from the hour of its birth it was only a new armed "peace". The feverish arming after the war is taking place quite openly; it is quite plain that militarism is more powerful at the present time than it was in pre-war days, and still there are pacifist fools and idiots who prate about disarmament and strive to see in the present reality tendencies towards peace on a bourgeois basis.

It might be well to mention a few facts and figures to illustrate how the imperialists are preparing the war and what kind of war it is they are leading us into.

The Military Budgets

The official military budgets in the most important States (France, Great Britain, Italy, Germany, the United States of North America, Japan) amounted in the year 1913 to 1400 million dollars; in the year 1926 they amounted to 2140.5 million dollars, an increase of nearly 70 per cent. The respective figures for the individual countries are as follows: France (1913) 240 and (1926) 310.8; Great Britain 450 and 605; Italy 80.9 and 192.5; Germany 345.8 and 163; the United States 133.1 and 685.8; Japan 60 and 209.1. The changed relations of one budget to another shows an interesting feature; the economic hegemony of the United States in the world has brought with it the military hegemony

Ever Larger Armies.

The present footing of the land forces is far in excess of pre-war dimensions. According to the data gathered by Comrade Woroschilyov for the Fourth Soviet Congress of the Soviet Union, the land forces of the four world powers (England, France, Italy and the United States of North America) total at the present time 1 810,000 against 1,413,000 men in 1913.

From year to year the naval forces of the imperial States are also growing. The Washington agreement of 1922 by no means put an end to, nor even "curtailed", but only regulated, the construction of dreadnoughts. In addition, the agreement applied merely to battleships and aircraft carriers. The construction of cruisers, destroyers and submarines was not limited and has, in fact, developed greatly since 1922. The present tonnage of the battleships of the United States of North America aggregates 835,850 tons, of Great Britain 580,450; Japan 301,320; France 194,554; Italy 183,670.

Race for Aircraft.

As far as the building of aircraft carriers is concerned, it must be stated that Washington "curtailed" their construction in such a manner that the Powers will have to "work" very hard in order to reach the so-called "norm" prescribed. The United States of North America has built 75,700 tons of aircraft carriers, while it is Washington's "aim" to bring this tonnage up to 135,000; England has 67,250 tons, and according to Washington it should have 135,000; Japan has 9,500 while the agreement provides for an increase up to 81,000; so far France and Italy do not possess any aircraft carriers; according to the Washington agreement they together may build 120,000 tons.

Ships of other types (submarines and others) are also being built at a similar tremendous pace, so that according to the existing programme for the decade 1922 to 1932 their strength will be increased in the case of the leading naval Powers by several dozen per cent, and in the case of the backward powers by hundreds per cent.

Great Advance in Aviation.

The rate of increase in the airfleets is far and away greater than that of the navies. This is due to the enormous advance in aviation, the circumstance that within the last few years the mass production of aeroplanes has commenced and also to the attention which has been devoted to aviation by the "military science of the future". Just the few countries bordering on the Soviet Union (Finland, Esthonia, Poland, Roumania, Latvia and Lithuania—have four times as many war planes as there were in the whole world in 1913. The total airfleet of the four most important countries has been strengthened more than twentyfold since 1913—150 units and 3550 units. Even in the last three years, 1923 to 1926, the numerical strength of the airfleet has been more than doubled.

Chemicals in Next War.

An extended and previously unknown employment of aviation will be combined in the world war of the future with an appalling use of chemicals. A gas attack from the air, the dropping of deadly-gases from aeroplanes—as far as possible unexpected at night, and preferably in the industrial districts behind the enemy's front and in the largest quantities—will doubtless constitute the most horrible surprise of the imperialist war which is in course of preparation.

It would be too exaggerated and fantastic to assume that the war of the future will be exclusively a gas war and that infantry and artillery will be abolished by the military science of the future. It is not for nothing that the imperialists are creating these tremendous land forces; it is not for nothing that they are doing everything to perfect long-range artillery with the utmost power of destruction. But still there can be no doubt that the tendency of modern science of war is to make the war of the future a gas war. It it quite possible that in the war of the future the same leading role will be given to gas-attack aeroplanes as was played by artillery in the 1924-1918 war.

Poison Gas Industry.

The experiences of the world war have already indicated this. The mass-production of gases began only towards the end of the war; and it is a significant fact that the United States, for instance, which entered the war later than the other belligerents, lost more than 70,000 of its total of dead and wounded (271,000) entirely thru gas poisoning. Altogether, more than half a million people were poisoned with gas during the last war.

The intensity and extent of the use of gas in the future world war will unquestionable be much greater. It suffices to say that the United States is already in a position to produce in one day 3,000 tons of Yprit ("Gold Cross"), which in its poisonous and caustic effects was the most terrible of all the gases used in the war of 1914, to 1918. The ordinary gas mask is useless against Yprit, as also against Levisite, which possesses the terrible properties of Yprit but in a more pronounced degree. Diving-suits might possibly serve as protection against gases of this kind, and consideration is being given to the issuing of diving-suits for artillerymen during the next world slaughter. Such protection is, however, unsuitable inasmuch as it would greatly hamper the mobility of the troops and diminish their fighting capacity.

Anything for Profits.

The preparations for the gas-war are being made for the greater part in secret by the imperialists. But they are nevertheless being carried on incessantly, feverishly and persistently. It is true that several resolutions concerning the inadmissibility of the production of poison gases and their use in future wasfare have been adopted, but it is obvious that these resolutions are absolutely worthless while the fate of the nations lies in the hands of the imperialists. The voice of profits is heard much more clearly by the imperialists than the piteous entreaties of the pacifist saints. Marx used to say that there was no crime to which a capitalist would not resort, even at the risk of his neck, if tempted by high profits. For what reason, therefore, should the imperialists feel compunction when their criminally prepared war threatens to become the scaffold of the nations?

French Ban on Foreign Coal May Lead to New British Miners' Strike

LONDON, June 12.—The French ban on the importation of coal which went into operation yesterday is a severe blow to the British coal barons. It may lead to a curtailment of British coal production and to another strike.

Unemployment is already large in the coal fields and wages have already been cut to the bone. Any attempt on the part of the coal kings to reduce wages or lengthen hours may lead to another coal strike.

Salt Lake Printers Go Back to Work; Did Not Get Sufficient Support

SALT LAKE CITY, June 12.—Printers' Local 11 went on strike April 1 for five days a week and a dollar increase in wages. None of the other crafts came out to help it with these demands, so finally, May 27, the strike was called off.

At the Federation meeting, May 27, at which the announcement of the end of the strike was made, many of the delegates expressed their indignation against the local liar, the Salt Lake Tribune, which continually advertises working conditions and employment chances here as rosy, whereas about half only of the skilled craftsmen here can find jobs.

And still, these same delegates will denounce The DAILY WORKER, because it is "Bolshevist", without stopping to think that, as they well know, the anti-Bolshevist papers are absolutely untrustworthy.

sanitation and the situation speaking for the small farmer men that the Congress now in session, in addition to the calling of an extra session of Congress to provide immediate flood relief, was completely ignored. The Workers had its way in the Chicago Flood Control Conference, in the same manner as it has its will fulfilled in the Federal government at Washington.

The farmers, workers, and small businessmen, ruined by the flood disaster must now look for other means and create other organizations to compel the Federal government to provide immediate assistance.

Demand Extra Session of Congress.

The Workers (Communist) Party of America joins whole-heartedly with the workers, farmers, and small businessmen of the flood area in the energetic demand for the immediate calling of an extra session of Congress. We demand that Congress appropriate immediately an adequate fund for the relief and rehabilitation of the victims and sufferers of the flood disaster. We also demand that the Flood Relief and Rehabilitation Fund thus created be administered nationally by a special commission in which delegated representatives of the farmer, labor, and small business organizations shall have a decisive voting influence. The present Red Cross governs the composition of the local relief committees in the flood area.

All farmer and labor organizations of the country are in duty bound to raise their voice in protest and condemnation of the government and the Coolidge administration for the failure to protect and assist the flood victims. An organized movement must be initiated immediately to compel the Coolidge administration to call an extra session of Congress to act in the emergency by providing sufficient funds for adequate flood relief to be administered by elected representatives of the flood victims themselves.

Demand the immediate calling of an extra session of Congress!

Demand sufficient federal appropriations for adequate flood relief and rehabilitation!

Demand that the Relief Fund thus created be administered by delegated bodies in which predominate the interests of the farmers, workers, and small businessmen!

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

It is reported that 8,000 police will be in the Lindbergh parade, but it is safe to predict that there will be enough left to maintain "order" on the fur strike picket lines, which means protecting scabbery. One of the most unbelievable pieces of news that has appeared in print for a long time—unbelievable to the mythical Martian—is the action of Woll, Frayne and McGrady in upbraiding the police for not being as brutal in handling the strikers as those gentry would wish and threatening to mobilize an army of gangsters to defeat the fur workers.

THOSE scurvy satellites of capitalism have been boasting thru the capitalist and the yellow socialist press that the left wing in the fur workers union was defeated. Yet the Joint Board representing the left wing—calls a strike which cripples the employers who broke their agreement with the union, and the police force is not strong enough to defeat the mass support that this call has produced. The fact is that the American worker have no confidence in the labor fakers. Those fat boys are Fascists in disguise and would be on the side of an American Mussolini tomorrow if such a monster were necessary here.

THE devotion of the New York World to the cause of peace has always been evident until the American capitalists actually decide to have a war. Then it grows as offensively patriotic as the rest of the capitalist sheets.

* * *

THE assassination of the Soviet Minister at Warsaw and the assassinations of other officials beside the Soviet Union is not the only evidence we have that such a conspiracy exists. Even the World correspondent in Geneva during the late meeting of the executive council of the league of nations admitted that England was organizing such a united front and only the mutual jealousies of other powers prevented its consummation. But England, because of her precarious situation in the Orient and the shaky condition of her financial structure at home, was compelled to break with the Soviet Union, and take a chance on picking up more allies after the break.

ASSASSINATION is a policy of desperation, but Great Britain is desperate. Therefore she hires Pearlate to kill off the leaders of the Soviet Government. As proof of the seriousness of England's trade situation listen to Sir George Paish in the International Free Trader: "Never was there greater danger . . . the collapse of English national and international trade and never was there greater need for action to restore and strengthen the currents of English trade." A nation in such a predicament will stop at nothing to save her life

The Welcome to Lindbergh.

A former United States air pilot, 25 years of age, is acclaimed by the whole world because of his daring and courage in flying, alone, in a monoplane from New York to Paris, a distance of 3,800 miles, in the record-breaking time of thirty-three and a half hours. For three days, since his landing from Europe, hundreds of thousands have eagerly hailed his every move.

But it is necessary to dwell somewhat upon the social significance of the demonstrations. They have all been of an exceedingly military nature. There is no question that the cunning and unprincipled agents of the war-mongers are working overtime to utilize the private feat of young Lindbergh for their own vile purposes.

It is ironic in the extreme that the son of a father, who fought against the sham of the last world war and resented to his dying day this country's participation in that war should become the symbol of the first great organized campaign for preparation for the next world war in which this country will fight. The swivel-chair patriots who direct the propaganda of imperialism in order to lure the young manhood and youth of the nation in the slaughter house have found in young "Lindy" something to dramatize their game.

There is a tense condition throughout the whole world. War talk fills the pages of all the great papers of the world. American battleships, marines, soldiers and aircraft are in China and Nicaragua. There is a huge campaign on for enlistments in the armed forces of the nation. Summer training camps are established in order to train the youth of the nation for the next great world slaughter.

What has all this to do with the great flights across the ocean? It means that in the next war aircraft will play the most important part. Most of these flights are made to show the world that the United States military power keeps pace with its tremendous economic power. They are threats to Europe and the world that if the countries do not pay their debts to the United States or if they resist Wall Street heavy bombs carrying death and destruction can be dropped upon their cities by only a few hours' flight from America. They can threaten every city in Europe. And Europe tries to fly here to show us that they will try to fight back. All seems peaceful and serene at present unless we are able to see the great antagonisms between the nations of the world and realize that all the pacifist talk is merely a cloak to conceal the building of ever greater and more terrible weapons of destruction.

It is the unprincipled scoundrels and professional murderers of the house of Morgan and other Wall Street bandits who are trying to force this country into war, who want to use young Lindbergh's feat for their own purposes. The war-mongers hope that the young men of the nation will imagine that everything connected with war is as gay and glorious as the welcome to Lindbergh. Such things make preparation for war easier. It makes recruiting for the military forces easier. The officers engaged in recruiting will use Lindbergh's record and his pictures to lure young men to the human slaughter house as hunters use decoys to lure their prey within range of their bullets.

There is no glory in war. But the monsters who prepare for it and want the young manhood and youth of the nation to fight their battles want you to think there is glory in it.

The young man falling to earth in a flaming mass of wreckage brought down by anti-aircraft guns, the young man dangling upon a barbwire entanglement between two trenches, the blind, the crippled wrecks of humanity will feel none of the thrill that comes to Lindbergh today.

Young Lindbergh's father was opposed to the murder of the youth of the nation in the interest of Wall Street's wars. He was a congressman, but not just an ordinary one who votes with the majority without knowing why. He was noted because he was as daring in the field of politics as his young son is in the field of aviation. He travelled paths of peril that few dared to travel. When the mad-dogs of war were let loose, when the youth and young manhood of the nation were marching in close formation to the slaughter house of the great world war, Congressman A. Lindbergh, father of the boy the city and nation honors today, had the clear vision to see through the sham and fraud of it all and he had the splendid courage to stand erect in face of the howling mob of war-mad fanatics and say to the world that he opposed it; that it was a war of the rich.

Many prominent people say they knew Lindbergh's father. Among them is Secretary of State Kellogg of the Coolidge cabinet. But Kellogg does not say that Congressman Lindbergh despised Kellogg and all his kind and helped defeat and discredit him when he ran for United States senate in Minnesota.

The son of a father who stood against war is being used to make more powerful the war machine and pave the way for the next war.

The commercial and economic aspects of the flights are lost sight of in the frenzied desire of the dollar patriots to utilize them for war propaganda.

The young men who today celebrate in the streets should not be deceived by the military glamor, deliberately devised to lead them to the slaughter.

Mothers and sisters and wives who view these spectacles should scorn the seductive words of the politicians and the screechings of the capitalist press and all other similar forces striving to make the path easier for the imperialists when they demand your sons and brothers and husbands in order that American capitalism, the mightiest on earth, may become mightier yet.

Down with those who want to use the youth and exploits of young Lindbergh to decoy the youth of the land to destruction!

Expose and defeat the designs of the dollar patriots!

Down with War!

How capitalism scares itself, and the rest of us, into new war preparations. The transatlantic flights are hailed as a marvellous triumph for America. But the use made of them by American steel and powder companies, and by American finance capital which needs a big army and navy to subdue Latin America and China, is all of the war scare sort. The cartoon above taken from a capitalist picture service, is designed for that purpose, and contains this item of truth, that each technical improvement increases the destructiveness of war. Strides in aviation make it possible in the next war for European air navies to lay waste New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and make it possible for American airplanes to burn out London, Paris or Berlin. Capitalists use the mere existence of these dangers as an excuse for making the danger greater.

Dawes Assails Direct Primary.

Vice-President Dawes, militarist, labor-hater and darling of a very powerful section of the armor plate and munition manufacturers, besides being the favorite of Wall Street bankers, has joined that increasing band of politicians clamoring for the repeal of all direct primary. This agitation was started by the agents of the United States Steel corporation after their favorite, Major General Leonard Wood, was so thoroughly defeated in the primaries for the republican nomination for president. It gained tremendous proportions last year as a result of the corrupting of the electorate of Pennsylvania by the Vare gang and the primary scandals in Illinois involving Frank L. Smith. Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury and head of the aluminum trust swindlers and outlaws, also opposes the direct primary.

This opposition to the primary system is mostly a matter of efficiency in political manipulation. Under the old caucus system the gang in control of the party machinery chose the candidates and there was no possibility of any interference. Now, however, under the primary system, the registered voters of the party have to be manipulated. It is much easier to corrupt a small, compact machine composed of office holders and aspirants for jobs than it is to debauch hundreds of thousands—and much more economical. Mr. Dawes, like Coolidge, has always favored economy for the rich in the conduct of their government. Where millions must now be spent with doubtful results in efforts to secure nominations, an expenditure of only hundreds of thousands will turn the trick under the caucus system of selecting candidates.

Then, also, Mr. Dawes is an active candidate for president in the elections next year. In spite of the fact that his candidacy has not formally been announced. He has been utilizing the farm crisis almost as effectively as Mr. Frank O. Lowden to push his political aspirations and it is generally recognized that the ex-governor of Illinois is merely a stalking horse for Dawes and at the proper time he will throw his support to the Chicago banker vice-president.

Dawes is precisely the type of bombastic militarist that will be needed by the United States during the next few years and his attack on the direct primary is part of the war propaganda so that he will not have against him the record of meeting humiliating defeats at the hands of registered voters of his own party in case he happens to be the nominal head of Wall Street's government when it starts its next war of conquest.

Justice in France.

The French government pretends to be equally opposed to the activities of the Communists and to the activities of the royalists. But facts always speak louder than words.

A number of Communists were recently convicted of inciting soldiers to mutiny.

A number of royalists were convicted of urging the followers of monarchism to overthrow the government and establish a fascist dictatorship.

When the police came to arrest Leon Daudet, the royalist leader, he barricaded himself in his office which was protected by a guard of young royalists. The police of the great city of Paris were "unable" to arrest him and departed.

But in the case of the Communist Semard, secretary of the Communist Party of France, there is a different story to tell. The police swooped down on Semard's home as he was returning from his office and carried him away without permitting him to bid good bye to his wife and children.

Which proves that all capitalist governments have soft spots in their hearts for Fascism and royalism or any other ism that stands for the existing order of wage slavery, no matter how violative their conduct may be of the fiction of democracy which the capitalist governments maintain to camouflage their function of the suppression of the producing classes.

Between Communism and capitalism there can be no peace except the peace that takes place between battles.

DRAMA

Gilbert Miller Has Three New Plays

Gilbert Miller's first production of the season, according to an announcement from that office, will be a new play, now on the London boards, titled "Interference." The production will have a cast headed by Jacqueline Wentner, the English actor recently seen here in "The Captive."

Another play to be produced under his banner will be "The Fabrics," a tense drama by Alfred Mewmann. The play is causing quite a stir in Budapest, Berlin and Vienna. It deals with the assassination of the half-crazed tyrant Czar Paul of Russia, in 1801. The drama will be staged on an elaborate scale with a large cast and is due on Broadway in September.

A third play, "The Ringer," a melodrama by Edgar Wallace, recently playing in London, will be seen here early in the season. Mr. Miller is now presenting on Broadway "The Cardboard Lover," "The Play is the Thing," and "The Constant Wife."

MOSCOW PRESS DAY DEMONSTRATION SENDS "DAILY WORKER" GREETINGS

Press demonstration in the evening, to be held in the auditorium of their Club House. When I arrived, therefore, I found Steklov, the editor of the Izvestia, the official organ of the Union of Soviet Republics, speaking. Steklov has been one of the leaders in the development of the Soviet Press since the October (Nov. 7, 1917) Revolution.

While the Pravda is the central organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union; the Izvestia is the official mouthpiece of the Soviet Power. No capitalist government dares speak openly thru an official organ, always trying to screen its activities behind semi-official publications.

Hear About Our Daily's Struggle.

When I was presented as the speaker following Steklov, I was greeted with the usual abundance of enthusiasm that greets a Communist from America. I told of the development of our press in the United States, of our many foreign-language publications as well as our English-language party organ, The DAILY WORKER. I reviewed the great problems confronting the revolutionary workers in America in their struggle against American imperialism, and of the role that our American Communist Press plays in developing these struggles. Then I extended the greetings of our Workers (Communist) Party and of the readers of The DAILY WORKER, not only to the students gathered here in their demonstration at their own university, but also to the Pravda, thru its editor, that is celebrating its 15th anniversary this Press Week, having been established in 1912.

Then the oldest editor of The Pravda spoke. He was given a tremendous ovation. Every honor is accorded the veterans of the Communist Movement here by the youth growing up under the new conditions brought about by the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917. When the veterans tell of the struggles that were waged under czarism, the new generation listens with deepest interest.

So they listened now as they heard of the efforts to establish and build the revolutionary press in the days when illegality was nearly always the lot of the workers' publications. They were told of the efforts that were put forth to get the party publications past the police, to carry the revolutionary message to the workers in spite of the censorship.

Then another editor took up the story of the present Pravda from its first day, thru the period of the world war and the February and October revolutions of 1917, and down to the present time.

It was after the speaking had finished that the resolutions were offered. The first was a greeting to the Pravda, and to the Communist press generally. It was stated that the resolution was based on the address of Comrade Steklov. But Steklov insisted that the names of the American comrade and of the earlier editors of the Pravda, who had spoken, be also included in the resolution. This was quickly accepted.

Then the demand came from different sections of the audience that a greeting must be sent to "Our American Communist Organ." This suggestion was also unanimously accepted and the presidium instructed to draw up such a greeting. This greeting, in the original form in Russian, as it was handed to me, appears in another column with its English translation, made by one of the students of the school.

History in Pictures.

Then moving pictures were shown. Here was the history of the Izvestia on the screen. Steklov was shown in conference with the other editors. Workers' delegations came visiting him. Then the activities of the various editorial departments were pictured, followed by a presentation of the work done in the various mechanical departments until the paper is finally being run off the presses, done up in packages in the mailing room, hurried to the trains, and despatched on the one hand to the far Caucasus, while other scenes show a bundle being rushed to Leningrad by airmail, then by steamship to America. The bundle is addressed to our Russian Communist weekly in America, the Novy Mir. Incidentally moving pictures of New York City, with its skyscrapers and vast waterfront, are shown. This was followed by a comic that lasted well after midnight.

Thus while I had come for a visit to the Far Eastern University, I had remained for a Press Week celebration, typical of thousands being held throut the Soviet Union. This university is not to be confused with the Chinese (or Sun Yat Sen) University. There is also a Western University (dedicated to Sverdlov) attended by students from some of the Western European Nations, especially the Balkans.

The Eastern University is housed at Strastnaya Square No. 3, which is the building of the former college of Shaniavin, the poet, was educated. Not far away is the beginning of Tverskoy Boulevard, which leads to Herzen Street, is the poet Pushkin's monument, erected in 1880 from Opekushin's design.

After having lunch with the students, who improve on the cafeteria style of eating, by carrying away their dishes as well as getting their food. I was taken on a visit thru excellent libraries, reading rooms, class rooms and study rooms.

Cecil Rhodes, one of the mightiest of Great Britain's early capitalists, established his Rhodes Scholarships at Oxford University, England, to bring together carefully selected students from capitalist lands, to appreciate the glory of British imperialism.

Here at this Eastern University are students from all the lands of Asia, and some from Africa, Europe and even the United States, who are learning how and why to struggle against world imperialism.

LETTER TO WOLL FROM BEN GOLD ON PICKET LINE

has been arrested and charged with assaulting members of the New York Joint Board.

"It is well known that these gangsters do not render their nefarious services as a gratuity. They are well paid.

"The American labor movement and the public at large are entitled to know who is behind these gangsters. What explanation is there for the fact that your counsel are consistently appearing for assailants of the Joint Board members? Who furnishes the bail bonds for these thugs? Who pays the premiums for these bonds? We imagine that the officials to whom you are writing would be interested in the answers to these questions.

"You gentlemen claim to represent the fur workers. We challenge this assertion. We have repeatedly urged upon you to hold a referendum of all New York fur workers to determine whether you are the recognized representatives, or whether the elected officers of the Joint Board are such. You have failed to head this request. Why? We now renew this challenge.

The Red Herring.

"You have proclaimed that the issue is one of Communism versus Americanism. We declare that this is not the issue at all, and that you have deliberately injected this issue in order to conceal the arbitrary, unconstitutional, and Fascist methods that you are employing against the New York fur workers. No camouflage emanating from you can conceal the fact that the fur workers are striking because the Associated Fur Manufacturers have broken the contract that they signed with the representatives of the New York Joint Board on June 11, 1926; and because the Associated Fur Manufacturers seek to force upon the fur workers' representatives whom the fur workers have time and again repudiated.

"Is it Americanism to make gangster attacks upon innocent fur workers? You have persistently refused to have the recognized leaders of the fur workers determined by a fair and impartial referendum. Is that the kind of Americanism you are fighting for? You have expelled members and organizations from their trade union, in violation of the constitution. Is this your Americanism? Is your opposition to the wishes of almost the entire rank and file of the fur workers, Americanism?

"Do you expect the American labor movement, or the public officials of this community to be influenced by such smoke-screen issues? The time has come when facts, as opposed to empty words, will assert themselves.

With the Enemies of Labor.

"You are making a request from the police authorities to deprive the fur workers of the right to picket. Never in the history of the American Federation of Labor has an official of the Federation placed himself openly on the side of the enemies of labor, who seek to deprive the workers of their right to strike and picket, as weapons for the betterment of their conditions. Are we to understand that as an official of the American Federation of Labor, you are opposed to granting the workers the right to strike and picket?

"Your threat of 'mass protection' is clearly an attempt to intimidate the police authorities and to terrorize the citizens of New York by threats of mass terror. The American labor movement, as well as the public at large, will know whom to hold responsible for the outrages that are being committed in the fur market, against the New York fur workers. Surely you and your colleagues on the American Federation of Labor Furriers' Reorganization Committee will not escape such responsibility."

Big Line Tomorrow.

The Joint Board calls upon all furriers to be on the picket line tomorrow morning as an answer to the gangster threat of Matthew Woll.

This morning the picketr will wear arm bands with the following slogan: "Lindbergh's Father was Labor's Friend. The Furriere Fight for Labor!"
